Nonetheless, when I read in your comments on my article that doubts as to the wisdom of creating the board, etc., etc., "did not arise during the first year of the enterprise," I must note a modest exception. In the Watchman-Examiner of June 3, 1920, I published an article which I know was widely read and commented on. In order to be perfectly fair I sent this protest in manuscript, before showing it to others, to the chairman of the committee which devised the Board of Promotion. I suggested that he hand the manuscript over to the editor of THE BAPTIST to be published and answered if it seemed best. He did not think best. The article, returned to me with a long and most courteous letter, was then sent by me to the Watchman-Examiner, in whose columns it appeared.

I gave to my humble protest the title, "A Bewildered Baptist," and in it I deplored the fact that "Overnight, almost, we who have held loyally to our democratic position as Baptists, find ourselves swept under a highly centralized form of church government. We are informed, with emphasis, that only thus can the great ends now in view be attained."

Directly echoing this last named argument of the creators of the Board of Promotion, I referred in my article of May 4 just past to the transformation of our church government "from a democracy to an oligarchy," as made in order to further the purpose of raising the $100,000,000. Your editorial makes me appear to say that "the whole plan was a part of an experiment to further the purpose of transforming the church government of the Baptists from a democracy to an oligarchy."

"An ill-favored thing, sir," this, and if I may so misquote Shakespeare, not "mine own."

God Send Us Men

GOD send us men whose claim 'twill be
Not to defend some ancient creed,
But to live out the laws of Christ
In every thought, and word and deed.

God send us men alert and quick
His lofty precepts to translate Until the laws of Christ become
The laws and habits of the state.

God send us men of steadfast will,
Patient, courageous, strong and true;
With vision clear and mind equipped,
His will to learn, his work to do.

God send us men with hearts ablaze,
All truth to love, all wrong to hate.
These are the patriots nations need,
These are the bulwarks of the state.

Southern Baptists in Annual Meeting

Cash receipts for the year, $10,010,000. More than 33,000 baptisms. Campaign extended to December, 1924. Resolve to cooperate largely in Baptist World Alliance, and turn down recommendation of Columbia Conference.

By FRANK E. BURKHALTER

WHILE there were few mountain top experiences, such as have marked many previous sessions of the body, in the sixty-sixth annual session of the Southern Baptist Convention at Jacksonville, Fla., which has just adjourned, there were a number of gratifying features about the meeting of which our brethren of the North will be glad to learn.

First, the reports of the past year in practically every department of the organized work of Southern Baptists were exceptionally gratifying. From the foreign fields the Foreign Mission Board was able to report by far the greatest accomplishments in its history in the matter of accessions to the churches, gains in the Sunday schools, increase in the number of mission schools, hospitals and the like, and in contributions from the native churches, the last named item reaching nearly $500,000.

Good Reports

The Home Mission Board reported over 33,000 baptisms during the year and practically double that number of accessions to the churches, and marked advances in every department of its work, despite the handicap it has labored under in the matter of its heavy debt. But the debt was not as heavy as it was feared it might be, though with obligations to the banks and otherwise in the form of borrowed funds amounting to $558,000, and unpaid obligations to churches for church buildings amounting to $317,000, the Home Board has a total indebtedness of $875,000. If the contributions return to the mark they attained before the economic depression set in this debt can be paid without seriously crippling the board in its general work. It is a matter of gratification that the Home Board is the only convention agency that reported a debt.

Receipts of $1,289,489 were reported for the year by the Sunday-school board, while the business of the institution has grown to where a new four-story building is to be erected immediately to take care of the shipping department, and it is proposed to erect an adjoining building to this new structure that will be leased to the board's printers and which can ultimately be taken over by the board if this is found to be desirable. In every department of its many-sided work of training in the Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. work marked gains were reported, the report showing 10,829 unions with a membership of 334,258, as well as 21,201 Sunday schools with an enrolment of 2,201,345, or a gain of 234,735 for the year, and 28,265 cooperating churches, with 241,462 baptisms, bringing the present membership to 3,284,258.

Good gains in many directions were reported by the other agencies, the Laymen's Missionary Movement showing that 250,000 titheers had been enrolled in the campaign for a half million, which campaign will be continued, while the Woman's Missionary Union, an auxiliary which held separate sessions, reported cash collections for the year in excess of $3,250,000, and large gains in every other department of its work.

The second distinctive feature of the convention was the absence of the destructive critical spirit that has manifested itself in many places, both South and North in recent months, and which it was feared by many might hamper the work of the convention this year. Many prayers were offered in the churches in advance of the meeting that harmony and unity might prevail, there was much praying during the sessions, and the prayers were answered.

Last year when the convention assembled at Chattanooga without the presence of its retiring president, that intrepid leader, J. B. Gambrell, sent from his sick bed in Dallas this characteristic message, "Tell the brethren to do right and go forward." That message has been followed during the year and the Jacksonville session was marked by the forward look, which may be termed its third strong characteristic.

This was manifested on several occasions. The forward note was sounded by President E. Y. Mullins, re-elected for another term, in his presidential address when he interpreted Christ's message to Southern Baptists today as being embodied in the following four calls: (1) "You are called to complete the greatest religious reform movement of the centuries, the Protestant Reformation"; (2) "You are called to reinforce the most remarkable spiritual movement in Modern Europe"; (3) "You are called to meet the greatest emergency in the political life of mankind by supplying the spiritual means for the world's renewal"; (4) "You are called to fulfil your historic mission and complete your glorious task."

The forward note was sounded again on the matter of the completion of the $75,000,000 campaign in connection with the report of the Conservation Commission. Cash collections for the past year on the campaign were $10,010,000 bringing the total cash collections so far to $35,437,409.77, as reported by Chairman L. R. Scarborough, and when Dr. George W. Truett, speaking to the report, called upon the big audience to indicate its re-dedication to the task of completing the campaign every one of the more than 4,000 messengers stood. The time limit for the completion of the campaign was extended from May 1, 1924, to December, 1924.

The Forward Spirit

Another evidence of the forward spirit was in the decision to establish in the near future in New Orleans a great general and research southwide Baptist hospital, through the Home Mission Board. This matter was first approved at the Washington session in 1920, but there were many delays on the part of the citizens of New Orleans in providing the site which the board selected and the negotiations were called off by the board in the summer of 1921. Since that time a group of 759 citizens has purchased the site, two blocks of ground in one of the best residence sections of New Orleans, and after the most memorable debate in the convention in years, the convention ordered the Home Board to accept the site now proffered, and begin actual operations not later than two years after the conveyance of the site, and sooner if its finances will permit. The missionary opportunity offered in that great Latin city, where Baptists are multiplying rapidly, was the winning argument in behalf of the proposition to establish a great hospital there.

Still another evidence of the forward look of the convention was indicated in the decision to cooperate more largely hereafter in the work of the Baptist World Alliance and the efforts of that body to bring about a fuller cooperation of the Baptist groups of the world in a world-wide Baptist program of evangelism. The resolution expressed the hope that a great number of Southern Baptists would attend the meeting of the Alliance in Stockholm in the summer of 1923 and President Mullins was designated as chairman of the delegation.

The convention declined to adopt the suggestion from the Columbia Conference looking to the appointment of a standing committee on fraternal relations with the Northern Baptist Convention and the naming of a committee of nine to cooperate with a like committee from the Northern Convention in framing a new Baptist confession of faith. The report of the committee named to consider the matter, and which was adopted, called attention to the fact that the most fraternal relations already exist between the two conventions, making the first committee unnecessary, and expressed the belief that there is no urgent need for the setting forth of a new statement of Baptist belief at this time. Another evidence of the fraternity of spirit the Southern Convention holds toward the Northern Convention was seen in the naming of a delegation of

Motherhood

*I SEE them come crowding, crowding,
Children of want and pain,
Dark sorrow their eyes enshrouding,
Where joy's touch should have lain.*

*They stand in silence beseeching,
Gaunt faces lifted up,
And wan little hands outreaching
For love's forbidden cup.*

*Their hearts are restless with yearning,
The hearts of my own are stilled,
Their lips are parched and burning,
The cups of my own are filled!*

*I cry in love unsatisfied
For these without the fold,
My mother's arms are open wide
These weary ones to hold.*

*What though my arms are open wide,
Only mine own lie near,
Without still stand those long denied,
Compassed in want and fear.*

*Bowed with the crown of motherhood,
I seek that Shepherd of old;
"How can mine own receive the good
With some left out of the fold?"*

nearly twenty prominent members as fraternal messengers to the Northern Convention at Indianapolis. President Mullins will head this delegation also, and Dr. George W. Truett, another member, is booked to preach before the convention on Sunday night.

For the first time the convention named women on its general boards and executive committee, while a number of women were named on committee assignments. Three of the general boards will have two local women on them this year and the other two will have three women each. Only local women were named in each instance. There is little probability that the women will soon come to figure so very largely in the official life of the convention by reason of the fact that the Woman's Missionary Union, representing the organized women of the local churches, and itself an auxiliary of the convention holds its annual sessions simultaneously with the convention.

The convention deferred for a year any definite action on the matter of establishing an additional theological seminary and a southwide university, referring each of these questions to a large and representative committee for fuller study of all the issues involved for a year. A memorial was presented from the Baptist State Convention of Georgia, asking that Mercer University at Macon, be taken over by the Southern Baptist Convention and employed as the nucleus for both the new seminary and the proposed university. The Georgia Convention proposed to deed to the Southern body the total assets of Mercer University, which it is estimated will be $2,500,000 by the end of the $75,000,000 campaign, and supplement those resources with $2,500,000 additional, provided the Southern Convention will duplicate this last named amount for the combined seminary and university within a given period.

The Foreign Mission Board held a special session during the convention and named forty-eight choice young men and women to various stations on the foreign fields, the session being held at this time so as to permit Secretary J. F. Love to leave within a few days for a tour of the board's several fields in Brazil, Argentina, Chile and Uruguay.

Next year's session of the convention goes to Kansas City and it is the hope of the Southern Baptist brotherhood that many of the Northern brethren will avail themselves of that opportunity to attend a session of this body.

Dr. Frederick Agar, who attended this year's convention as a special fraternal messenger from the Northern Convention, was cordially received and was heard with interest and profit in several addresses.

Southern Baptists are praying earnestly that the presence and power of the Holy Spirit for which they prayed in connection with their own convention will likewise be felt at the approaching session of the Northern Convention.

Can These Pastors Be Creedalized?

By ALVAH E. KNAPP

IN the month of February the pastors of the Saratoga Baptist Association of New York met at Amsterdam and organized a ministerial association, or conference. Meetings are to be held bi-monthly. As a basis for the April program Rev. Alvah E. Knapp, of Amsterdam, was requested to prepare a questionnaire covering the grounds of controversy within the denomination and submit same to all members of the conference. The answers to the list of questions were reported to the conference at its meeting in Ballston Spa, April 24. The program aroused so much interest that the conference requested the compiler of the questionnaire to communicate the results to the denominational papers. Not all the members of the conference filled out the questionnaire, some of them stating their views briefly in a general way; but the returns were such that it was felt that the general outcome would not have been changed very much had all returned their questionnaires.

Broadly speaking, the questionnaire dealt with such subjects as the inspiration of the Scriptures and the rights of the church in the matter of Biblical criticism; the supernatural in the New Testament and the deity of Jesus Christ; the program of the church under the terms of the Great Commission, including the problem of Christian education in mission lands; a doctrinal basis for denominational control; millenarianism; confessions of faith; the merits and demerits of the "Fundamentalist" crusade and the "way to harmony and progress."

Results were as follows: Only two believe in the literal, verbal inspiration of the Scriptures, and one of them with qualifications. All agreed that the writers of the Scriptures were inspired as men are inspired today, although four men added "but more." No one would insist upon the "infallibility" and "inerrancy" of the Scriptures, but all would be satisfied with the simple statement in 2 Timothy 3:16. One stipulated that the A. V. be followed. A two-to-one vote declared that the Scriptures do not anywhere define their own inspiration or declare themselves "inerrant" or "infallible." All agreed that the church of today is as fully privileged as the church ever was, by the use of the historical and scientific method, to form its own opinion as to the authenticity and authority of the Scriptures or any part of them, although one questioned the wisdom of departing from early findings. All agreed that it is not wise to make a theory of inspiration a test of orthodoxy. One, however, seemed a bit undecided. All expressed their belief in the virgin birth of Jesus, and consequently in his true deity; in the historicity of the "miracles" recorded in the New Testament, and in the physical resurrection of Jesus Christ, although one was a trifle doubtful on the last point. With one wavering reservation, the brethren believe that the Great Commission contemplates the establishing, through the church, of a real Christian civilization in all nations, while only two questioned in any way the sufficiency of the church, in cooperation with the present Christ, for this task. All are convinced that no illiterate people can ever be permanently evangelized without also being educated. They seem to think that education must be a means of evangelization. There was unanimous endorsement of our present system of industrial missions. As to the wisdom of electing individuals to places of denominational leadership on the basis of their doctrinal views, no two answers were alike. Perhaps it would be fair to say that the answers would seem to suggest that men of character and ability who are in good standing in the Baptist fellowship will satisfy the brethren of this section. Answers to the question as to millennial views were enlightening. One was a straight "Pre," and another was a straight "Post." All the others strayed off. One was "Pro, if any." Another, "Post, if any." Another believes in the "progressive coming." One said that he was "a Pre, but not with some others." Another was "at sea" on the subject. Another was a non-millennialist. Not a chance to "start anything" along this line in this association. If this is an indication of the feeling throughout the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention, any millennial bomb cast into our denominational ranks will prove a "dud."

As to confessions of faith as tests of denominational loyalty or regularity, the questionnaire was two to one against them, although there was no objection to a merely historical statement in general terms. The attitude toward the "Fundamentalist" crusade is worth noting somewhat in detail. The majority thought it might be justifiable in so far as it was a protest against rationalism and Unitarianism. One thought it without justification; another, that it was justified by the showing in the Goodchild report; another that it has declarational value; another, that it is "in line with truth." The grounds on which some of the men object to the movement are interesting. One claims that it does not really concern itself with fundamentals, and that it is dictatorial; another thinks that it unduly emphasizes the second coming; two complain of its spirit of intolerance; while one feels that it magnifies differences, misrepresents conditions and is generally disruptive in spirit and tendency. During the discussion the statement that in this crusade there has been "much cry and little wool" met with general approval. Little sympathy was expressed for the "glittering generalities" in which charges have been brought against our educational institutions and denominational policies. As to the way out of our difficulties, while many suggestions were made, it seems to be the consensus of opinion that we should quit all this squabbling and settle down again to the work of the church, using the best wisdom we can bring to bear on the problems.

The men were asked to state whether they were Fundamentalists, Progressives, Conservatives, or anything else that might suit them better. All the talk about majorities on the one side or the other receives a jolt in this questionnaire. Here are some of the answers: "A Fundamentalist" (just one); "A progressive Baptist holding fundamentals"; "A Fundamentalist as opposed to liberalism and rationalism"; "A progressive Fundamentalist with spiritual vision"; "A Baptist"; "an Independent." Some could not classify. What basis is here for talk of majorities? After this showing the brethren seemed to feel that such classifications within the denomination are more imaginary than real and that the Baptist denomination is not as badly divided as some zealous gentlemen would have us suppose.

THE MICHIGAN CONVENTION AND THE CONFESSION OF FAITH

The Michigan Convention went on record by the adoption of a resolution at its ad interim session held at Jackson, May 16, as being opposed to the adoption of a confession of faith by the Northern Convention. The writer stood with the minority who opposed this action. Since the primary purpose of this resolution is to influence the sentiment of the delegates who will gather at the Indianapolis Convention it is reasonable that the minority as well as the majority shall be heard.

It is conceded by the minority that the debate was, for the most part, both courteous and fair and that the result was a true expression of the convictions of the delegates present. The principal speaker for, and as it seems the author of the resolution, was Dr. A. W. Wishart of Grand Rapids. He was supported by Pastors Hartley of Saginaw, Powell of Kalamazoo, Verden of Eaton Rapids, and others. Those who spoke against the resolution were Pastors Bercoe of Flint, Vine of Albion and Heaton of Lansing. When the vote was taken on the adoption of the resolution the total number of persons voting was 173 of whom 150 voted affirmatively and twenty-three negatively.

It is not conceded, however, that this vote represents the true sentiment of the Baptists of Michigan. There are more than 50,000 Baptist people in this state. More than 49,800 were not heard from. If, out of the 173 delegates who did vote, there were two from each church represented, then the vote represents eighty-six churches. There are more than 400 Baptist churches in Michigan and, therefore, more than 314 churches were not heard from.

Furthermore, the circumstances were such that these delegates could not possibly represent the Baptist constituency of Michigan. The convention was in session for one afternoon and evening only and for that reason neither a large attendance could be expected nor could any delegates, unless moved by some unusual necessity, be expected to come from any considerable distance. A provincial convention was unavoidable.

Some of us who favored the adoption of a confession of faith had good reason to believe that all the factions of the convention were committed to the same position. On January 6 a conference of about twenty men called by General Director Hudson met at Lansing. These twenty men represented about equally the two sides of our denominational controversy. At this conference it was agreed unanimously that the adoption of the Des Moines Confession should be recommended to the Michigan Convention. Some of the men on May 16, by their voice and vote, openly violated the pledge which they made by their vote on January 6. It is safe to say that after the Lansing conference no Michigan Baptist who favored the adoption of a confession of faith had the slightest suspicion that exactly the opposite course to the one agreed upon at Lansing would be taken at Jackson.

The resolution of the Michigan Baptist Convention which will be heard of at Indianapolis is the expression of the sentiments of a small portion of the Baptists of Michigan.

THAT NEW BY-LAW

I read in the issue of May 13 that there are to be some new recommendations on the by-laws. I wish to call attention to the first article in regard to whom shall be admitted to the convention as delegates. When I read it I wondered if Christ were to appear in person at the convention if he would be asked if he had paid his dues.

I also wondered if the Northern Baptist Convention was coming to be a money convention or is it for the uplifting of Christianity and the glory of God.

It seems to me that any church should be entitled to at least one delegate even if that church had not paid to the different departments of the work and that the Northern Baptist Convention should be a missionary convention to help every one.

I believe in helping all the departments of the convention and I belong to a church that is helping regularly.

I wish that every delegate that goes to the convention would give that article his careful study and pray over it before he votes on it.

"CONCERNING CONFESSIONS OF FAITH"

In the Watchman-Examiner of May 11 (p. 582), is an editorial with the above title. As a Baptist by conviction and by an inheritance of a century and a half, I wish to enter an emphatic protest against any confession of faith to be formally adopted by the Northern and the Southern Conventions as "a doctrinal standard about which our Baptist people might rally."

In the same issue of the paper (p. 590), in a scholarly article, Dr. E. B. Pollard traces historically the various confessions of faith promulgated by Baptists. He shows that we Baptists "have always been deeply averse to anything that smacked of official pronouncement." Neither the Philadelphia nor the New Haven "confession" was ever "formally adopted nor issued by any general Baptist body."

The offering of any confession of faith at Indianapolis, to be used as "a doctrinal standard about which our Baptist people might rally," means inevitable strife and consequent enmity, and the probable disruption of our Baptist people, with lawsuits over control of the funds—a fine spectacle indeed for the enemies of Christianity! What a calamity to our foreign missions!

May I call attention to two New Testament confessions of faith which may well be our models?

(1). Acts 8, 35 ff. "Then Philip opened his mouth and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way they came to a certain water and the Eunuch said, See here is water. What doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Whereupon Philip immediately baptized him.

(2). Acts 16, 30 ff. "And [the jailer] brought them [Paul and Silas] out and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," whereupon he was "straightway baptized."

It is a strange phenomenon, as recently noted in The Continent, a Presbyterian paper, that it is "harder to get into a church than into the kingdom of God," due to the theological fences surrounding our churches.

We Baptists must not add another fence by adopting any confession of faith to be used inevitably and officially as a club to compel uniformity of belief.

FELLOWSHIP IS OF THE HEART

The fact that I am young and inexperienced in realm of theological discussion has caused me to be wary of voicing my convictions in a controversy that apparently baffles the minds of the old and learned.

Nevertheless since I have, if it be God's will, many years to give to the work of our Lord, I am vitally interested in the welfare of the denomination in and through which I am to serve him.

Certain individuals have tried and are trying to make the basis of fellowship in the Baptist denomination a definite, permanent, and armor-plated creedal statement. The idea seems to be that when folks think alike they get real chummy. Once, another fellow and I thought a certain young lady was just about right. He and I never did get chummy.

Oneness of thought is not, blessed though it may be, the prime essential of fellowship. There can never be fellowship where only the intellects are in accord. Luke, in writing of the first fellowship of Christians does not tell us that the multitude of them that believed were of one mind and of one opinion. Where then is fellowship found? Luke tells us truly: "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." For the early Pentecost, Holy Spirit Christians, fellowship was basically a matter of the heart. It may have been that the whole multitude had the same opinions and believed the same identical things concerning the Saviour—his birth, work, death, and resurrection. If that were so, it were well, but the fellowship came because they were of one heart and soul. Their love for the Saviour was of the heart, their hope sprang from the soul, and their joy in the knowledge of their redemption welled up from the depths of their beings.

It appears to me that fellowship, which will weld the Baptists into a mighty working force for our God must be ever a matter of the heart. Baptists can never hope to be of one mind and one opinion, but they can be of one heart and of one soul. The lifting of Jesus into the light will draw up all in fellowship unto him. Let men have their creeds, let them hold fast to their systems of theology, God so made them. My question to them is, "Does Jesus rule your heart?" If they can truly answer, "Yes," then glorious may be the fellowship.

May we all go to Indianapolis seeking oneness of heart and of soul, and a glorious, industrious, and wonder-working fellowship will be ours.

SOME CHARACTERISTICS OF REAL BAPTISTS

It is a good time to remind ourselves that not all is Baptist that calls itself such. They are a simple folk. There is a willingness to trust a human soul with the New Testament to find God. This high confidence in the inherent capacity of the human soul and the reality and vindication of truth has made Baptists very hesitant about dependence upon any kind of props or interpretations of truth for them by another.

This simplicity has kept them consistently from any authoritative man-made creed. We hear much today about the "New Hampshire Confession." It appeared in New England in 1833 and was adopted by many churches but never by any national body. One is reminded of a contrast in that within the past year a certain statement of faith went out to every church in the Northern Baptist Convention with the advice that it be adopted. They have never thought of putting blinders on scholarship. In the charter of Brown University (1764) there are specifications that teaching shall "respect the sciences" and "into this liberal and catholic institution shall never be admitted any religious tests but on the contrary all the members thereof shall forever enjoy full, free, absolute, uninterrupted liberty of conscience." How unlike sounds the demand of a man today calling himself a Baptist in "Put the evolutionist out!"

Their weakness and strength have been close together. Their simplicity has made them a victim of many self-imposed leaders who knew how to use inherited phrases well. Their trust in the inherent capacity of the human soul has made them ill too often the thoughtless followers of those who cry out against the dangers of education. Their unlimited confidence in the authority of the local church has made them wary of a centralization which efficiency demands and cunning leaders have at times taken advantage of this Baptist psychology.

The New Testament as ultimate standard accepted by all Baptists is overworked and made to be a text-book on geology, astronomy and biology rather than the message of God concerning life and destiny. And the pity is that those who talk most about loyalty to the faith have so departed from it as to accuse others of unbelief because they do not see fit to use the Bible as a textbook for science.

If we are to be real Baptists we shall neither fool ourselves nor let any other person fool us.

CLARENCE W. KEMPER.

WHAT SHALL WE DECLARE?

If a declaration is to be made let us declare the authority of the Son of God. The world cares little for what we believe. It listens for what we know. Have we a gospel? If we are ready to make a statement that shall have religious authority and carry conviction to the heart of a generation that cares little for dogma but will give its life for somebody it can trust then now is our chance.

If we know whom we have believed we have an opportunity to broadcast our knowledge such as has rarely come to any people. Who among us, "singly or with others," will tamper with such an opportunity by raising questions over the dogmatic form of our message? If we are not merely setting a standard by which to test each other but are really serious about challenging men to acknowledge the authority and saving power of Jesus Christ let us issue a summons but let us not attempt to put forth a creed. We cannot ourselves agree upon a creed. The world has no patience for creeds. But if we are honestly trying to obey Jesus then none better than we can challenge our time with a statement of the immediate authority of the Man of Galilee over every human thing.

If there is any one distinctive value in our history which above others we may transmit to all the world it is the immediacy of religious responsibility. No priest, no sacrament, not even a church or a book but Christ, to whom every man and institution is immediately answerable. Do we know that? It has cost us the blood of our fathers to learn it. If we declare let us declare one brief thing which the people will read in the headlines. Let it be our most precious assurance and the thing that guarantees democracy in the world. If we say anything let us say something about which all men may gather as about a royal standard and let our words be a battle, a challenge, a ringing call, setting forth Christ as King, as dying and behold he lives.

What shall the headlines be? "Baptists Agreed on One Fundamental. Hold to Authority of Christ" or "Largest Church in America Makes Pronouncement. Declares Christ King Over All Human Relations." Or shall they be something like these: "Fighting Baptists Propose Two Creeds," "Baptists at Odds About Bible," "Strong Element in Baptist Convention Hits at Modern Views"? Few of us care what the papers say about us, so far as we ourselves are concerned. But it is the papers that the people outside the churches read, the people for whom Christ died and for whom the church exists. How shall we go before the people?

THE FAITH OF A LIBERAL

Let us not have any misunderstanding about the Fundamentalists. Loyal Baptists are not Fundamentalists; they are Foundationists. Their faith rests on Christ, for other foundation can no man lay.

These Fundamentalists are not building upon Christ but upon Constantine. They follow not the disciples of Christ, but the church fathers of the fourth century. Constantine's famous council substituted for loyalty to Christ, loyalty to a church; and for the living of a Christlike life, the giving of an intellectual assent to a man-made creed.

We Foundationists stand for loyalty to the Master, loyalty to "the faith of the Son of God."

What were the Master's tests of discipleship? The acceptance of a theory of creation? Of the virgin birth? Of the verbal inspiration of the scriptures? Of a theory of the atonement? Of any theory of miracles or of the resurrection? Of the second advent? No; he never so much as mentioned some of these points of controversy, and the others were not in existence.

His tests of discipleship were faith in God, and in himself as God's representative, love of God and of all mankind, and loyalty to himself and to the will of God as expressed in the service of others under the leadership of the Holy Spirit. Such faith, love and loyalty sufficed his followers for three hundred years, and they conquered the Roman empire. Then the church was saddled with a creed and the dark ages ensued, when, in the name of Christ, heresy hunters, armed with a creed, harried, imprisoned, tortured and murdered honest men and women for a thousand years, and made the church the most anti-Christian institution in all history.

Genuine Christians will stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ once made them free and will not be entangled again with the yoke of bondage. They will continue to be led by the Spirit of God, who will lead us at last into all truth, when we shall be free indeed.

There can be no warfare between a true religion and a true science. The house of truth is not divided against itself, nor does it need at the present time such buttressing and bracing with straws as these nervous Fundamentalists are offering us.

"As for truth it flourisheth and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth forevermore."

The Foreigner's Apology

By T. A. DALY

W'AT for you call me "Dago Man,"
An' make so bad a face?
Ees no room for Eetalian
Een deesa bigga place?
I suppose you are more better dan Da Dago man could be.
But pleessa, Meester 'Merican,
I ask you wait an' see.
How long you leev'e een deesa land?
Eh, thirta-seven year?
Ees onlu seexa mont', my frand,
Seence I am comin' here.
I wish yo geeve me time for try
An' see w'at I can do.
So mebbe I gon' be, bimeby,
So good a man like you.
Baycause I am so strong, I guess
I gon' do pretty wel,
So long I stand to beezaness,
An' jus' bayhave mysal'.
My leeta childron, too, ees strong—
Eh? Yo no gotta none?
Yo married, Meester? Eh? How long?
Twelve year an' no got wan?
O! I am sad for yo, my frand,— Eh! Why yo laugh at me?
Excuse, I do not ondrastand;
I am so strange, yo see.
My "keeds ees no good breed," yo say?
Ah, wal, ess mebbe not,
But dey weel be more good some' day
Dan dose yo don'ta got;
An' dey be strong 'Merican,
More strong dan yo are, too.
Ees notta many Dago man
So skeeny lika you.
O! please, my friend, no gotta mad!
Shak' han' bayfore yo go.
Excusa me! I am so sad
For speakin' to you so.

Save Them for the Nation

CHRISTIAN, dost thou see them,
Coming to our shores;
Men from every nation,
Knocking at our doors?
Christian, up and meet them,
Meet them ere they're lost—
Save them for the nation,
Save them by the cross.

Christian, dost thou know them;
Brothers, by his grace;
Clothed in dark-skinned bodies;
Of another race?

Christian, up and save them;
Save them, ere they're lost;
Save them for the nation;
Save them by the cross.

Christian, dost thou hear them;
Children in the night;
Crying for their birthright;
Tolling, day and night?
Christian, up and save them;
At whatever cost,
Save them for the nation;
Save them by the cross.

Christian, dost thou feel them;
Souls weighed down by sin;
Living in the darkness;
Where no light comes in?
Christian, up and save them;
Save them ere they're lost;
Save them for the nation;
Save them by the cross.

Little Journeys Around New York

NEW YORK is full of aliens, Morocco-ans and Australians,
Brazilians and Sicilians and the swarthy
Hindustans—
Infested with Peruvians, Phoenicians and Vesuvians,
Algerians and Syrians and many other clans.
New York is full of Russians—
Full of Prussians—
Full of Swedes—Bavarians, Hungarians,
And other motley breeds,
The populace of every place from Kankakee to Cork:
New York is full of everything but people
from New York!

New York has its Bulgarians, its Polish and Ontarians,
Parisians and Silesians and the folk of Sunny Spain.
New York has its Roumanians as well as Lithuanians.
New Yorkers come from China, Carolina,
Greece and Maine.
New York is full of Spartans—
Full of Tartans—
Full of Greeks—Croations
And Dalmatians,
And a thousand other streaks.
To find a real New Yorker is a problem tough as pork:
New York is full of everything but people
from New York!

Plain American

JUST today we chanced to meet,
Down upon the busy street,
And I wondered whence he came,
What was once his nation's name.
So I asked him, "Tell me true,
Are you a Pole, or Russian Jew,
English, Irish, German, Prussian,
French, Italian, Scotch, or Russian,
Belgian, Spanish, Swiss, Moravian,
Dutch, or Greek, or Scandinavian?"
Thus he gave me his reply
As he raised his head on high:
"What I was is naught to me,
In this land of liberty,
In my soul, as man to man,
I am just American!"

I Am the Immigrant

I AM the immigrant.
I looked toward the United States with eyes kindled by the fire of ambition and heart quickened with new-born hope.
I approached its gates with great expectation.
I have shouldered my burden as the American man-of-all work.
I contribute eighty-five per cent of all the labor in the slaughtering and meat-packing industries.
I do seven-tenths of the bituminous coal mining.
I do seventy-eight per cent of all the work in the woolen mills.
I contribute nine-tenths of all the labor in the cotton mills.
I make nineteen-twentieths of all the clothing.
I manufacture more than half the shoes.
I build four-fifths of all the furniture.
I make half of the collars, cuffs and shirts.
I turn out four-fifths of all the leather. I make half the gloves.
I refine nearly nineteen-twentieths of the sugar.
And yet, I am the great American problem.
When I pour out my blood on your altar of labor, and lay down my life as a sacrifice to your god of toil, men make no more comment than at the fall of a sparrow.
But my brawn is woven into the warp and woof of the fabric of your national being.
My children shall be your children and your land shall be my land because my sweat and my blood will cement the foundations of the America of to-morrow.
If I can be fused into the body politic, the melting pot will have stood the supreme test. —FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

America Calls

By MRS. VIRGIL B. SEASE

About every tenth American has a black skin.

Many think that the Indians are a vanishing race. There are 350,000 red men today; 90,000 Catholic, 60,000 evangelical Christians, 130,000 entirely outside the fold of Christ, 60,000 in tribes where Jesus Christ has never been proclaimed!

Every year the Latin-American problem is more and more attracting the attention of thoughtful Christians. About 1,500,000 Spanish-speaking people live under the stars and stripes.

Reservedly speaking, there are 100,000 Japanese in this country. There is a Buddhist temple in every large city on the Pacific Coast.

In New York City, there are more Jews than in Jerusalem; more Italians than in Rome.

Consider that the Mormon church (Church of the Latter Day Saints) is 450,000 strong.

Attention! Do you know that there are many Mohammedans in America? There is a colony of them at Johnstown, Pa., which tries to live as true followers of Mohammed.

Christians, do you realize the varied population we have to deal with in Alaska: Eskimos, Indians and Whites?

All young American Christians should be interested in carrying the gospel to the islands: Hawaiian, Philippine, Porto Rico, Cuba.

Listen to this! An atheist in Chicago recently contributed $17,000 to begin a fund with which to propagate atheism.

Listen again! The daughter of a Presbyterian minister is now priestess in a temple in Chicago erected for the worship of the sun-god Krishna.

Statistics give almost 10,000 towns in our Northwest with population ranging from 300 to 1,000 each, with no church, no Sunday School, no Christian organization.

Giving and Withholding

THERE is a sea which day by day
Receives the rippling rills
And streams which flow from the wells of God

Or spring from cedared hills.
But what it thus receives it gives
With glad, unsparing hand;
And a stream more wide with a deeper tide,

Pours out to a lower land.
But does it lose by giving? Nay:
Its shores new beauty see—
The life and health and bounteous wealth Of Galilee!

There is a sea which day by day
Receives a fuller tide,

But all its store it keeps, nor gives
To shore nor sea beside.
What gains its grasping greed? Behold
Barrenness round its shore!
Its fruits of lust but apples of dust,

Rotten from rind to core.
Its Jordan waters, turned to brine,
Lie heavy as molten lead,
And its awful name doth ever proclaim
That sea is Dead! —ANONYMOUS.

Uncletim's Clothes

By "PEGGY"

BILL thinks it is the greatest fun in the world to notice how queer my clothes are compared to his very sensible ones, and sometimes the joking is all right, but sometimes I do get so provoked at him for acting so superior.

"I just wish there were something comical about men's clothes," I sighed.

"Comical?" repeated Uncletim, "Why, my dear, they are the most ridiculous things in the world in many ways."

"They are?" I gasped.

"How?" said Bill, in his convince-me-if-you-can voice.

"Buttons, for instance," laughed Uncletim holding up his sleeves. "Now why should I have two buttons on each sleeve, do either of you know? They are no good to me, of course, and for a sensible human being it seems foolish to spend money on anything useless."

The Journey of Lazy Lad

HAVE you heard the tale of Lazy Lad,
Who dearly loved to shirk,
For he "hated" his lessons and "hated"
his tasks,
And he "hated" to have to work?
So he sailed away on a summer day
Over the ocean blue;
Said Lazy Lad, "I will seek till I find
The Land of Nothing-to-do."

* * * *

So Lazy Lad he sailed to the west,
And then to the east sailed he,
And he sailed north and he sailed south
Over many a league of sea;
And many a country fair and bright
And busy came into view,
But never, alas! could he find the coast
Of the Land of Nothing-to-do.

Then Lazy Lad sailed back again,
And a wiser lad was he,
For he said, "I've wandered to every land
That is in the geography;
And in each and all I've found that folks
Are busy the whole year through,
And everybody in every place
Seemed to have something to do.

"So it must be the best way, after all,
And I mean to stay on shore
And learn my lessons and do my tasks
And be Lazy Lad no more.
The busiest folks are the happiest,
And what mother said was true,
For I've found out there is no such place
As the Land of Nothing-to-do."

L. M. MONTGOMERY in St. Nicholas.

"Um," said Bill thoughtfully, "then why do you have those buttons?"

"Because once upon a time gentlemen wore sword belts and gauntlets, and even though these have long since disappeared here are two buttons on my cuff to which gauntlets could be fastened, and on my cutaway coats there are two buttons in back, descended from the great-great-grand-father-coats whose tails had to be buttoned out of the way for fighting! Absurd, isn't it? When I'm such a peaceable banker!"

"That's only one absurdity," said Bill, "it's nothing compared to curls and hair-ribbons and sashes and fans and ruffles and funny hats that girls wear."

"Only, my boy, that a couple of hundred years ago men wore ruffles and hair-ribbons and curls and sashes, too. And as for hats—well, in 1753 there was a hatter in London named John Hetherington who made and wore the first tall hat, what we call in fun a 'stove-pipe hat.' Well, my dears, when Mister Hetherington went awalking down the street in all the glory of that first high silk hat a horse saw him and ran away in fright! So then the owner of the horse sued the hatter; but the judge must have thought it was a gentleman's privilege to be just as ugly and absurd as he pleased, whatever a horse chose to think of it, so the owner of the horse lost his case and every man owned a high silk hat at once!"

"They are funny," I sighed.

"Very," agreed Uncletim; "and did you ever hear why men wear long trousers?"

"No!" cried Bill who is hardly able to wait until he owns his first pair. "There's nothing wrong or funny about them is there?"

"Well, it's this way, Bill. Once upon a time when every man wore knickerbockers there was a king with a deformed knee who looked very awkward in such short trousers because it showed off his deformity. So the royal tailor cut him a pair of long ones; and the first thing any one knew all the men in the realm decided that they wanted long trousers, also. And we've been wearing them ever since!"

"It sounds to me a little like the story of the governor's little daughters who hated their red dresses, but the minute the other girls saw them they teased and teased until they had red dresses, too."

"Yes," said Uncletim, "it is the very same idea. Men aren't so different from women, and sometimes I think women are a little more sensible, when I see the heavy clothes I wear in summer and the stiff starched collars and the long tight sleeves."

Bill laughed. "I can't make fun of Peggy again."

CULTIVATING CONTENTMENT.

Phil. 4:10-20.

"I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want."

Things would be a lot different in this world if every individual who claims kinship with Christ could only learn "the Christian secret of a happy life" as the grand old apostle knew it.

In our ministry to folks, we must deal with the things that are of most interest to them. Certainly our points of contact will have to begin there. These things are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness.

1. Life. What is it? From whom do we get it? What is the aim of it? In the answer to these questions we will find the beginnings of contentment. There is great need for an up-to-date interpretation of life to the young people of this day. The shortest way out is to condemn young people for the many exaggerations and wrong-doings. The old world has been pretty badly shaken up and a lot of business men, church officers and preachers have been caught in the debris. Is it any wonder that young people have gone to excesses? There are thousands of young people who are a sight better than their parents in the matter of spiritual insight and moral idealism. Where is the pastor who has not found the stumbling block to be mother and father, rather than the lads and lassies? Young people of today need our love and sympathy. We must help them to understand what Jesus meant when he said:

"I came that they may have life and may have it abundantly."

2. Liberty. Whether we like it or not, young people are going to have a measure of liberty. Why shouldn't they? Their error lies in that they substitute license for liberty. There can be no real contentment without liberty. Again, our liberty lies in the direction of Christ and his truth. The Great Teacher said:

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Genuine contentment must be based upon a knowledge of the truth, not on what somebody thinks or writes about truth. Young people must be made to realize that they will find their largest liberty in the way of God, which means the way of service. All truth of whatever kind comes from God. The contented young person will be a seeker after truth.

3. Pursuit of Happiness. Young people seek all sorts of amusements for no other reason than that they may be happy. Sometimes in their quest, they find everything else but contentment. A thousand and one things tug at the hearts of young people from day to day. "Come this way" they say and, "we will give you a good time." This is what youth is looking for, and if youth does not find a good time in the church, he will find it outside, many times to his sorrow, but he finds it. Church folks need to remember that.

The individual or institution that gives the young folks a good time will be the individual or institution that will command their loyalty.

Again, it is our business to point our young people to the real source of contentment. Jesus said:

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full."

The highway of contentment is the highway of God, ever onward and upward, conquering, achieving, serving.

San Joaquin Valley B. Y. P. U.

By BARON McLEAN

At a meeting of the San Joaquin Valley Baptist Young People's Union last February 120 "Win One" pledges were signed. The association report of 500 baptisms was at least in part due to the efforts of the young people.

At our April rally over 500 young people listened to Dr. John Snape of Oakland ask "What Do You Know?"

The St. Paul Convention was brought before us. A "Booster" meeting was held May 19 to help send to St. Paul our retiring president, M. L. Askin. After two years as San Joaquin Valley B. Y. P. U. president, Mr. Askin is being sent to St. Paul in his capacity as Northern California B. Y. P. U. president.

Enthusiasm is rising over our summer assembly at Asilomar, July 21-31, at which over 500 Baptist young people of Northern California will join in fellowship. We are looking forward to the appearance of "Jimmy" White, "Gilly" Brink, and "Johnny" Snape and we'll fix them up some when we get there. A little friendly rivalry between San Francisco Bay Association and San Joaquin Valley Association is stirring, each intending to send 150 delegates to the Assembly.

San Joaquin Valley Associational B. Y. P. U. has grown from 600 to 1,100 to 1,700 members in the last two years. 2,200 is our goal by April, 1923. Group institutes will be held in the fall. A valley-wide picnic is scheduled for June 30. The spirit of cooperation is fine in this huge inland irrigated empire of California.

The intermediates of the Fresno First Church have got mixed up with the intermediates of the Berkeley Baptist Church in a contest over their Asilomar delegation sizes. It will blow over after July 21-31.

Colorado's Young People

By L. I. HANSEN

The greatest and finest development among Colorado's young people has been a denominational outlook. There is a determined purpose to adopt the program for young people as outlined by the B. Y. P. U. of A. headquarters and Mr. McGorrell's department in Philadelphia. Everywhere the quiet half-hour, the tithers' league, and life service are receiving attention. Colorado has had but one or two representatives a year at the B. Y. P. U. of A. meetings. This year state president, George Hampton of Boulder, is working hard for a much larger delegation. Persistent distribution to all the societies of the state of all denominational leaflets on young people's work is bearing fruit. Study courses, lecture and reading courses are becoming popular. Colorado's young people are beginning to put into motion active plans not only in their own societies, but also in the general services of the churches to which they belong. Associational rallies like those at Greeley and Monte Vista are becoming important in the creation of enthusiasm for aggressive denominational service.

EATON young people's societies have chosen the letter "P" as the year's helping letter of the alphabet and worked out plans under five watch words: Pep, Praise, Prayer, Pledge, Power. "Socials" and the "Devotional Service" go hand in hand and are attended by large numbers of young people.

LOVELAND: A New Year's meeting was held to make resolutions for the New Year's work. Forty-five young people attended and the day ended in definite decisions. Thus far the interest has kept up. Many young people have become tithers. The B. Y. P. U. is taking a very active part in church life.

PALISADES: New leadership in the church and young people's work has brought on a real revival in the young people's work. The past few weeks the real work has centered around the development of leaders. The young people have the five points which follow as a plan of work: 1. To advertise our meetings through various mediums. 2. To have a diversified program at our weekly devotional meeting. 3. To create an increased spirituality and stimulation in Christian service. 4. To get those young people into our society who have no church home. 5. To bend our efforts in gaining recruits for life service.

CITY PARK: Dr. J. W. Bailey has been giving a lecture-study course on "The Bible—what it is and how we got it," which has doubled attendance and greatly increased interest.

ROCKY FORD: Recently the B. Y. P. U. work has been graded and there are now junior, intermediate and senior societies, all meeting at 6:30 p. m. Sundays, all under competent leadership, and flourishing.

Iowa Association B. Y. P. U. to the Front

By HELEN AULD

The Iowa Association B. Y. P. U. met in its annual spring rally Saturday and Sunday, April 22-23, in First Church, Fort Madison, Iowa.

The Pastors Yell

This rally was the best we have held since the union of the two small associations, Iowa Burlington and Keokuk, into one. The larger societies all came with a good delegation, well organized and with special yells and songs. Our preachers proved themselves full of enthusiasm at the "Pep Service" Saturday evening and helped out with some yells.

We find that we have thirteen organized societies in the association and all but one of those sent in a written report. The smaller societies were well represented and there were a number of delegates from churches where there is no B. Y. P. U. All societies seem to have good, sound Christian leadership, coupled with splendid talent for service.

Rally Slogan

Our slogan, in fact our rally theme, was "A B. Y. P. U. in every church in the association." If not an organized society, at least a few young people in churches where we see no opportunity to organize a B. Y., that will keep in touch with the B. Y. P. U. work.

World Wide Guild work had a place on the program, and we are going to see this work grow in the future.

The officers plan to visit all societies in the association this summer and by fall hope to have the work well organized.

B. Y. P. U. of America Convention

The St. Paul Convention was well advertised and each church should soon have its committee working. A conference of key people was held Sunday afternoon at 4:45. We hope to have fifty from Iowa Association at St. Paul. The president, Brother Arthur L. Petry, urged each society to help send its pastor to the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis and pointed out the need of full representation of the pastors. The Iowa Falls Assembly was boosted also, as well as the state convention at Marshalltown.

We feel that our young people took a great step forward in that they adopted a resolution to the effect that each society appoint a committee of four to report each week at the B. Y. P. U. service on what the denomination is doing in Sunday school, B. Y. P. U., missionary, evangelistic work, using the Baptist Record, THE BAPTIST, and Missions for information.

In Preparation

We find, too, that quite a number of our young people are attending college as follows: Hillsboro, three; two at Des Moines University; Burlington First, five; two student volunteers; Mt. Pleasant, two and one student volunteer this fall; Mediapolis, one this summer probably for Christian service; Danville, three; Fort Madison, three; Fairfield, three, with five volunteers; Keokuk, three and one already in Christian service.

The First Church of Burlington is to entertain the association in the fall. Its delegation had so much pep, it established for themselves a very good "rep."

Brother Kerfoot, superintendent of Fort Madison high school, led in song at Sunday school. He is like a Cadillac car—hard to beat.

Keokuk's Hospitality

From the time we listened to the welcome address of Rev. U. G. Miller, pastor of Fort Madison Church, we were made to feel at home. Another of our association pastors, Rev. Monroe of Fairfield, brought an inspiring message on the theme "Afterward," in which he stated that no one can tell of the results of a B. Y. P. U. in the days to come, but training in youth is followed up in after years and especially is this true of those who have come in touch with the church.

Program Headliners

We felt very happy to have with us our national secretary, Dr. James Asa White, whom many young folks throughout old Iowa have come to know and love. We are confident that the young folks of Iowa Association were all lifted to a higher plane of religious thinking because of the two spirit-filled messages brought to us. Saturday evening he spoke to us on "Our Present Task," in which he said that the raising of the educational standard was the first task before Baptist young people; that the leadership of this country is going to take the direction of the educated folk and God pity us if that education isn't Christian. He spoke, too, of the need of being thoroughly trained, not only in the head, but in the heart as well, or rather spiritualizing education.

Sunday morning we listened to Dr. Cassidy, who brought an able message on "Christ's Challenge for Individual Enlistment," urging the young people to follow Christ in service.

Saturday afternoon, Frederick L. Gilson of Knoxville, Iowa, one of Iowa's life-service volunteers, brought us what was, perhaps, one of the most inspiring messages of the rally, speaking upon "A Big Job, A Big Problem, A Big Answer," bringing out the truth that to young people preparing for a big task, comes a challenge to be perfect conductors that Christ's power may flow through us. His address was a true testimony that he had thoroughly considered the matter of life decision from all viewpoints before laying his life on that altar for Christ.

W. W. G.'s

The remainder of the afternoon was spent in World Wide Guild work, the Evelyn Chapter of the W. W. G. of Fort Madison giving an interesting pageant, "The Two Masters," followed by an address on "The Needs of Our World Wide Guild" by Mrs. Pavlis of Cedar Rapids. We wish all W. W. G. girls in Iowa could have heard her. This program was in charge of the vice-president, Marie Flayharty of Mount Union.

We had hoped to have with us Rev. V. N. Witter, who is now Iowa's director of religious education. While he couldn't be with us in person, he sent a cheering message, which was read at the evening service.

Sunday evening, we again listened to Dr. White, on the theme "A Look Forward," in four divisions: our stock in trade or our personnel; our business plans or our organization; our selling campaign; our net profits or results. He said that if our young people would put the same zest into their work that they do into social activities, we could win this old world for Christ within the next ten years, and that God demands nothing but our very best.

Thus closed what we believe to be the most successful rally Iowa Association has held.

Out Among the Young Folks

Mr. H. L. Batts has been elected state B. Y. P. U. secretary of Georgia to succeed Frank H. Leavell who resigned some months ago to accept a position as student secretary among Baptist students in southern institutions.

Northern and Southern California young people are planning to send official representatives to the St. Paul Convention, June 28-July 2.

The Baptist Sunday-school Board of the Southern Convention will conduct a vocational school for Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. workers, Nashville, Tenn., June 8-July 5.

A training school for workers in church vacation schools was held in Charleston, W. Va., May 17-29. Thirty-five new Guild chapters have been organized in the state during the last fiscal year. The Guild girls pledged $5,400 to the Continuation Campaign.

The Tri-City (Roanoke, Salem, Vinton, Va.) B. Y. P. U. held their annual institute with the Belmont Church, April 16-20. About 175 young people attended the sessions each evening. Classes were offered in "Training in Church Membership" and the "Senior Manual." The state B. Y. P. U. Convention will meet at Virginia Beach, July 6-8.

There are now 10,289 B. Y. P. U.'s in the South, a gain of 1,855, or 84.9 per cent over previous year. Sunday schools increased 12.9 per cent.

Buckeye young folks are constantly on the move, upward. Columbus Associational B. Y. P. U. held a very successful rally at Hildreth Church, April 21. President Dorman Richardson, of Toledo associational B. Y. P. U., reports a fine rally at Ashland Avenue Church with Mr. M. M. McGorrell as speaker. There were 760 present for the spring rally of the Miami Associational B. Y. P. U. held in Lincoln Park Church, Cincinnati, April 25.

Religious Education

Enlargement in Bible Study, Giving and Personal Work

By WILLIAM H. MAIN

We need a more thorough knowledge of the Bible. Enthusiasm without knowledge is often ridiculous. At a great convention of young people, I was appointed to lead a 6 a.m. prayer meeting. I asked that the audience contribute the scripture lesson from memory, each giving a verse, and then we would have testimonies and prayer. A young man, arose and waved his arms, saying: "I thank God for the enthusiasm of this great convention. The verse of scripture I bring you this morning is, 'The mills of the Gods grind slow but sure.' The Bible is a book to be studied and loved, not a dose of medicine to be taken every day because we promised to do it. A young lady chanced upon a book, the name of whose author was not given. She tried to read it, but pronounced it the most uninteresting book she had ever endeavored to read. Later she became engaged to a young man, and one day he told her that he had written a book and it was that very book! She read the book and declared it the most fascinating book in the world. She loved the author! The more we love God the more we shall love his word. The Bible is not a fetish or charm; it is a library of books treating all subjects necessary for soul knowledge. Some people, when perplexed, open the Bible at random, and place the finger on a text, hoping to find guidance. We would not think of studying any other book that way.

Our young people need enlarged ideas of Christian giving. We begin wrong. Go into many Bible schools and you will see the little children marching around the room and dropping something into a basket, singing as they go:

"Hear the pennies dropping,
Listen while they fall."

A woman coming out of church was finding fault with the sermon, when her little son, who had noticed her contribution when the plate was passed, said, "Well, mama, what can you expect for a cent?" Pennies! Pennies for the Lord! Dollars for everything else. We all know that "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and that the word "cheerful" means "hilarious." Now if you want to see hilarity, watch some of the faces when the plates are passed! Many organists, too, seem to enter into the spirit of the occasion for they play a sort of dead march in a minor key, that makes the cold chills go up and down one's back. Giving! Not as a duty, but as a privilege! Many young people do give, and give joyfully, but we all, I fear, need more training in this direction. The arithmetic of heaven teaches that the only way to keep is to give away.

Our young people need larger ideals in personal work. The power of the young over the young is great. We can learn to talk about the soul and Christ as easily and as naturally as about anything else. I trust that you will pardon an illustration in which this writer figures somewhat. Yet he was but a messenger and no credit is his. Sitting in my study one afternoon finishing a sermon, I felt impressed to go to see a young man whom I had recently married to one of the young ladies of our church. The sermon was left unfinished, and it was a good thing. Some sermons are finished to death. After we had met, I said: "Otis, I have come to ask you to give your heart to Christ." There never was a more surprised young man. Why? Is personal work such a rare thing in these times? In all my life I have never seen such a struggle as that young man passed through. He read his Bible and said his prayers, but when I pressed him to accept Christ as his personal Saviour, he would not. I tried to get him to say, "I will," but he couldn't. For two hours we talked, and more than once he begged me to go home, but I knew that it was a life and death struggle, and so would not go. When asked why he resisted so, he would say: "The devil! the devil!" His young wife came into the room and begged him, for her sake, to yield. He kept repeating, "Not now! not now!" I put on my overcoat, saying, "My boy, you have almost broken my heart." Then I asked him if he would kneel in prayer with me, and he did. When the prayer was finished, he arose to his feet sobbing as I had never heard a man sob before, and started for the rear of the house as fast as he could go, his wife after him. Not a minute had passed when she shouted, "Pastor, he says he will yield!" I saw a transformation. The tearful drawn face was beaming with joy. "Do you mean it, Otis?" I said. "Yes!" said he. Salvation had come to his house. That experience told the next morning, finished the sermon, and was the best part of it by far. Later he confessed Christ in baptism. One day he saw me on the street, and came over. Taking my hand he said: "How can I ever thank you for what you did for me that day?" Do you think personal work pays? Our young people ought to be a great evangelistic force in our churches, yes, and in all the world. Short views are fatal. To be a real evangelistic force we must be interested in world-wide missions.

Our young people need more heart earnestness. Enthusiasm, good as it is, will not last unless we have heart earnestness behind it. Better never start if we intend to give up. Wishes fail, but wills prevail. Garfield said: "A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck."

International Uniform Lesson for June 18

THE DOWNFALL OF JUDAH
Lesson: 2 Kings 25:1-21
Golden Text: Galatians 6:7

Setting

Escaping through the southern gates of the city, Zedekiah and his men fled down the Kidron Valley to the valley of the Jordan, only to be captured on the plains of Jericho and taken 200 miles north to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah. Following this the better inhabitants of Judah were deported to Babylonia—the New Babylonian Kingdom founded by Nabopolassar—going thence by an indirect route, north to Damascus, across to the Euphrates and south to Babylonia.

Lesson

For eighteen months Jerusalem was besieged by Nebuchadnezzar's army. But in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, the ninth day of the fourth month, all the bread was spent. With "famine sore in the city," escape was the only course possible for those of weaker calibre. The Chaldeans surrounded the city, so the besieged fled by way of a gate between the two walls. But the Chaldeans pursued the king and overtook him in the plain of Jericho. Bigoted, vacillating Zedekiah was alone; "all his army scattered from him." He was carried "unto the king of Babylon" at Riblah, and there his sons were slain before him, his eyes were put out and he was carried captive to Babylon. Blinding prisoners was a common measure. The final destruction of Jerusalem follows when Nebuzaradan, captain of the Babylonian guard, came to Jerusalem, burned the temple, the king's house and all the houses of Jerusalem and the Chaldean army broke down the walls of the city. The best of the people who had stayed by the city were carried away captive; the poorest were left to be vine-dressers and husbandmen. Jeremiah was taken bound as far as Ramah, then was given the choice of going to Babylon in honor or of returning to Jerusalem. He chose the latter.

Lesson Thoughts

1. "He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy."—Proverbs. 2. While it was the strength of the Chaldeans that finally took Judah captive, yet back of this were the moral causes, the weakening of a nation by wilful indiscretions. 3. "The Nebuchadnezzars are God's axes with which he hews down fruitless trees."—Maclaren.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

Anniversary Week

This is Boston's Anniversary Week—a new style. Even in weather, the style is changed. In the good old times we rarely missed the drizzling accompaniment of an east wind storm that usually moderated the hot ebullitions of the annual reformers. This fine weather, with brand new straw hats unaccompanied by overcoats, seems to lack the old-fashioned moral earnestness. In the former days of moral wars, the weather and the embattled orators seemed perfectly to articulate. True, there is harmony now, but it is because all things are serene and orderly. The complexion of the audiences also has changed. They have the look of fair-weather warriors—not at all militant. Elderly women and ministers seem heavily to predominate. The writer can remember when short-haired women with set determination, and long-haired men with eyes “in fine frenzy rolling,” supplied a moral temperature that was too much for the cool anniversary drizzle.

But those were the days when things had to be done, and the people who opposed had to be fought and finished. Now nearly everything is done; we've achieved prohibition, the “suffrage,” daylight saving, cigarette smoking, masculine women and other crying reforms, and there's nothing left to do but “polish the brass.” So Anniversary Week practically is “polishing week,” and you really need fine weather for that.

The real centers of heat and earnestness are the State House and the City Hall. There, politics and morals are at close and constant grips, and when some of the wrestlers are of Hibernian extraction, we find that politics become a powerful derrick to hoist our morals. We hear about certain self-made statesmen who “will bear watching.” But we find that when the proper man watches them, they can't bear it. Very much of moral encouragement has come to us of late. In judges, prosecuting officers, courageous and capable men willing to serve the people, Massachusetts really is a shining state.

Indianapolis

Almost everything disturbing and hopeful seems at present to center in the western “Hub.” It is a sort of Baptist monopoly that we are having as we vibrate between prospective agitation and the promise of peace. In the back of our heads we believe in Baptist sanity. It has not failed us yet. Nor will it fail us. All that has happened through many months has only well served to yield us at last unity of purpose and strength in Christian achievement. How much depression have we a right to indulge? In the face of what we have achieved, depression is almost comic. The trouble is we have been sky-scraping among high figures. In former simpler days when we dared to think of a whole million our boldness depressed us. But after intoxicating ourselves with visions of a hundred millions, getting only fifty-five of them, and a lot of them paid in and distributed, we are richer and bluer than ever we were! All of us ought to be called “Funny-mentalists.” There is every reason for going to Indianapolis joy-foremost. An awful lot of superfluous gas has blown out of our Baptist system. We do not abhor “variety” as much as we thought we did. The prospect of everybody else being like ourselves, seen at close range, becomes less attractive—really we would much rather continue being Baptist just as our fathers were.

After saying much about “our holy faith,” and “our Baptist fathers,” it would not be amiss to listen to one of them who stands as well in the faith and in history as any other: Isaac Backus, father of Baptist history. He was a member of the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention in 1811, and when some one urged the incorporation of the name of God in the Constitution, that sturdy old Baptist opposed it saying, “In Reason and Holy Scripture religion is a matter between God and the individual; the imposing of religious tests has been the greatest engine of tyranny in the world.” Before playing with that “engine” so familiar to some of our fathers, we shall keep sweet, and stand pat, as our best way to honor them and their faith.

Recently, continuing an annual custom, President Horr, of Newton, conducted the senior class of the seminary to Backus' grave, where he and Professor Rowe, of the department of history, eloquently recalled that old father who served so ably the state and the churches. The soul of Isaac Backus was Baptist, and our greatest historians doff their hats in memory of his exact truthfulness.

Candidating

That species of ecclesiastical flirtation that we call “Candidating” compels mingled emotions in churches and ministers when it is indulged. Pastoral instability and frequent change increase the indulgence. In the last analysis, flirtation is a personal matter, and the “on the spot” impression often opens the door to matrimony. Ecclesiastically also is this too true. The truth of it has developed the “expert” candidate—the master of the business. All he asks is standing room in a pulpit and his fulcrum of practised arts and crafts will do the rest. On he comes like a trained chorus and “sweeps the deck.” It is a grand crescendo. The people want to call him by acclamation. They do. He always accepts. At once begins the inevitable diminuendo. Half a year of that less impressive movement gives an intolerable leisure for repentance to a stamped church.

But often the best candidate is least expert. His worth defeats him. His mental strength and keenness make him acutely self-conscious under the trying conditions. While respecting himself and his work he is a poor showman. He does not “sweep the deck.” In candidating it is diminuendo with him. But in the pastorate it is crescendo as in character and competency he grows upon the people. How singular that so many churches seem willing to forego that pleasanter experience!

Caroline Atwater Mason

Baptists are deeper in debt to the above gifted woman, who had already given lavishly of her brilliant pen to their literature, and to the enrichment of that glorious record of Christian missions which is the common possession of all the denominations alike. Her last book, just issued, surely is church news. All the churches everywhere will gladly hear it. Mrs. Mason calls it “The Wonders of Missions.” It is comprehensive and cumulative. It begins with William Carey at the cobbler's bench, and leaves us at the farthest out-posts of present day missions, faced to the future. Another pleasant item of Baptist news is that it is beautifully and befittingly dedicated to Lucy W. Peabody, for whom every Baptist is grateful and proud.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

The Milwaukee Union

The Milwaukee Baptist Union held its annual meeting on the evening of May 16. While not the most largely attended of our meetings in recent years, it was one of the best, if not the best. Dr. A. A. Hobson, of First Church gave the address, and the meeting was held with the West Allis Baptist church, which is the mother of churches in this city.

A contrast of what has been accomplished during the past two years, with what had been done before that time makes the present day work stand out as a remarkable achievement. Before the days of the New World Movement we were trying to do work on the basis of a budget of $500, contributed very largely by the local churches. With the survey preceding the New World Movement the Baptists of Milwaukee saw their needs, and estimated the resources necessary to meet them.

As a result the union became a cooperating agency of the state convention, with the latter organization turning all the missionary work in the metropolitan area of Milwaukee over to this organization and arranging to finance the same through its operating budget. For the coming year the budget of the union will be close to $10,000 which includes the salaries of four workers, including that of a city missionary, in the person of Dr. D. W. Hulbert, formerly the state superintendent. In addition to that the union assists in the salary of the pastor of the Negro Church, and is helping in the purchase of a new building, assisting at the Woodlawn Mission, recently started, and in the development of the Christian Center at the old South Church, besides a large assistance with the Christ Polish Church.

This year every bit of work will be carried on with a department, and each department will be a standing committee on the work of that particular field. Instead of having a committee on Polish work, and Russian work, etc., we now have a department on foreign speaking work, which includes all the work among foreign speaking people. The union is asking to be recognized as a standard society of class B at the next meeting of the executive committee of Northern Baptist Convention.

Famous Milwaukee

Most people know Milwaukee only for a certain dark brown beverage once manufactured here and distributed over the world. They did not know that it only stood fourth in the manufacture of that beverage. Milwaukee is famous for its beautiful parks, its schools, its public buildings, its Socialists, its industries and some other things. But it has added a new laurel to its name.

On May 23-24 there was held in this city a convention. But it is not unusual for Milwaukee to have conventions. The famous thing about this convention is that it is a convention of the drys of Wisconsin and twelve neighboring states. It was addressed by many famous local and state speakers, but it also had as its guests such men as Congressman Barclay of Kentucky—think of a Kentuckian coming to Milwaukee to make a dry speech—Wayne B. Wheeler, Roy A. Haynes, Congressman Cooper and Congressman Volstead, and Miss Anna Gordon.

It was the surprise of all that the first sessions crowded the doors of the largest church auditorium in the city, and the second day the large city auditorium seating 8000 people was crowded for the night meeting. It is said by those who are on the inside that Wisconsin is to be the pivotal state in the congressional elections, but this convention has brought to Superintendent Hutton, of the Anti-Saloon League, an avalanche of letters and personal assurances from formerly wet people, that they are now for dry men and measures, since they live in a democracy where the people must respect the laws made by themselves or go down to ruin. It is difficult to understand how some men are going to swear to support the Constitution of the United States, and then violate that oath, by seeking to nullify the provisions of it, and especially the eighteenth amendment.

South Baptist Church

The South Church, of which the writer has been the pastor for nearly three years, held its annual meeting on May 22. It was said by many to have been the best in many years. The Sunday Schools averaged 216, and are well organized in every way. There was a net gain of ten in the membership. The financial report showed an average of approximately $44 contributed to all the work of the church. The Young People are planning on sending four representatives to the Saint Paul Convention paying a part of their expenses.

On May 14 the formal services of breaking the ground for the first unit of the new building were held. Dr. A. LeGrand made the principal address. This church was organized in 1875. It has had a splendid history, and a number of notable pastors. Among the former ministers living are Rev. W. A. Spinney, Dr. D. W. Hulbert, Rev. R. G. Pierson and Rev. W. T. Paulkin.

The first unit of this building has been named Lindsay Hall in honor of William and Mary Lindsay, who were not only charter members, but were generous supporters of the work for many years. The ladies parlor is to be called The Mary Lindsay Parlor in memory of Mrs. Lindsay who was the president of the woman's organization for many years, and the president of the state woman's society.

The church is sending its pastor and his wife to the Indianapolis convention.

The Michigan Baptist Convention

By GEORGE H. WAID

The Michigan Convention met in Jackson, May 16. On account of the meeting in Pontiac last October the sessions were confined to one day with a meeting of the board of managers in the forenoon. Michigan now closes its convention year April 30 to conform to the fiscal year of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The biggest thing at the convention, in fact the only item of business that caused a ripple of excitement was the passage of a resolution memorializing the Northern Baptist Convention against taking any action towards the framing of any creedal statement or confession of faith. As it is a piece of real news we give the resolution entire:

Whereas, for two and a half centuries the Baptist denomination has never adopted a creed or confession of faith, believing in the New Testament as a sufficient guide to faith and practice,

Whereas, the Baptists have ever defended the autonomy of the local church and the right of private interpretation,

Whereas, under this system of democracy, freedom and faith, God has wondrously prospered the Baptist denomination in numerical growth and spiritual power.

And whereas, it is now proposed by some that the Northern Baptist Convention adopt a confession of faith which would manifestly be a departure from historic Baptist principles and practices.

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the Michigan Baptist Convention, assembled in Jackson, Mich., do hereby record our disapproval of any such proposal to adopt a confession of faith, believing that the Northern Baptist Convention, by so doing, would open wide the door to theological controversies that would tend to division and inevitably impair the spiritual forces of goodwill and cooperation essential to carrying forward the work of the kingdom of God.

Be it further resolved that copies of this preamble and resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention and to Baptist papers.

This resolution came before the convention with the endorsement of the board of managers. It was earnestly debated, though without any manifest bitterness by Dr. A. W. Wishart and Dr. A. H. Harnley favoring and Rev. F. R. Vine and Rev. C. H. Heaton opposing. It was passed by the decisive vote of 150 to 23.

It was a splendid meeting in spite of its brevity. The presiding officer, Mr. Ralph E. Jennings, was gracious and conciliating. His address of welcome revealed his sincere desire to bring all the churches and workers into harmonious relations. The convention sermon by Rev. Llewellyn Brown of Detroit, was on the theme, "Some Lessons in Soul-winning under the Leadership of Christ." In it he showed how the miracles of Jesus were far more than an exhibition of power. They were also practical lessons in which the Master revealed the value of the human soul.

The report of the treasurer was read by Mrs. Wier. It showed an income since October 1 of $70,482.93. This included a balance of $8,793.13, and a bank loan of $5,000, the latter made necessary by the less-than-estimated receipts from the New World Movement funds. The disbursements were $67,922.32 of which $10,564 was re-investment of principal, leaving cash on hand of $2,560.61.

The officers chosen for the coming year were: President, Ralph E. Jennings, Paw Paw; vice-presidents, J. R. Estes, Muskegon; Mrs. Edw. Wilson, Detroit; T. J. Hopkins, Adrian; Prof. L. F. Smith, Kalamazoo; Frank E. Leonard, Grand Rapids; S. B. Crandell, Battle Creek, and W. W. Smith of Detroit; secretary, George H. Waid, Capac; treasurer, Smith G. Young, Lansing; auditor and attorney, T. T. Leete, Jr., Detroit. The place for the 1923 meeting is not yet decided, but a good preacher is selected in the person of Rev. H. M. Ford, pastor of the College church at Hillsdale.

One of the features of the Michigan Convention is the fellowship supper. That feature was prominent at the Jackson meeting. The supper was given in the dining room of the Masonic Temple whose property adjoins that of the church. About 300 persons were present. Three fine addresses were given by Rev. R. Edward Sayles, of Ann Arbor; Mrs. S. C. Jennings, of Evanston, Ill., and Rev. J. H. Balfour of Lansing, each taking one word of the convention theme, "Leadership with Christ." Dr. Frank Winchester of Jackson was toastmaster.

At the evening session appropriate mention was made by Rev. C. A. Salyer of the obituary committee of the passing of certain of our workers since the last convention meeting. Prominent among these was the late Professor W. W. Beman who was treasurer of the convention for fifteen years and always interested in its work. Also Mrs. Jameson, widow of Dr. E. H. E. Jameson, for so many years district secretary for the Home Mission Society.

The evening session besides some business which had been left over from the afternoon contained two very helpful addresses. Dr. S. G. Neil spoke on the topic, "A Tonic of Big Things." He introduced his address by giving facts, figures and emphatic nods of the head concerning the greatness of Philadelphia and gave the delegates an invitation to attend the sesqui-centennial of the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1926 and view at the same time the publishing plant of the A. B. P. S. Dr. Neil who had been giving inspiring addresses to the ministers at their conference, in this concluding address exhorted the ministers not to be satisfied with the trivial, but continually to reach out after the larger themes and thought. Dr. Chas. W. Gilkey of Chicago, brought a message of rare beauty and clearness. "Things New and Old," was his topic.

Michigan may lose its genial and able director, the Hon. Grant M. Hudson, who has shown such able leadership in guiding Baptist affairs in Michigan. Reform parties have prevailed upon him to become a candidate for the nomination to congress from the sixth district. His experience in the state legislature and as leader of the Anti-Saloon League forces as well as his abilities eminently qualify him for this service. Such as he are needed in congress to help sustain the validity and enforcement of the Volstead Act. Dr. Hartzog in the afternoon session made a brief but emphatic appeal to support Mr. Hudson in this candidacy.

Some Needs of Our Indian Work

By BRUCE KINNEY

At least two of our missionaries to the Indians need Corona or other portable typewriters. Good second-hand machines will do.

In one of our Indian communities where I preached recently, the singing was led by an Indian using a clarinette. He did it well. His tones and phrasing were exceptional. It was told that in that same community there were a number who had learned to play various instruments while in the nearby government school. But they have no instruments and cannot afford to buy them. The instruments on which they learned belonged to the government. I am not asking for money for this purpose. I am wondering if there are not in many Baptist homes throughout this land instruments of various sorts used by brass bands that could be given to our Home Mission Society to be placed in care of our missionary on that field and to be used by such as he may select for the glory of God. Any kind of regular band instruments can be used. Write to me and I will give address to which they may be sent.

NEW JERSEY

THE ANNUAL MEETING of Clinton Avenue Church, Newark, held April 16 showed that twenty-four had been received by baptism, one half of whom were adult married people, and forty-three by letter and experience, allowing an increase of 35 over losses by letter and death. The Easter offering amounted to over $2,000, with all bills paid, including repairs and decorations, which cost over $3,000. Money raised for all purposes was $19,000, over $8,000 of which went to the New World Movement. The Women's Missionary Society, under the leadership of the pastor's wife, had an average attendance of thirty-eight, while the forty-three persons participating in the Missions reading contest won 2,511 points. A Missions study class was conducted, and under the auspices of the Farther and Nearer Lights Society an educational course of four lectures had been given by Mrs. Farmer, of Montclair, N. J. Perhaps the most noticeable growth was made in the Sunday school, where the average attendance increased from 145 of the church year 1920-1921 to 250 for the year 1921-1922. Since last October the weekly attendance has been 275; for the month of March and April, 298. The goal for the coming year is 300. On Sunday, April 30, the church raised in cash and pledges $1,269 to pay the salary of a missionary at Fifth Church mission, giving the church now a missionary in China, one in the city, and one for the church itself. A tithe's league of nearly forty members has been formed, which will be greatly increased during the coming year. At the last annual meeting the church voted the third advance in the pastor's salary in two years, making an increase of $1,000 over two years ago. Moreover, the church is sending its pastor, Rev. Archer B. Bass, to the N. B. C., with all expenses paid.

CONNECTICUT

AT SOUTH NORWALK CHURCH, Rev. L. J. Schoeppeler, pastor, thirteen young people were received Sunday, May 7, twelve of these by baptism. The Easter offering amounted to about $500, one of the largest in the history of the church. The benevolence contributions have made an excellent showing and $250 was contributed toward the Continuation Fund.

CONNECTICUT'S COLLECTIONS for the general campaign equaled 88 per cent of those of last year, amounting to more than 100 per cent of what might have been expected on the payment of pledges for the current year. In other words, on the basis of pledges made two years ago, there should have been collected by April 30, this year, approximately $501,000, whereas when the books closed May 4, approximately $536,000 was collected for the two years. A commendable showing under present industrial and financial conditions.

THE FISCAL YEAR OF FIRST CHURCH, Bridgeport, closed April 30. Total contributions for all purposes, $28,144.83; contributions to benevolences amounted to $15,143.57. In the case of this church, as in that of many others in the state, where information and instruction were systematically given in missions and stewardship the receipts for benevolences were materially increased.

NEW YORK

REV. JAMES MANNING BRUCE died May 15 at the age of 77 at his residence in Arden, N. Y. After having graduated from Columbia University, Mr. Bruce took his theological training at Rochester Theological Seminary and a post-graduate course at Oxford University. His first pastorate was in Dover Plains, N. Y. From there he was called to the Baptist Church of Hudson, N. Y.; following this, he joined Dr. Edward Judson in the old Berean Baptist Church, Bedford and Downing Streets, New York City. He worked with Dr. Judson through all the long struggle of raising the funds to build and equip the Judson Memorial Church, as an institutional church, on Washington Square South, New York City, and for more than thirty years was co-pastor of that church with Doctor Judson, finally becoming pastor after Dr. Judson's retirement. Mr. Bruce is survived by his widow, Mary Bright Bruce, and his three sons. Funeral services were held at the Judson Memorial Church with interment at Woodlawn Cemetery.

REV. WARREN C. TAYLOR, who has been pastor of Owego First Church for ten years, has tendered his resignation to accept a call to Albion Church, his work there to begin June 18. During his pastorate Mr. Taylor has received into the church, 231 members, 153 of them by baptism. Benevolences are four times what they were ten years ago and $7,000 has been spent in property improvements. Mr. Taylor has twice had his salary advanced, the total increase being 60 per cent.

THE BAPTIST TEMPLE, formerly East Avenue Church, of Rochester, Rev. Clinton Wunder, pastor, is planning a new building on one of the most ideal and valuable sites for a Rochester down-town church. This building plan, if approved by the church membership, will be the most modern of structures with a revenue producing business portion somewhat similar to First Church of Syracuse. For the past eight months the Sunday morning congregations have averaged 748 and the evening congregations 1,264. An average per Sunday of 2,012 have attended temple services, which means that since last September 70,465 people have heard Mr. Wunder's messages. The annual report shows an increase of 176 new members during the past year, which makes the present membership 1,849. Of these additions eighty-five were by baptism, nineteen by experience and seventy-two by letter. The office force has been increased until it represents one of the most up-to-date and complete church business offices in New York state. $79,366.05 was contributed for all purposes last year, representing $44,741.82 for the New World Movement, $34,624.22 for current expenses and $2,855.08 for local benevolences. The new budget recently raised amounts to $80,443 for all purposes.

AT THE MORNING SERVICE, Sunday, May 7, the Parsells Avenue Church, Rochester, honored the fiftieth anniversary in the gospel ministry of Rev. J. H. Durkee, who is a member of the church. The same day was also Mr. Durkee's seventy-fifth birthday anniversary. Mr. Durkee has held pastorates at Meredith and New Market, N. H., at Phoenix and Pike, N. Y., where he built new church edifices, at Batavia where he organized and built the Bank Street Church (now the Emmanuel Church), and the Atlantic Avenue Church of Rochester. While at Pike he organized and built the Baptist church in the village of Bliss. For nine years Mr. Durkee was state chairman of the Prohibition party for New York. He plans to retire from the active ministry because of ill health, but continues to preach at the "Whosoever Will" Community Mission in West Webster where he has been acting-pastor for two years.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

TAKOMA PARK CHURCH, Washington, has added thirty-two names to its membership since the coming of its first pastor, Rev. William E. La Rue, last November. Pending the erection of a new church building the congregation is worshipping in the Seventh Day Adventists Church, as it is not used on the Lord's Day by them. It is an inviting building and the attendance at the Sunday school and services of the church have greatly increased as also the contributions. The church is building a Parsonage which is nearing completion. It is situated on the church lot at 6811 Piney Branch Road. The committee is working on the plans and financial arrangements with the hope of beginning the erection of the church edifice this summer.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. J. F. WIGGINS, who has served faithfully and acceptably First Church, Mahanoy City, has tendered his resignation, to take effect on or before August 1. Mr. Wiggins is thirty-six years of age; their anniversaries in Messiah Church, Bridgeport, Rev. Walter Gay, pastor, May 10-12. This included the twelfth anniversary of Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. auxiliary, Joshua W. Bullock, president, and Mrs. Nora Ellis corresponding secretary; the fourteenth anniversary of the Woman's Auxiliary Connecticut Baptist Mission Union, Mrs. W. O. Harris, president; the nineteenth annual session of the Connecticut Baptist Missionary Union, president, Rev. W. B. Reed, pastor of Shiloh Church, Hartford; secretary, Rev. John B. Pharr, pastor of Immanuel Church, New Haven. Addresses of welcome: For the Negro churches of the city, pastor of the entertaining church; for the white churches, Rev. D. B. MacQueen, pastor of First Church, Bridgeport. It is of interest to note that the Negro churches of Connecticut have taken a much larger share in the New World Movement this year than heretofore.

Resolutions of W. B. M. S.

Whereas our denomination is nearing the most critical time in all its history, and—

Whereas this Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Connecticut has proved during the recent campaign, its ability to give substantial support, both spiritually and financially, to the leaders of our denomination.

Be It Resolved:

I. That we reaffirm our faith in the vision and purpose of our New World Movement; and in our missionary and educational program as planned and carried forward under the direction of our General Board of Promotion.

II. That we, as a society, express our appreciation to the leaders of our denomination, especially Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, president of the General Board of Promotion, and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Dr. Heath, and others, who so cheerfully assisted by bringing instructive and encouraging messages to our people throughout this state during the recent campaign.

III. That we also express our appreciation of the faithful and valuable service of our state directors during the past year, and that we especially honor at this time, Mrs. J. D. Rough, our state director for the Woman's Campaign, and Miss Mary L. Howard, president of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Connecticut, and our key-women and all those women who by their gifts and services made it possible for us to go "over the top" and on to victory.

IV. That we pledge our support, both spiritually and financially, during the coming year, and also as members of this society, we promise to pray for especial wisdom and especial guidance for our leaders, during the convention of our Northern Baptists at Indianapolis.

V. That we at this time express our thanks and appreciation for the cordial welcome and generous hospitality accorded us by the entertaining church, the South Church, Hartford.

VERMONT

AS A RESULT OF THE interest aroused in the recent contest between the men's classes of the South Newfane and East Dover churches, the men of East Dover Church have organized the East Dover Brotherhood. This organization is now planning for a supper and entertainment to be given the South Newfane men, who won the contest. Throughout the contest the rivalry between the classes was delightful and proved most helpful to both groups.

ON EASTER SUNDAY, at the beginning of the evangelistic campaign in St. Albans Church, seven were baptized. Since then three more have been baptized, and the pastor, Rev. A. C. Berrie, reports that the campaign has not only resulted in decisions for Christ but in the deepening of the spiritual life of the church.

EASTER WAS A GREAT DAY for the South Londonderry Church, twelve having been received into the church by baptism. Pastor Eno also reports the Sunday school attendance on Easter Sunday as 138.

DURING THE FIRST YEAR of Rev. Charles Hargrove's pastorate, the Brandon Church has received into membership eight by letter, one by experience and twenty-eight by baptism. Easter Sunday was Pastor Hargrove's first anniversary. At the morning service the hand of fellowship was extended to nineteen persons, and in the evening twelve were baptized. At the evening service the congregation almost taxed the seating capacity of the house.

AT BELLOWS FALLS, REV. JOHN M. Maxwell baptized five on Easter, all of whom were heads of families. This makes a total of twelve received into the church during the year.

FAIRFAX CHURCH HAS recently received seven by baptism and one by letter. Four made this public dedication of their lives on Easter Sunday.

REV. B. H. CURTIS, pastor of Addison Church, baptized three on Easter, and reports that two others have been accepted for membership by the church and will soon be baptized. Still others are at the point of decision, so it is hoped that soon these will follow.

SIX WERE RECEIVED INTO Enosburg Falls Church by baptism on Easter Sunday.

THE WORK IN WEST BRATTLEBORO Church is encouraging. During the winter a new furnace was installed, and this spring a hardwood floor has been laid. Other improvements are being planned for. The newly organized Boy Scout and Girl Scout work is now an important feature of the church program. A young people's choir is rendering splendid service. On Easter four were baptized.

LARGE CROWDS ATTENDED ALL of the Easter services of the Rutland Church, the communion service being the largest on record. On this day twenty-two were received into the church by baptism and five by letter, making a total of twenty-seven by baptism during the year. Five were baptized, April 23. On Sunday, May 7, just as Pastor Peck was to begin his sermon a message came stating that his mother, who had been lingering at death's door for months, had passed away. Madam Peck was a mother of whom one could be justly proud. She had made her home with her son. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon, May 9, Rev. Clark T. Brownell, of Brattleboro, officiating.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

FIVE UNITED WITH UTICA CHURCH by baptism at the Easter evening service. May 14-21 was celebrated as Mothers' and Daughters' Week. On Mothers' Day there was a special program at both the morning and evening service. On Monday night the relation of the church to the community was discussed. Friday evening seventy-two mothers and daughters attended their banquet. Saturday evening a mothers' and daughters' picnic was held in Starved Rock Park. The week of celebration closed Sunday night with an address by the pastor on "The Ideal Young Woman." Pastor L. P. Cassell is on his third year of work in this church. The men's Bible class, the young people's class, a woman's missionary society and B. Y. P. U. have been organized with a splendid membership and attendance.

THE ANNUAL MEETING AND BANQUET of Wilmette Church was enjoyed Wednesday evening, May 17, in the ground floor auditorium of the partially completed structure. Reports showed that in spite of cut salaries and unemployment, there was an increase in total actual giving for the year of 4 per cent, total assets in excess of liabilities being nearly $70,000. During the year sixty new workers have joined the ranks and the senior B. Y. P. U. membership has doubled. A five-candle bedecked birthday cake to Pastor Francis C. Stiffer, reflected appreciation of his five years of intensive service as well as the determination of the church to "carry on" with him. The real "dessert" was the impelling address by Dean Shailer Mathews. Without doubt this nine-year-old church has been given a running start toward a residence membership of 300 and a completed building.

FIRST CHURCH, STERLING, has concluded a post-Easter evangelistic campaign, April 23-May 7, under the leadership of Rev. J. C. Dent. This campaign was the direct product of a school of missions held the latter part of February and first of March, after which the continuation campaign was made, securing $370 in paid up and new pledges. This movement welded the people and prepared the way for the soul winning effort. Two distinctive features of the meetings were the large and continued attendance of the children, who formed a fine junior choir, and the response of people to accept Christ without any special urging. The pastor, Rev. A. W. Fleischman baptized twenty-four candidates. Seven others are uniting by letter and experience and still more await baptism.

THE THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL meeting of Woodlawn Church, Chicago, was held May 10. For the first time the current expense fund shows no deficit in spite of the economic depression of the past year. The Bible-school classes are earnestly engaged in Bible study under the leadership of earnest Christian officers and teachers. The pastor has never preached to larger Sunday evening audiences. The evangelistic sermons have been productive in the salvation of many souls. The number coming into our fellowship by baptism is fifty-six. Five others have been baptized since the year closed and many others are on their way. Others have come by letter, the exact number being 63. Rev. M. P. Boynton will have finished, before the expiration of another church-year, a full quarter of a century of leadership and ministry in this church.

WISCONSIN

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING of First Church, La Crosse, was held May 3. The Sunday-school report showed a gain of an average of ten members per Sunday for the past year. The school is on a sound financial basis, closing the year with no debts and a cash balance on hand. Supt.

C. B. Maxfield, was made an honorary member of the Workers' Conference of the church, and a rising vote of thanks was given him for his faithful work. The Workers' Conference is composed of all officers of organized classes together with the teachers of those classes and all other teachers and officers of the Sunday school. They have held monthly conferences excepting in the vacation months of July and August. This Conference is considered the pulse of the entire school. Pledges to the full amount of the budget submitted have been made. The trustees reported that the financial condition of the church has never been better. Mr. C. F. Emery, church treasurer for twenty years, retired. The Ladies' Industrial Society reported large receipts and disbursements with a good cash balance on hand. The pastor, Rev. W. S. Stewart, led vacation school for four weeks during the year. To this is attributed a great strengthening of attendance in the Sunday school. There have been 21 baptisms during the past year.

MINNESOTA

FOURTH CHURCH, MINNEAPOLIS, under the leadership of Dr. F. H. Divine of New York, conducted a campaign May 8-14, to secure subscriptions for $60,000 with which to complete the present building and provide an additional building for the rapidly growing Sunday school. As a result, pledges were secured for $65,629, and a great spiritual uplift was brought to the membership of the church. Thus far about $60,000 has been expended upon the building and it is estimated that $20,000 more will be needed to finish it. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 850, and with a side room can accommodate 1,000. The membership of the church is 765. Rev. W. E. Loucks has entered upon his fifteenth year as pastor.

A COUNCIL WAS CALLED by Artichoke Church Sunday, May 14, for the purpose of ordaining to the ministry its pastor H. G. Jorgensen. Rev. Olaf Breiding was elected moderator and Rev. L. O. Williams, secretary. Mr. Jorgensen gave a satisfactory account of his conversion and call to the ministry and his ordination was unanimously recommended. This was observed in the evening, Rev. L. O. Williams preaching the sermon.

JUDSON MEMORIAL CHURCH, Minneapolis, Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, pastor, held its annual meeting the last of April. This church was organized thirteen years ago as a mission from Calvary Church under the leadership of Rev. Justin W. Nixon as first pastor. It now has a membership of 609 and raised the past year for current expenses and benevolences $19,700. Eighty-three new members were added during the year, thirty-eight by baptism. The church has a modern equipment valued at $70,000 and already is planning to complete the second unit or auditorium. A well-equipped gymnasium has been used to advantage. The church ministers to the community through community night programs, church vacation school and a thoroughly equipped Sunday school.

MICHIGAN

IN THE ABSENCE OF A PASTOR the Highland Church pulpit committee arranged for an evangelistic band from Ann Arbor to spend the week end and Sunday with them. An evangelistic service was held Friday evening; a cross-country hike on Saturday, and incidentally the saving of a neighbor's barn from destruction by fire; a prayer meeting at 10 a.m. Sunday, followed by regular service at 10:30; Sunday school with each of the boys in charge of a class; evening service a repetition of the morning only, more stress on evangelistic effort. Such a service must result in good to all who attended and especially to the young people, giving them a larger vision of life. A number attended from the Hickory Ridge Church.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of Bethel Church, Kalamazoo, was opened with a splendid supper served by the social service committee. The reports showed all departments in a flourishing condition. The services are well attended and the regular prayer-meeting attendance is thirty-five to forty. The Sunday school has passed the 200 mark in attendance, and the B. Y. P. U. has more than doubled in attendance and interest. The Woman's Union is doing a splendid work. During the three-and-a-half years that H. Sidney Bullock has served as pastor of this church 110 members have been received, sixty-four by baptism. There have been thirty-eight losses leaving the present membership 177. The entire current expenses of the past year have been cared for and $900 given to beneficence. The last $100 has been paid on the mortgage. The Sunday-school capacity is overcrowded; money is being raised to put electric lights in the basement of the church and fit up suitable class rooms for the junior department. The new stereopticon, presented by J. C. Pike, as a memorial to his wife, lately deceased, is rendering fine service in missionary education program.

DR. C. S. KNIGHT has closed his third year with First Church, Pontiac, during which time 242 have been received by baptism besides a large number by letter and experience. There have been baptisms every Sunday for a month. During the last two weeks of April $1,000 was sent in to the N. W. M. and more is coming.

ON SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 7, Rev. J. W. Hoag, pastor Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, extended the hand of fellowship to 170 persons who had joined the church since January 1. The new members completely encircled the church. There were 1,800 present in the Bible school on this day.

IN THE EIGHTEEN MONTHS that Rev. James S. West has been pastor of Beulah Church, Detroit, he has welcomed 353 new members, 152 of them by baptism. No special meetings have been held, yet not more than seven or eight Sundays in the past year have passed without use of the baptistry. The annual meeting showed that nearly $12,000, or approximately three times the average of the last three years immediately preceding, has been raised and spent. A budget of $16,000 was adopted for the present year.

SCOTTEN AVENUE CHURCH, Detroit. One of the deacons has been licensed to preach and plans to enter the Newton Theological Institution, at Newton Center, Mass., when the fall term opens. He is a graduate of Kalamazoo College, class of 1911.

OHIO

DR. THEODORE M. HOFMEISTER, First Church, Greenfield, Ohio, has been selected as a member of the Board of Regents of the People's National University, Atlanta, Ga.

AT THE WELSH HILLS CHURCH, Granville, a recently organized B. Y. P. U. is thriving. The church has a live program for its young people, seven of whom were recently baptized. James H. Earps, a Denison student, has been pastor for over a year.

REV. H. W. BIRCH will serve as stated supply of Calvary, Tarentum, for the present. Mr. Birch is a young minister who recently came to Pittsburgh, having been compelled to resign from a pastorate in New England on account of ill health.

BEGINNING DEC. 24 meetings were held for ten nights at Roscoe Church with seven conversions. The meetings were then closed because of small-pox, but were resumed March 25 and continued for three weeks, during which time eleven took a stand for Christ. Rev. M. L. Wottring conducted the meetings. The church is and has been pastorless for some time.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF GRANVILLE Church ended a year of devoted effort. Pastor Houf, with the church nearly two years, has baptized twenty-two during the year, several of whom are from the student body of Denison University. The membership is eighteen more than a year ago. Twenty-four ordained men are listed in the church besides the two pastors. Several have passed the age when active service is possible and two are in secular work. The rest are identified with the work of the Kingdom in various positions. Many of them are on the staff of Denison University, some with the Ohio Convention and some on the foreign field. The church has twenty-one representatives in seven European and Asiatic countries and in work at home. Seven young men are studying for the ministry and twenty other men and women are pledged to distinctively Christian work. Granville Church closed its fiscal year with three-fifths of its New World Movement apportionment of $50,000 paid in. It has expended for all purposes nearly $22,000, of which more than $13,000 was for benevolences. Further than this, the White Cross work of its women is estimated at $1,800. It can hardly be doubted that among the contributing causes of such results are the more than 100 titheers in the church and the more than 150 copies of denominational periodicals, aside from eighty of our Ohio "News Letter," The Ohio Baptist, in our homes. Granville Church is practically the college church of Denison University. This means opportunity and responsibility. The Northern Baptist Convention and the Ohio Convention have shared with the church the salary of an assistant to the pastor that he may devote more time than he otherwise could to work among the students. The church has fostered in the neighboring city of Newark a mission organized by one of its members. This has been possible only through the support given by men and women of the University. A portable building has been loaned by the Ohio Convention for the home of this mission.

SOUTH DAKOTA

AFTER SERVING THE LONGEST pastorate in the history of the Lead Church, Rev. J. Maurice Hupp tendered his resignation May 7 to take effect June 1. During the past year the church building had been enlarged and is now one of the most commodious workshops for Sunday school in the Black Hills. The indebtedness has been more than pledged and all but a small amount paid. During the war Mr. Hupp supplied Deadwood in connection with his word at Lead. In this time the Deadwood Church paid nearly $3,000 on its new building and made its largest contribution to missions to that time. Mr.

Hupp is leaving the Black Hills on the advice of his physician because the high altitude militates against his health. He leaves a loyal people. There is here a good opportunity for a pastor who has had experience among foreign-speaking people. E. R. Graham is clerk of the pulpit committee. Mr. Hupp will attend the N. B. C., after which he will supply First Church of Schenectady during the vacation of its pastor, Rev. G. H. Baker. Mr. Hupp's Schenectady address will be 2 Woodland Ave. He will be open to supply work or evangelistic engagements.

State Convention at Phoenix

The Arizona Convention held its thirtieth annual meeting with the First Church, Phoenix. The session began with a pastors' conference on Wednesday, May 10, the regular convention session opening on Thursday and closing on Sunday, May 14. The reports for the year showed a steady increase in the work of the denomination throughout the state and, in spite of the fact that Arizona has been hard hit by the financial crisis, financial reports were very encouraging. The payments on the New World Movement have fallen off to some extent, but assurances are given that all pledges will be paid as soon as the money market becomes a little easier.

During the past year evangelism has been emphasized. Practically every church in the state has experienced a revival and additions by baptism during the year. The total number of baptisms for the year was 703. Several new churches have been organized and mission stations opened. The annual meetings of the convention were the largest this year in the history of the denomination in Arizona. There was a fine spirit of fellowship and cooperation manifested throughout the convention. First Church of Phoenix, with the assistance of Calvary Church cordially and competently entertained the delegation. Much credit is due for the success of the past year to the efficient secretary of the state, Rev. H. Q. Morton, through his untiring efforts and wise counsel backed up unanimously by the state board.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MAY 14, WHITTIER CHURCH dedicated one of the most beautiful houses of worship in Southern California. Rev. E. M. Hulett, formerly of Minnesota, is pastor. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. W. F. Harper, executive secretary of the Southern California Convention. Dr. O. P. Gifford was the speaker in the afternoon and Rev. J. B. Fox, of the Los Angeles City Mission Society, in the evening. The week following was a feast of good things. The building, with furnishings, cost $63,000. The $14,000 needed to clear the property of debt, including the purchase of additional lot costing $7,000, has been subscribed.

AN ENCOURAGING GROUP OF NEW MEMBERS were received at the Easter communion service of Riverside Church, Rev. R. E. Day, pastor. Mr. Day and A. M. Lewis, a leading layman and prominent businessman, have been active in the movement to secure a fund to erect a suitable building for Protestant work at the Sherman Indian Institute in the southern part of the city. The consummation of this $20,000 effort seems near at hand. Miss Edith Menzer, a member of the church, has been missionary in charge for several years. During the past year over 100 students of the Institute have confessed Christ and united with the Christian Union, thus placing themselves under the pastoring care of some Christian church. Mrs. George Drobish and family have placed with the Brotherhood Bible Class $200 as a memorial fund for Geo. F. Drobish, the income to be used to relieve wants of distressed members of the class. The class purposes to augment this fund. Dr. and Mrs. Fred M. Freble, who have spent seven consecutive winters in Riverside, left May 4 for their home in Vermont.

CALVARY CHURCH, PASADENA, has closed a successful evangelistic campaign conducted by Miss Amy Lee Stockton. Many made a public profession of their faith in Jesus as their personal Saviour, and on Sunday, May 7, the closing day of the campaign, the pastor gave the hand of fellowship to a goodly number of these at the communion season which was the largest in the history of the church. Prof. B. P. Stout, singing evangelist, and a member of Calvary Church, assisted very much for a part of the time, in the leading of the singing. The tenth anniversary of this church was celebrated the last Sunday in March. In 1912 the First Church, in hearty cooperation, dismissed seventy-seven from its membership to become the nucleus of a new church, these, with four others, being the constituent membership of the new fellowship. However, the charter was not closed immediately, and during the next few weeks 39 others united, making a charter membership of 120, of which 77 are still members. Since the closing of the charter 208 have been received by baptism and 361 by letter and experience, while 252 have gone to other associations and fields of labor. Almost $107,000 have been contributed to the work of the church, of which more than half has gone into the benevolent and missionary funds. This does not include the $55,000 in pledge and cash set aside for a new church building, nor the three automobiles, one in India, one already worn out in the service on the local field and the other, called the assistant pastor, still in daily use. Plans are now being considered for the erection of a new building at the cost of $100,000. During all of this period the church has had only one pastor, Rev. B. B. Jacques.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Convention Meets

One of the most inspiring conventions held in Northern California came to a close May 12, with a B. Y. P. U. program after four days' session. Pastor A. D. Berry and the church at Chico were requisitioned into the service of entertaining the convention and did their work so thoroughly as to more than win the enthusiastic praise of the delegates. Dr. E. A. Hanley, the new pastor of First Church, Berkeley, gave a devotional address each day of the convention. Dr. John Snape, pastor of First Church, Oakland, presided with such efficiency that the convention expressed its appreciation by his re-election, conferring a similar honor upon Secretary C. E. Tingley and Treasurer J. O. Ernsberger. Despite handicaps, Secretary Brinstad was able to make the most encouraging report yet submitted, both from the standpoint of finances and evangelistic zeal in the churches.

The convention was fortunate in having Dr. Bruce Kinney, who has taken charge of the Indian work; Dr. Peter C. Wright of New York representing the M. & M. Benefit Fund; Dr. Alonzo M. Petty from Portland, Ore., and Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, social education secretary. A glad welcome was given to Mrs. Carrie A. Robinson, just returned from the Orient, bringing with her a number of new and striking views of scenes in China. Moving pictures were also presented at the Wednesday evening session by Rev. Geo. L. White of Los Angeles, showing the work among the Mono Indians under the direction of Missionary J. G. Brendel. On Thursday evening, Dr. Chas. R. Shepherd presented pictures of the results from his work among the Orientals on the Pacific Coast, also showing some of the conditions and needs existing.

The new superintendent of evangelism, Evangelist Arthur V. Willey, was given a cordial reception by the convention. His coming to us has fully justified expenditures along evangelistic lines. This work is to be continued with increasing vigor and enlarged helpfulness during the new year. Stirring addresses were made by two missionaries, Miss Lucile Withers of Sumvuk-sien, China, and Dr. John Newcomb of Telegu, India. They were able to give convincing reports of experiences in their work showing how worth while the Gospel of Christ is to the natives.

President C. M. Hill, of the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School received enthusiastic greeting and much applause upon explaining the scriptural positions of the professors connected with the school, showing that without exception these professors are teaching absolutely historic, Baptist principles. Rev. F. C. Lovett, of Napa, spoke in regard to Redlands University which has entered upon a new era of enlarged prosperity. Rev. Henry W. Davis gave an account of his work among students of the state university. Our educational outlook is growing brighter with the years.

Rev. E. Raymond Couch, of Ukiah, contributed much to the spiritual success of the convention by his leadership in the service of song.

Separate banquets were held for the men and women on Thursday evening. The only disappointment at the men's banquet was the absence of Judge F. W. Freeman who was expected to speak but whose place was ably taken by Dr. Bruce Kinney. Ideas were exchanged among the women at their banquet in regard to conducting missionary meetings in a more helpful and interesting manner.

The following resolution was submitted to delegates of the W. B. M. S. and adopted:

Resolved, That we as women of the Northern California Baptist Convention endorse and appreciate the work of the president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery.

We also assure her of our earnest prayers that God will give her wisdom, strength and courage to so preside that the meeting will be a blessing and honor to our denomination and to the Master whose we are and whom we serve.

It was further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to Mrs. Montgomery and to THE BAPTIST.

EAST WASHINGTON AND NORTH IDAHO

FIRST CHURCH OF YAKIMA, Rev. Louis J. Sawyer, pastor, rejoices over the burning of its $11,000 mortgage. Six were baptized Easter Sunday morning and in the evening an Easter pageant, "The Dawning," was given by some fifty people. The church recently established preaching services at its west-side Olivet Mission. Rev. I. N. Monroe, who is on a year's leave of absence from his church in Hill-yard because of the ill health of his wife, will be the mission pastor.

Annual Convention

The fortieth annual convention of East Washington and North Idaho Baptists met May 8-11 with Grace Church, Spokane, Rev. A. F. Colver entertaining pastor. This was the largest gathering of Baptists in the history of the convention, more than five hundred registered delegates and visitors being present.

The annual report showed that $60,141.01 had been received on the New World Movement pledges. While the amount does not equal that of one year ago it does demonstrate the intense loyalty of the Baptists of this convention to the denominational program.

Rev. W. B. Hinson, of Portland, Ore., gave four great inspirational addresses. Rev. Charles Rutherford of India spoke of his missionary work among the Telegus. Miss Ruth Shipley of the Woman's Home Mission Society spoke of our work in the home field. Rev. C. O. Johnson, Tacoma, addressed the young people on "Speaking of Mules."

The convention was characterized with great enthusiasm which culminated in a Ministers' session and banquet; the Young People's session and banquet; the Laymen's session and banquet. The B. Y. P. U. of Lewiston, Idaho, won the attendance banner. Rev. L. J. Sawyer was toastmaster at the ministers' banquet. He startled his brother pastors by presenting to each of them a copy of a carefully prepared booklet entitled "Dear Pastor." The booklet was composed of suggestive criticisms written by laymen and printed anonymously.

Next year the convention meets with First Church of Yakima.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

Western Annual Convention

WESTERN WASHINGTON CONVENTION met in annual session with First Church of Everett, May 15-17. The convention was preceded Monday afternoon by a session of the Ministers' Conference, over which Dr. C. O. Johnson, President, presided.

The attendance at all sessions was large; 264 delegates and visitors registered, representing fifty-six churches. The convention was favored with a number of visitors from outside the state whose presence, messages and counsel added much to the interest and helpfulness of the Convention: Dr. C. M. Hill, president of Berkeley Baptist Divinity School; Dr. L. W. Riley, president of Linfield College, McMinnville, Oregon; Dr. O. C. Wright, executive secretary, Oregon Baptist Convention; Dr. G. H. Young, director of religious education in Oregon; Rev. Charles Rutherford, of Hanumakonda, South India; Miss Ruth Shipley, of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, and Dr. W. B. Hinson, of Portland, Ore.

The annual sermon was preached by Rev. F. W. Wightman. Pastor of the Sixth Avenue Church, Tacoma.

Among the important actions taken by the Convention was the adoption of a report recommending the standardization of the ministry and prescribing certain educational qualifications as essential to ordination.

A permanent men's council was organized to consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and one representative from each association and conference in Western Washington. Its purpose is to enlist, encourage and direct the men of Western Washington into greater activity within their own churches and the Convention field.

On recommendation of the board, the convention voted as a matter of economy and in order to share with all the other institutions of the Northern Baptist Convention in a general reduction of expenses, to discontinue the department of promotion, the work of that department to be assumed by the executive secretary.

ington for the New World Movement, which is $7.22 more than was raised from the same source last year. All but two of the churches contributed to this fund. $33,822.75 have been expended in missionary work in the state during the year.

The secretary's report showed there have been eight general workers and thirty-one missionary pastors and three workers among foreign-speaking people, giving all or part time to missionary work during the year. Two new churches have been organized and three men ordained to the ministry. There were 858 baptisms and a total addition to the membership of the churches of 1778. The present Baptist membership in Western Washington is 12,995.

Resolutions were passed commending Congress for the passage of the Jones-Miller Anti-Narcotic Bill and earnestly entreating our Senators Jones and Poin-dexter to use their good offices to endeavor to secure the passage of a bill in Congress authorizing and requesting President Harding to call, in the near future, a conference of those nations most vitally concerned, looking toward the annihilation of the narcotic evil in all its forms.

Officers elected for the coming year are: President, Rev. W. E. Henry; vice-presidents, Mrs. Edker Burton, Rev. E. H. Hicks, W. M. Livengood; clerk, Rev. F. C. Stannard; treasurer, B. W. Pettit; member of General Board of Promotion, Rev. Duncan M. McPhail.

The Convention will meet next year with First Church of Tacoma, with Rev. D. M. McPhail as preacher of the Convention sermon.

OREGON

FIRST CHURCH, PORTLAND, KNOWN AS "The White Temple," is astir with activity since Dr. Thomas J. Villers became pastor. The big auditorium is filled at all services, many being unable to find seats at the Sunday evening service. At the May communion seventy-eight new members were welcomed. The Bible school has grown steadily, and the young people's work is most encouraging. The women's society will call on every member of the church within the month of May.

DURING THE FOUR YEARS of the pastorate of Rev. E. T. Starkey at Calvary Church, Baker, congregations and general interest have grown until the church is leading in the city. Shortly before and following Easter nearly 100 have been received into its fellowship, most of them by baptism. Easter was the greatest day in the history of Baptist work in Baker. At the morning service Dr. Petty preached on "The Resurrection," and at the close of the service the pastor baptized thirty-five who had recently accepted the Saviour.

full of information about every phase of Chinese life, and especially concerning missions and missionary methods and outlooks.

Sermons for the Great Days of the Year, by Russell H. Conwell. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

Here are fifteen sermons appropriate for New Year's, St. Valentine's Day, Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays, Mother's Day, Decoration Day, etc. They are in Dr. Cromwell's best style and will amply repay study on the part of ministers who wish suggestion as to what can be done for special occasions.

"It Is to Laugh"

A Frenchman was waiting at a railroad station in Ireland when a couple of natives sat down beside him.

Said one: "Sure, Pat, it's down to Kil-mary I've been, and I'm on me way back to Kilpatrick."

"Ye don't say so," said the other. It's meself that's just after being down to Kilkenney, and I stop here a bit before I go to Kilmore."

"What assassins!" exclaimed the Frenchman. "Would that I were safely back in France!"—The Epworth Herald.

An autoist who had the habit of driving somewhat faster than the law allowed was haled before a local justice, who imposed a fine of fifteen dollars. The autoist drew out a roll of bills and laid a sum of money on the desk and started to leave the room.

"Here," the justice called. "There is thirty dollars here."

"That's all right, keep it. I am going out of town faster than I came in."

Dr. J. W. Dunn of Cairo, Ill., sends us this story:

A few weeks ago a Negro living near here got hold of a lot of "white mule," as illegal whiskey is often called with us, and having drunk till he reached that point where it didn't matter with him what happened, he put the keg containing the hooch on the railroad track, sat down on the same and went to sleep. In a short time a train came along, struck the Negro's seat, demolishing it and spilling the remaining contents on the ground. The man himself was killed instantly.

Another Negro, discussing the accident, commented thus: "Dat's all right about de nigger being dead; he was drunk and settin' on de track and orter been killt. But dat engineer was shore too keerless he orter slowed up; he had no bus'n'ess buss'n de keg."

One merit of this story is that it is true. At least it is guaranteed by a well-known Providence society woman.

Marjorie Elizabeth, a niece from Michigan, was visiting her, and accompanied the elders to the Episcopal church, of which her aunt is a member. Various features of the interior interested Marjorie greatly, and she asked about them in a stage whisper. The baptismal font, she was told, was where children were baptized and became Christians.

"Aren't you a Christian, Marjorie?" she was asked.

"Well," observed the diminutive worshiper, still in the stage whisper, "while I'm here I suppose I might as well be a Christian, but when I get home I think I'll keep right on being a Presbyterian."—Providence Journal.

Contemporary American Novelists, by Carl Van Doren. New York: The Macmillan Co.

A critical study of living novelists, following the author's volume on "The American Novel" which was published last year. The volume covers the period from 1900 to 1920 and is especially interesting in its treatment of the prominent new group who are voicing the "revolt from the village."

WHO'S WHO IN MUSIC

Philip C. Hayden

A wise man once declared that if he could have the educational and ethical direction of the early years of a child's life it would matter little who would attempt to train him after that. Those who have to do with educational work realize the pith and truth of this claim. In the years before the teens lies the critical period when the seed for the future is sown. To my notion the greatest danger of today is the carelessness and laxity of parents in the matter of safeguarding these fertile fields for the future. For the purpose of this little article, I propose to consider the development of musical appreciation and interest in the child-soul; and a modest appreciation of a fine-souled man who has quietly and industriously worked in the background to make the plane of music-study in the schools increasingly higher and more vital as to results. Much of the vitality and success of present-day public school music can be laid to the effects of the wholehearted, unselfish efforts of this man—Philip C. Hayden, of Keokuk, Iowa, supervisor of music in the public schools of that mid-western center, and a moving spirit in the work of the Music-Supervisors' National Conference which meets every year to consider all matters of interest and value in this vital field.

The Music Supervisors' National Conference, conceived in the minds of a small group of enthusiasts, was born in Keokuk, Iowa, in 1907 and was nurtured and reared in the Middle West. The first meeting was held in the home of the first secretary, Mr. Philip C. Hayden. Sixty-nine members attended in response to a "call for a national conference" sent out by Mr. Hayden in his capacity as secretary of the music section of the N. E. A.

All honor to the first sixty-nine, to the twenty-four who are still active members, and especially to Philip C. Hayden, the first president, who initiated the movement which brought the conference into exist-tence and whose reports of the first meetings make possible a complete history.

Beginning with 1910, but omitting 1911, the conference has published, annually the "Volume of Proceedings," the maximum edition being 900 copies. The Supervisors' Journal, published four times a year, reaches 6,000 to 9,000 readers. It is sufficient to say that the Conference has become the largest and most influential body having to do with music in the schools.

In addition to his invaluable services to this great organization, with its unlimited potentialities as to effect on our national musical progress, Mr. Hayden is also widely known as editor and publisher of School Music.

Big-Brotherly Watchfulness

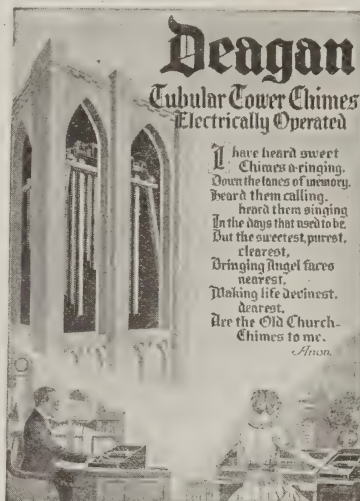

And what sort of a man is this who has been the main-spring of the school-music movement, a system which is gigantic today, but was a puny, timid shadow only a few decades ago? It has been my good fortune (and personal profit) to have known Mr. Hayden quite intimately ever since I came to this country twenty years ago, a bashful boy, friendless in a strange, half-understood country. If every alien could be so fortunate as to meet such a man, be the recipient of such fatherly kindness, such a big-brotherly watchfulness, there would be little of the immigration problem we hear about. When a certain aptitude for music was shown, it was in great measure because of the interest of this Christian man that ambition was roused, acquaintance with good music made, plans for the future carefully considered, and finally hope became an actuality; I could list a dozen or more musicians, artists, writers, who have come from this small mid-west city who have tried their wings at the encouragement of this modest enthusiast. Only last summer I had the pleasure of seeing him again. He was still a-bubble with interest in this good voice discovered in one school, and a talent for piano in another, with plans for a series of concerts by his high-school orchestra, a scheme for a two-day festival in connection with some organ-recitals by the writer—and a choral day by the combined school choruses of the city, and so on ad infinitum. He is the incarnation of the energy of youth and its vivid enthusiasms, tempered with the wisdom of mature experience.

His Life in Brief

In brief his life reads: Born in Brantford, Ont., Nov. 20th, 1854; studied at New York University and Oberlin Conservatory under Dr. Rice for theory, and W. B. Chamberlain for voice. Married Mary Neely Ralston in 1885, and has two sons. He has been supervisor of music in the public school of Quincy, Ill. and Keokuk, Iowa, for more than thirty years. He organized the musical section of the Illinois State Teacher's Association and was first and second president of same. Was president of the Illinois Music Teachers' Association, 1896-97; secretary, vice-president and president of the department of music-education of the National Educ. Assoc.; established the supervisor's magazine School Music in 1900, and has remained its editor and publisher; has written many children's songs, both words and music; has written and read many technical papers before national and state musical associations; is a member of Zeta Psi Fraternity of New York City and a Past-Master Mason.

Much of the man's achievements are only hinted at in the above resume of his life—bigger far than his high standing in his profession, greater than the vital organizations into which he has put so much, are the visions of the beautiful, the appreciation of the better elements in music, the tendencies to the things of higher grade and ethical meaning given so freely and copiously to throngs of children year after year. Such gifts are beyond price; they are the realities.

Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes Electrically Operated

I have heard sweet
Chimes a-ringing,
O'er the faces of memory,
Heard them calling,
Heard them singing
In the days that used to be
But the sweetest, purest, Clearer,
Bringing angel faces Nearest,
Making life dearest.
Are the Old Church-
Chimes to me.
Anon.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

WHAT NEXT?

We face a condition, not a theory. The year's receipts of the New World Movement were about $9,500,000. This leaves our denominational organizations several millions short of the amount needed to meet their budget expenses.

As Christian men and women we must face the facts which this situation involves with courage, faith and prompt action.

What can we do?

This is not an appeal for extra gifts, though they are sorely needed. Two things are vital, viz., prompt payment on pledges during the opening days of the new fiscal year, and that Church Treasurers forward on the first of each month all money collected to the State Promotion Directors. These are matters of vital importance just now.

Every Dollar Sent in to the General
Treasury Promptly Will Save Interest

Saving Interest Is Saving Missionary Money

Remember we entered May 1 upon a new fiscal year.

Those who can pay their pledges in advance will render a great service.

Will you borrow the money if need be and pay your entire pledge for the year now? That would help greatly.

Fresh from the Field

America's greatest Sunday-school convention is being staged for Convention Hall, Kansas City, Mo., June 21-27, when the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention expects to welcome over 9,000 delegates, representing 1,677,095 Sunday-school officers and teachers and 12,036,246 pupils from all parts of the United States and Canada to celebrate the merging of the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations into one great unified body of all Sunday-school workers to be known as "The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education." The general theme of the convention will be "Building Together," through the home, the church, the community, North America, the world field, reorganization and co-operation, and religious education and evangelism. President W. O. Thompson, Ohio State University, Columbus, is chairman of the general convention committee; Dr. Marion Lawrance, consulting general secretary International Sunday School Association, is executive secretary, and Dr. Lansuz F. Smith, St. Louis, Mo., is recording secretary.

The Women's Missionary Union contributed $3,488,000 to the general work of the Southern Baptist Convention in the last twelve months, as against $30,000 received in 1888, the year the auxiliary was formed. There are now 20,874 organizations of the union in Southern Baptist churches, a gain of 3,743 since the last convention.

The Forty-second Annual Commencement of the Baptist Missionary Training School of Chicago will be held June 11-13. Sunday, June 11, services will be held in First Church at 11 a. m., Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse, pastor, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon. Monday, June 12, is class day. At 2 o'clock the seniors will present the play "The Rock," by May P. Hamlin, followed by class prophecy, giving over of the gavel and closing with the Alma Mater. At six-thirty is the Alumnae dinner, to which all alumnae are cordially invited. At 8 o'clock the members of the senior class receive their commissions from the Woman's Home Mission Society, and music is given by the Glee Club. The speaker of the evening is Dr. Charles Alvin Brooks, secretary, city and foreign-speaking missions of the Home Mission Society. Tuesday, June 13, at 8 o'clock occur the commencement exercises. Dr. Roy E. Vale, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Oak Park, is the commencement speaker. A cordial invitation is extended to all friends of the school to attend any or all of the exercises.

Foreign Secretary J. H. Franklin and Rev. Carey W. Chamberlin, a member of the Board of Managers of the Foreign Mission Society, report very encouraging conditions in the work which they are studying in East China. Upon visiting Shanghai Baptist College they ascertained that during the preceding twelve months seventy-five of the students at that institution had accepted Christ and sixty-five of them had united with the church. This is most significant when it is recalled that upon entering the preparatory course at the college less than 20 per cent of the students are Christians and many of them in some of the classes when they enter are openly agnostic. Mr. H. F. Stuart, principal of the Jaro Industrial School of the Philippine Mission, who, with Rev. Geo. Geis met Mr. Chamberlin and Secretary Franklin at Shanghai, reported that of the 200 students in the higher classes at Jaro last year fifty were baptized. A letter coming to them from South China reported that at Kakchieh (Swatow) over sixty were to be baptized on the following Sunday, most of them being students from the schools at that station. Our people will be delighted at knowing that in our college and academy work in the Far East so much emphasis is being placed upon Christian discipleship.

On May 20 occurred the death of Dr. William Emmet Martin, at the age of seventy-four, after an illness of six months. At the time of his death, Dr. Martin held the position of librarian of Bucknell University, and was professor of anthropology, sociology and logic. He graduated from the university in 1871, receiving the B. A. degree and three years later the university conferred upon him the M. A. degree. In point of service he was the oldest member of the faculty. Upon completion of fifty years of service to the university, he was paid this tribute by Dean Llewellyn Phillips in the Alumni Monthly's issue of May, 1921: "He has served the university in a variety of ways, but he has permeated all of his service with that type of thought, speech and culture that distinguished the first academy in ancient Greece. During these fifty years Professor Martin has been more than a principal and a librarian and a professor. He has been a servant in the church and the community. He has carried burdens not his own."

Dr. E. M. Poteat, formerly president of Furman University, and more recently an executive officer of the Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, has spent the last eight months in China teaching at Shanghai College for the greater part of that time and visiting numerous missions and government schools, delivering addresses and holding conferences with large numbers of students. Dr. Poteat has been warmly welcomed everywhere and any one of several missions would gladly use all of his time. Shanghai College hopes to have his services for another year and the South China Mission is clamoring for him, which is doubtless true as well of the Southern Baptist Missions in China. He has gifts which fit him to an extraordinary degree for dealing with the students, many of whom are facing serious intellectual questions and who are earnestly trying to secure light. Dr. Poteat says he has never been engaged in a service which gave him more abundant satisfaction and he feels that perhaps he has never before enjoyed such an opportunity for usefulness.

Denison University has changed the date of its commencement to Wednesday, June 7—Monday, June 12, to suit the convenience of the large number of its friends who wish to attend the Indianapolis Convention. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Dr. W. S. Abernethy on Sunday, June 11, at 10:30 a. m. At 7:30 p. m. of the same day Mrs. W. F. Montgomery will deliver a sermon before the Christian associations. On Monday at 10 a. m. will be the commencement exercises of the university.

A B. Y. P. U. Summer Assembly will be held at Jamestown, N. D., July 10-17. A rich program is planned for the young people of the churches.

Rev. Fred Berry, director of evangelism for the Western Washington Convention, died at his home in Seattle early Sunday morning, May 28, after a sickness of seven months. Mr. Berry is widely known throughout the country. After graduating from the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, he spent a number of years in general evangelistic work and in the pastorate. Seventeen years ago he was commissioned by the Home Mission Society. He served five years as state evangelist in Iowa, nearly six years as executive secretary and superintendent of missions in Nebraska, and a short period as superintendent of evangelism in Kansas. During the War he served as camp pastor and later as Y. M. C. A. Secretary at Camp Funston, in Kansas. Since October, 1919, he has been director of evangelism in Western Washington.

At Keystone Academy, Factoryville, Pa., the events associated with Commencement will open with a Musical recital of Friday, June 9. The Glee Club will give a concert on Saturday the 10th, and on Sunday morning at the Baptist Church, Rev. T. T. Richards of the First Welsh Church of Scranton will preach the baccalaureate sermon. Monday night the Senior Class Play will be staged, and Tuesday morning the Seniors will have their Class Day exercises. Tuesday night the Academy will attend the Local Chautauqua, and the Commencement exercises will be held on the campus, in the Greek Theater, if weather permits. Four students, Marion G. Coe, Elizabeth de Quevedo, Douglas Meredith, and Donald Leslie, will speak for the 1922 class. Mr. Leslie is a son of Dr. Wm. Leslie of the Upper Congo Mission. The principal speaker of the occasion will be Rev. Joseph E. Perry, of Weston, Mass.

During the decade, 1906—1916, the Protestant churches of New York City gained 50,191 in membership. During the same period Roman Catholicism lost 117,703. This does not mean that there is not yet plenty of room in the Protestant churches.

The More You Eat the More You Want

In response to a questionnaire in which we invited suggestions concerning improvements in THE BAPTIST, Mr. J. A. Storey of Denair, Cal., writes: "Don't leave out anything. Just keep giving us more of the same kind." THE BAPTIST is like the famous confection which claims the more you eat the more you want. Those who have not yet sampled THE BAPTIST have no conception of what they are missing.

Killam's Kollum

The Pastor a Help or Hindrance

"You can trace the pastorate of Brother ——— by a study of the beneficences of the church he serves," said a friend not long since. Let us add you can also trace the pastorate of a large number of men by studying the subscription lists of Baptist periodicals. It makes little difference what the attitude of the church has been toward these periodicals when certain pastors come the church becomes interested in religious journalism. It is the interest of the pastor that is the deciding factor. Rev. I. Fredmund is pastor at Viborg, S. D. A large number of the members of this church are Danes who subscribe for their Danish Baptist paper. Pastor Fredmund has, however, sent in a fine list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST.

Bohemian Baptists Boost THE BAPTIST

The Bohemian Church has recently completed its canvass for subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. Twenty-two annual subscriptions were turned in. This provides a copy for a large percentage of the families in the church. These good people want to know what Baptists are doing and what they propose to do. If every Baptist church had a list of subscribers which represented its membership as that of the Bohemian Church THE BAPTIST would have 100,000 circulation. It should be added if these people can accomplish such a result any church in the convention can do equally as well.

Polk Forms a Habit

A. W. Shafer, treasurer of the church at Polk, Neb., sends us a check for $110 to cover a list of subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. This church must have in its membership men who know the value of consistent and persistent publicity. This is the third year that the Polk Church has provided a copy of THE BAPTIST for each family in the church. Business firms find that it pays to keep their employees informed on what the firm is doing and thus build up a loyal spirit of cooperation. The churches are beginning to understand that genuine progress is possible only where there is intelligent interest.

Deliver Us from the Saints

The Literary Digest in the issue of May 13 summarizes the recent discussion in the press on "Boiling Down the Decalogue." We are especially interested in the quotation from the Milwaukee Sentinel which thinks that the "Saint James version" is brief enough. Query: When was King James canonized?

(1) A total of $—— paid in by April 30, 1923.

Payment on pledges made prior to 30, 1922.

New pledges on Continuation Campaign, $2,000,000.

New pledges secured through the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council, $——.

(2) Regular systematic payment on pledges by every one making a pledge.

(3) Regular monthly remittance by church treasurer to state director of Promotion.

(4) Monthly reports in religious press of returns from states as to (a) Number of baptisms, (b) tithers secured, (c) number churches using program, (d) amount paid on New World Movement Fund.

(5) Report by churches in state bulletins (a), (b), (c), (d) as above.

Note: It is suggested that churches where work during the summer month is more feasible than during the winter commence the program given for September in the early months of the summer and continue in regular order.

Utilizing the Indian Survey

FOR the purposes of utilizing the American Indian Survey, conferences have been held during the past few weeks at Albuquerque, N. M.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Riverside and Sacramento, Cal.; Salem, Ore.; Seattle, Wash.; Billings, Mont.; and Sioux Falls, S. D. At these various gatherings nearly all of the twenty Protestant bodies doing Indian mission work were in the representations consisting of white missionaries from their respective fields, native Indian missionaries, and district, state and national administrators of home mission boards. Three hundred different individuals interested in and responsible for missions to Indians were reached by the information in the survey and its challenge to service. Never before have the various home mission interests so fully cooperated in the challenge of the whole field. Baptist, Congregationalist, Disciples, Episcopal, Evangelical, Brethren, Methodist Episcopal, Mennonite, Moravian, Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Christian Reformed, Reformed Church in America, United Brethren, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., and even Indian Shaker representatives joined heartily in the fellowship of common knowledge and conclusions.

In each case Rev. G. E. E. Lindquist, for a decade in Indian student work for the International Y. M. C. A., and in charge of the American Indian Survey, presented the facts as accumulated by him and his assistants and carefully collated under his supervision. Personal investigations were made of 90 per cent of the areas covered. Each conference furnished opportunity for checking up and supplementing facts presented. In the early summer the committee on social and religious survey will publish a book of 300 pages covering the carefully made conclusions of this study begun by the Inter-church World Movement and brought to completion by this committee. As representing the various cooperating home mission boards aside from their direct representatives, Rev. Elmer E. Higley, chairman of the joint committee on Indian Missions of the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions, and Rev. Rodney W. Roundy, associate secretary of the Home Missions Council, were present at the conferences.

This survey has made clear that neglect, not overlapping, is the sin of the Protestant church in mission work for the Indians. Chief among the findings have been the formulated requests that one board should extend or strengthen its work on one reservation, and another in another. Emphasis was placed on the training and use of native workers by the missionary forces; on the careful religious training of Indian boys and girls in Sunday schools, mission schools and government institutions; on cooperation with the government in its splendid educational work for the Indian boys and girls its extensive work for better farming among the Indians, and in its improvement in the physical, social and domestic life of Indian families.

More and more the Indian reservations are being changed into individual allotments for competent Indians, especially those trained in government schools, on arriving at maturity. Under reasonable restrictions this process should go forward as rapidly as possible except in the case of Indians of backward tribes. This means the mingling of Indians more than ever into the white civilization surrounding him. Yet many are still pagan. They have not been reached by the steady, transforming and socializing influences of the Christian gospel. In a number of instances where Protestant work has been adequate and well maintained through the years the results in Christian character and Christian forms of life are most satisfying. Today is the acceptable time for Protestantism to carry forward its work more intensively and aggressively and make complete everywhere the successful Christian results conspicuous already in a number of divisions of Indian peoples.

The Baptist

Tweedledum and Tweedledee

WE asked a broadminded and farsighted Baptist layman the other day, who had just returned from a tour of the Orient, whether he was going to the Indianapolis Convention. He replied that he was not, for there was nothing in which he was less interested than theological controversy. When asked what it was that he was interested in, he said, "The destiny of China and the part that the Christian Church is to play in it; the pacification of Europe and America's responsibility for it; the application of the principles of Jesus Christ to the terrific and urgent problems involved in the present conflict between labor and capital; the question of Christian solidarity, and whether the churches have enough of the spirit of Christ to get together and work together for the coming of his kingdom upon earth. The Christian church," he said, "is today on trial. If it is to turn aside now, in the face of the appalling need of the world, to engage in fruitless discussion of the difference between 'tweedledum and tweedledee,' it is doomed. It can no longer deserve the serious consideration of thoughtful and earnest men." "This is no time," said the Rev. Frederick W. Norwood, of the London Temple, the other day, "in this distracted world, for us to be discussing metaphysical subtleties, or the future world."

We were deeply impressed by the statement of our friend, and these are indeed great issues, compelling in their importance. We should like to discuss them at Indianapolis and find out what we can do as Baptists to help solve them. We confess to a lagging of interest in the matters that have been uppermost in the denominational press of late. They seem petty indeed in comparison with the questions with which the secular press is concerned.

Yet the principles involved are not trivial. They are more than metaphysical subtleties; they are truly "fundamental" to the efficiency and to the very existence of Baptists as a denomination. If we were inclined to ignore them we should not be permitted to do so. Until they are settled in such fashion as to bring peace and harmony into our denominational councils we cannot go forward unitedly to do the things that manifestly God is calling Baptists to do in this generation.

It is freely stated that theological differences are so great among us that Baptists must divide. That, at least, is an issue of large import. Is the denomination to divide? Are we to repeat the schisms of the past? Dr. Gambrell once said that Baptists were responsible for the existence of the Disciples of Christ as a separate communion, and deplored the fact that Baptists were not more patient with the Campbells.

If division is inevitable, then the question arises, who goes, and who stays? We suppose that they will go who are unwilling to live and work with those with whose theological views they disagree.

We are not authorized to speak for either conservative or liberal. But, as it looks from our angle, neither liberal nor conservative are disposed to surrender one jot or tittle of their Baptist liberty of thought and utterance. Since, therefore, there is not likely to be agreement in theological opinion while both remain, we suppose that they will depart who are unwilling to accord to others the liberty which they claim for themselves, and who want a denomination of one theological type of mind.

The so-called liberals distinctly disclaim, if we may believe those who speak for them, any desire for such uniformity. They are content to "let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." They put their emphasis not upon doctrine, but upon the Christian experience, and are willing to permit their brethren to interpret that experience in whatever terms seem true to them. They are willing to cooperate with those with whom they disagree in doctrine in all Christian tasks. We believe this to be the case also with an overwhelming majority of the conservatives in the denomination. Men of many minds have always worked together in the local church, and until recent years have had no difficulty in doing so in the denomination at large.

The question remains, therefore, as to that ultra-conservative group in the denomination who call themselves Fundamentalists. Are they willing to grant to others full liberty of conscience? Are they willing to live in peace and cooperation with those with whose theological positions they disagree? We hope that they are: but appearances are to the contrary. They appear to be committed to the position that the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth is their exclusive possession, and that to disagree with them is a kind of sacrilege, and puts one outside the pale of evangelical Christianity.

Now among Baptists there are bound to be differences of doctrinal conviction. As a denomination they were conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that every man is competent to find and interpret the truth of God for himself. The man who should relinquish his liberty to hold, and to declare in love, whatever his own experience of God in Christ reveals to him to be true, or deny that liberty to others, would be no Baptist, though he should bear the name.

This presents to any and all within the denomination who are not willing to grant to others that full liberty of prophesying which they claim for themselves, and who think that adherence to their doctrinal formulas is essential to Christian fellowship and cooperation, a painful dilemma, of which the two horns are as follows: either they must change their attitude, or change their denomination. They will never secure doctrinal uniformity within the Baptist denomination.

That the Fundamentalist leaders are beginning to suspect that they are in danger of being caught on one or the other horn of this dilemma there are some recent indications. They are unwilling to tolerate differences of doctrine, and yet find themselves in a denomination where such differences are inevitable. They appear to be seeking a way out of the difficulty, and to be trying to persuade themselves that if they are persistent enough in their agitation, those who disagree with them will leave the denomination of their own accord, and the Gordian knot will be cut. This would appear to be the explanation of the invitations they have extended of late to those of other doctrinal persuasions to take their leave.

First the Watchman-Examiner points out to those unnamed individuals who, it alleges, have departed from what it has satisfied itself to be "the historic faith of Baptists," the propriety of making a graceful exit from the Baptist ranks, with as little noise as possible. Then from the far Eastern coast comes a lone voice crying in the Boston wilderness that "practical unitarians (a brief term meaning "those who disagree with us") within the denomination should go out." Then, in a sort of antiphonal response, from the Twin Cities of the Northwest, are heard dulcet tones pleading the authority of The Presbyterian for the suggestion that the "rationalists" (an alternative term meaning the same as "unitarians" above) "should withdraw and organize a body of their own."

But the hope is an illusory one, and doomed to disappointment. Without doubt from the point of view of the Fundamentalist leaders "twere a consummation devoutly to be wished." But the liberals cannot help the Fundamentalist leaders out of their dilemma. Liberals have no complaint. They have found liberty within the Baptist denomination and expect to continue to find it. They believe themselves to be orthodox and true Baptists and to have too great a stake, material and spiritual, in the denomination to leave it.

Do the Fundamentalist leaders really expect that, in response to their oracular pronouncement from the platform of their conception of the proprieties of the situation, there will arise in the Baptist auditorium here and there a volunteer to say, with a timid and startled air, "Oh, do you mean me, brother?" and reach for his hat and make for the exit? If not, then why, in the name of all that is sensible, waste further time and energy in public agitation? Why not face the facts, leave discipline to the local churches, where it belongs, grant to others the full liberty that you claim for yourselves, and let us get to work together at something really worth while, which all of us believe in?

This phase of theological querulousness, this snarling and snapping at the heels of those the odor of whose theology is displeasing, from whatever source it may come, neither irritates nor amuses any more. It is merely depressing. It will defeat our Baptist cause, and, if it does not cease, will make of the Baptist name a byword.

The question of the schools is similar. We have listened now so long to the scolding of the schools, and to unsubstantiated charges against teachers and institutions unnamed, and so little that is convincing and definite has emerged that we have about concluded that it is a false alarm. If there is anything in it, can we now have dates, names and places, and put the charges before the bodies authorized to deal with them, or else forget them and pass on to something important? Our ablest students are growing restive. The spirit of modern youth is that of freedom. We must not needlessly disgust them with the church. Haven't we "sounded the alarm" long enough, and cannot we now try to put out the real fire that is threatening all the values that we hold precious?

Great causes call us. Can we not get together at Indianapolis on a basis of soul liberty and the toleration of doctrinal differences? What we need to unite us is a real issue, something bigger than our differences, something vital enough to interest red-blooded men, and which they can support with enthusiasm. Unless we can find that soon, and give ourselves to it, we greatly fear lest, in spite of the great opportunities that now face us as a people, we shall hear the fateful words, "The kingdom of God shall be taken away from you, and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof!"

Are We Downhearted?

WHEN that question, in the darkest days of the great world war, was put to a group of hard pressed British soldiers, it got an instant and invariable "No!" We are thinking of that group of 2,000 Baptist churches who sprang so valiantly to the call of the New World Movement two years ago. Are they downhearted?

It was a great chapter in Baptist history that was written then. Like the noble Six Hundred in the charge at Balaclava, these Two Thousand raised the morale of the whole Baptist army. They accomplished the seemingly impossible. They surpassed in their giving every previous record by whatsoever denomination made, and established a new standard of Christian benevolence, which still remains as a challenge to the future. We remember that church which was planning to build a meeting-house of its own, but set the project aside, accepted its quota, triumphantly raised it, and then set itself with new courage to meet its individual need. We recall the little church which, when its building was burned, said, "Put first things first," and accepted its allotment of $8,100; the congregation of ten persons, meeting in a hall over a fire-house, which raised an allotment of $1,000; and the church on the prairies, with twenty-eight members, which, with a quota of $3,040, raised $3,700 on the first day of its campaign. What prayer and effort and determination marked those weeks! Such enthusiasm and such devotion lift their possessors to spiritual heights. Can we recapture them?

Never in history has a great and generously conceived forward movement in any communion been so bitterly attacked as has been the New World Movement. The hearts of even some of those who voted for it at the convention failed them on the eve of its financial drive because their confidence was shaken. We are wondering what the rank and file of our churches who stood so bravely and sacrificially behind the movement are thinking today. Are they sorry, ashamed, or dubious?

A critic, in a recent number of the Watchman-Examiner, declares that from the inception of the movement "thoughtful men discerned the danger to the higher, the spiritual life of the people in the materialistic emphasis of necessity to be placed on the aims and activities of the churches." Did any of these thoughtful men discern the spiritual danger of refusing to give as the Lord hath prospered? These Two Thousand churches which adopted the advanced standard of giving, did not discern the danger of participating in the movement, and that is why, perhaps, they did not suffer from its menace. They discerned the promise of their God, "Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse . . . and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it," and, launching out upon it, proved it to be true. They found that the effort called forth an amazing store of latent leadership among their laymen, and disclosed a wealth of the spirit of sacrifice that softened all hearts before God. We remember well the washerwoman who, despite our protest, insisted upon pledging $100 a year!

Let the Wisconsin correspondent of THE BAPTIST speak of the spiritual results at this date of the campaign in that typical Middle Western state. In our issue of May 20, he writes, "Many people cannot believe that the New World Movement has been successful. The measure of its success is not wholly on the basis of whether the $100,000,000 has been raised or not. It must be measured in terms of the benefits which have accrued to the work of the local churches which have cooperated with the movement. In Wisconsin we are discovering that many of the churches which were formerly suspicious and hesitated to enter into the movement are now beginning to see that it was a paying investment for those churches which entered into it heartily. There is a whole chapter to be written along that line. This year Wisconsin exceeded the receipts of last year by more than $3,000, which is remarkable when it is remembered that last autumn receipts were only 50 per cent of what they were a year ago." Ask the girls of the World Wide Guild whether they are spiritually depleted because they responded to the great appeal! Asked for $16,664 for the continuation movement this year, they report enthusiastic offerings of more than $34,000!

No, the churches that set the new standard of giving are not downhearted! They "thank God and take courage!" It is true that others, whom they freely admit to have been as conscientious as they, believe themselves to have been more discerning, and to have discovered dangers and obstacles to which the Two Thousand were oblivious, and so have not felt free to participate largely in the movement. But the Two Thousand feel that they are justified in rejoicing that their consciences dictated that they should give, and give largely, for they have demonstrated in experience the certainty of the Master's words, "Give, and it shall be given unto you!"

It is true that the Two Thousand are disappointed that they were not joined in their forward movement by the other churches. But they believed that those who hesitated, and even those who brought to defeat the immediate object of the movement, acted within their right and according to their light. They who do the actual fighting on the firing line bear no grudges. They viewed the scruples of their brethren with entire respect, though they did not share them. They hope that those scruples are entirely removed now that the Board of Promotion has made it possible for each donor to specify his gift. They hope that it is true, as has been stated with some authority that "there is now no reason why we should not cooperate to the fullest of our abilities in our missionary enterprises." They chose to give, and to wait for many issues to be cleared, while others felt that the issues must first be cleared before they could give. Now the Two Thousand desire only that general and unsubstantiated statements that create suspicion, unrest and the further withholding of funds shall cease, and that whatever facts are in the hands of the critics of the movement shall be made known, and that the way shall be cleared for the completion of the great enterprise. Earnestly do they pray and fervently do they hope that the work of spreading distrust and suspicion may not have been done so thoroughly as to be irreparable.

For certainly we hope within the five-year period to complete the $100,000,000. Is it not needed? Have we not the resources? Have not the churches which have not yet participated to the full extent of their ability as deep a consecration to the cause of their Master as these Two Thousand? We believe that they have. There are few, if any, now anywhere who do not believe that the full sum should be raised. It is admitted that the obstacles to the participation of those who have misgivings with respect to some items in the budget are now removed. We owe it to ourselves, therefore, to complete the task. We owe it to the Two Thousand churches who led the way. We owe it to our missionaries at home and abroad whose meager salaries are being cut, whose needed equipment is being withheld, and to whom reinforcements are being denied. We owe it to the Christian world—"for what is there wherein ye were made inferior to the rest of the churches?" We owe it to the Lord who died for us! We "have compassed this mountain" of doubt and hesitation "long enough." "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward!"

Whatever the future has in store, these Two Thousand have secured a position from which they cannot be dislodged! They led the way. They had faith in their brethren. They believed that the heart of the denomination was sound, and that they could trust it. Theirs was the love that "believeth all things and hopeth all things." The denomination is deeply indebted to them.

We hail them as pioneers! They have blazed the trail to the summit! They have saved our denominational enterprises from utter failure in these times of great stress. They have set us all a good example. As the issues are cleared and all facts are known, we believe we are to enter upon a new era of denominational unity and progress, and that, with full assurance and confidence of heart multitudes of churches, as noble as the Two Thousand, will hasten to ascend the heights of missionary beneficence and stand by their side.

Shall the Fundamentalists Win?

Sermon by Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, at the First Presbyterian Church, New York City, May 21, 1922

THIS morning we are to think of the Fundamentalist controversy which threatens to divide the American churches, as though already they were not sufficiently split and riven. A scene, suggestive for our thought is depicted in Acts 5, where the Jewish leaders hale before them Peter and other of the apostles because they had been preaching Jesus as the Messiah. Moreover, the Jewish leaders propose to slay them, when in opposition Gamaliel speaks: "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will be overthrown: but if it is of God ye will not be able to overthrow them: lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God."

Had Gamaliel Controlled

One could easily let his imagination play over this scene and could wonder how history would have come out if Gamaliel's wise tolerance could have controlled the situation. For though the Jewish leaders seemed superficially to concur in Gamaliel's judgment, they nevertheless kept up their bitter antagonism and shut the Christians from the synagogues. We know now that they were mistaken. Christianity, starting with Judaism, was not an innovation to be dreaded; it was the finest flowering out that Judaism ever had. When the Master looked back across his racial heritage and said, "I came not to destroy, but to fulfil," he perfectly described the situation. The Christian ideas of God, the Christian principles of life, the Christian hopes for the future were all rooted in the Old Testament and grew up out of it, and the Master himself, who called the Jewish temple his Father's house, rejoiced in the glorious heritage of his people's prophets. Only he did believe in a living God. He did not think that God was dead, having finished his words and works with Malachi. He had not simply a historic, but a contemporary God, speaking now, working now, leading his people now, from partial into fuller truth. Jesus believed in the progressiveness of revelation and these Jewish leaders did not understand that. Was this new Gospel a real development which they might welcome or was it an enemy to be cast out? And they called it an enemy and excluded it. One does wonder what might have happened had Gamaliel's wise tolerance been in full control of the situation.

We, however, face today a situation too similar and too urgent and too much in need of Gamaliel's attitude to spend any time making guesses at suppositious history. Already all of us must have heard about the people who call themselves the Fundamentalists. Their apparent intention is to drive out of the evangelical churches men and women of liberal opinions. I speak of them the more freely because there are no two denominations more affected by them than the Baptist and Presbyterian. We should not identify the Fundamentalists with the conservatives. All Fundamentalists are conservatives, but not all conservatives are Fundamentalists. The best conservatives can often give lessons to the liberals in true liberality of spirit, but the Fundamentalist program is essentially illiberal and intolerant. The Fundamentalists see, and they see truly, that in this last generation there have been strange new movements in Christian thought. A great mass of new knowledge has come into man's possession: new knowledge about the physical universe, its origin, its force, its laws; new knowledge about human history and in particular about the ways in which the ancient peoples used to think in matters of religion and the methods by which they phrased and explained their spiritual experiences; and new knowledge, also, about other religions and the strangely similar ways in which men's faiths and religious practices have developed everywhere. Now, there are multitudes of reverent Christians who have been unable to keep this new knowledge in one compartment of their minds and the Christian faith in another.

Thinking Modern Life in Christian Terms

They have been sure that all truth comes from the one God and is his revelation. Not, therefore, from irreverence or caprice or destructive zeal, but for the sake of intellectual and spiritual integrity, that they might really love the Lord their God not only with all their heart and soul and strength, but with all their mind, they have been trying to see this new knowledge in terms of the Christian faith and to see the Christian faith in terms of this new knowledge. Doubtless they have made many mistakes. Doubtless there have been among them reckless radicals gifted with intellectual ingenuity but lacking spiritual depth. Yet the enterprise itself seems to them indispensable to the Christian Church. The new knowledge and the old faith cannot be left antagonistic or even disparate, as though a man on Saturday could use one set of regulative ideas for his life and on Sunday could change gear to another altogether. We must be able to think our modern life clear through in Christian terms and to do that we also must be able to think our Christian life clear through in modern terms.

New Knowledge and the Old Faith

There is nothing new about the situation. It has happened again and again in history, as, for example, when the stationary earth suddenly began to move and the universe that had been centered in this planet was centered in the sun around which the planets whirled. Whenever such a situation has arisen, there has been only one way out: the new knowledge and the old faith had to be blended in a new combination. Now, the people in this generation who are trying to do this are the liberals, and the Fundamentalists are out on a campaign to shut against them the doors of the Christian fellowship. Shall they be allowed to succeed?

It is interesting to note where the Fundamentalists are driving in their stakes to mark out the deadline of doctrine around the church, across which no one is to pass except on terms of agreement. They insist that we must all believe in the historicity of certain special miracles, preeminently the virgin birth of our Lord; that we must believe in a special theory of inspiration—that the original documents of the Scripture, which of course we no longer possess, were inerrantly dictated to men a good deal as a man might dictate to a stenographer; that we must believe in a special theory of the atonement—that the shed blood of our Lord, dying a substitutionary death, placates an alienated Deity and makes possible welcome for the returning sinner; and that we must believe in the second coming of our Lord upon the clouds of heaven to set up a millennium here, as the only way in which God may bring history to a worthy denouement. Such are some of the stakes which are now being driven, to mark a deadline of doctrine around the church.

If a man is a genuine liberal, his primary protest is not against holding these opinions, although he may well protest against their being considered the fundamentals of Christianity. This is a free country and anybody has a right to hold these opinions or any others, if he is sincerely convinced of them. The question is: Has anybody a right to deny the Christian name to those who differ with him on such points and to shut against them the doors of the Christian fellowship? The Fundamentalists say that this must be done. In this country and on the foreign field they are trying to do it. They have actually endeavored to put on the statute books of a whole state binding laws against teaching modern biology. If they had their way, within the church they would set up in Protestantism a doctrinal tribunal more rigid than the pope's. In such an hour, delicate and dangerous, where feelings are bound to run high, I plead this morning the cause of magnanimity and liberality and tolerance of spirit. I would, if I could reach their ears, say to the Fundamentalists about the liberals what Gamaliel said to the Jews, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone;" for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will be overthrown; but if it is of God ye will not be able to overthrow them; lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God."

Avoid Fog of Generalities

That we may be entirely candid and concrete and may not lose ourselves in any fog of generalities, let us this morning take two or three of these Fundamentalist items and see with reference to them what the situation is in the Christian churches. Too often we preachers have failed to talk frankly enough about the differences of opinion which exist among evangelical Christians, although everybody knows that they are there. Let us face this morning some of the differences of opinion with which somehow we must deal.

We may well begin with the vexed and mooted question of the virgin birth of our Lord. I know people in the Christian churches, ministers, missionaries, laymen, devoted lovers of the Lord and servants of the Gospel, who, alike as they are in their personal devotion to the Master, hold quite different points of view about a matter like the virgin birth. Here, for example, is one point of view: that the virgin birth is to be accepted as historical fact; it actually happened; there was no other way or a personality like the Master to come into this world except by a special biological miracle. That is one point of view, and many are the gracious and beautiful souls who hold it. But, side by side with them in the evangelical churches is a group of equally loyal and reverent people who would say that the virgin birth is not to be accepted as an historic fact. To believe in virgin birth as an explanation of great personality is one of the familiar ways in which the ancient world was accustomed to account for unusual superiority. Many people suppose that only once in history do we run across a record of a supernatural birth. Upon the contrary, stories of miraculous gen-churches large groups of people whose opinion about our Lord's coming would run as follows: those first disciples adored Jesus—as we do; when they thought about his coming they were sure that he came specially from God—as we are; this adoration and conviction they associated with God's special influence and intention in his birth—as we do; but they phrased it in terms of biological miracle that our modern minds cannot use. So far from thinking that they have given up anything vital in the New Testament's attitude toward Jesus, these Christians remember that the two men who contributed most to the church's thought of the divine meaning of the Christ were Paul and John, who never even distantly allude to the virgin birth.

Shall One Throw the Other Out?

Here in the Christian churches are these two groups of people and the question which the Fundamentalists raise is this: Shall one of them throw the other out? Has intolerance any contribution to make to this situation? Will it persuade anybody of anything? Is not the Christian church large enough to hold within her hospitable fellowship people who differ on points like this and agree to differ until the fuller truth be manifested? The Fundamentalists say not. They say that the liberals must go. Well, if the Fundamentalists should succeed, then out of the Christian church would go some of the best Christian life and consecration of this generation—multitudes of men and women, devout and reverent Christians, who need the church and whom the church needs.

Consider another matter on which there is a sincere difference of opinion between evangelical Christians: the inspiration of the Bible. One point of view is that the original documents of the Scripture were inerrantly dictated by God to men. Whether we deal with the story of creation or the list of the dukes of Edom or the narratives of Solomon's reign or the Sermon on the Mount or the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, they all came in the same way and they all came as no other book ever came. They were inerrantly dictated; everything there—scientific opinions, medical theories, historical judgments, as well as spiritual insights,—is infallible. That is one idea of the Bible's inspiration. But side by side with those who hold it, lovers of the Book as much as they, are multitudes of people who never think about the Bible so. Indeed, that static and mechanical theory of

Fundamentals or Essentials In the Baptist Position Today

1. The competency and spontaneity of the individual soul in religion and life.
2. The authority of the spirit of God in man.
3. Liberty of soul and mind in the interpretation of truth and the expression of life.
4. Spiritual life in human relationships, the test of vital faith and creedal belief.
5. Spirit and life above letter and form.
6. The vital experience of Christ, in love to God and love to man, with all that this implies in human relationships, the essential thing in man's religious experience.
7. The competency of the spirit to lead the church in matters of belief, form and method, in the effort to establish the kingdom of God on earth today.

I believe that there are many who would be glad to have the Baptists at Indianapolis declare this to be the fundamental position of our churches in the world today.

Chas. H. Rust.

eration are among the commonest traditions of antiquity. Especially is this true about the founders of great religions. According to the records of their faiths, Buddha and Zoroaster and Lao-Tze and Mahavira were all supernaturally born. Moses, Confucius and Mohammed are the only great founders of religion in history to whom miraculous birth is not attributed. That is to say, when a personality arose so high that men adored him, the ancient world attributed his superiority to some special divine influence in his generation, and they commonly phrased their faith in terms of miraculous birth. So Pythagoras was called virgin born, and Plato, and Augustus Caesar, and many more. Knowing this, there are within the evangelical inspiration seems to them a positive peril to the spiritual life. The Koran similarly has been regarded by Mohammedans as having been infallibly written in heaven before it came to earth. But the Koran enshrines the theological and ethical ideas of Arabia at the time when it was written. God an Oriental monarch, fatalistic submission to his will as man's chief duty, the use of force on unbelievers, polygamy, slavery—they are all in the Koran. The Koran was ahead of the day when it was written, put, petrified by an artificial idea of inspiration, it has become a millstone about the neck of Mohammedanism.

From the Koran to the Bible

When one turns from the Koran to the Bible, he finds this interesting situation. All of these ideas, which we dislike in the Koran, are somewhere in the Bible. Conceptions from which we now send missionaries to convert Mohammedans are to be found in the Book. There one can find God thought of as an Oriental monarch; there, too, are patriarchal polygamy, and slave systems, and the use of force on unbelievers. Only in the Bible these elements are not final; they are always being superseded; revelation is progressive. The thought of God moves out from Oriental kingship to compassionate fatherhood; treatment of unbelievers moves out from the use of force to the appeals of love; polygamy gives way to monogamy; slavery, never explicitly condemned before the New Testament closes, is nevertheless being undermined by ideas that in the end, like dynamite, will blast its foundation to pieces. Repeatedly one runs on verses like this: "It was said to them of old time  but I say unto you"; "God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son"; "The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now he commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent"; and over the doorway of the New Testament into the Christian world stand the words of Jesus: "When he, the Spirit of truth is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." That is to say, finality in the Koran is behind; finality in the Bible is ahead. We have not reached it. We cannot yet compass all of it. God is leading us out toward it. There are multitudes of Christians, then, who think, and rejoice as they think, of the Bible as the record of the progressive unfolding of the character of God to his people from early primitive days until the great unveiling in Christ; to them the Book is more inspired and more inspiring than ever it was before; and to go back to a mechanical and static theory of inspiration would mean to them the loss of some of the most vital elements in their spiritual experience and in their appreciation of the Book.

Here in the Christian church today are these two groups, and the question which the Fundamentalists have raised is this: Shall one of them drive the other out? Do we think the cause of Jesus Christ will be furthered by that? If he should walk through the ranks of this congregation this morning, can we imagine him claiming as his own those who hold one idea of inspiration and sending from him into outer darkness those who hold another? You cannot fit the Lord Christ into that Fundamentalist mold. The church would better judge his judgment. For in the Middle West the Fundamentalists have had their way in some communities and a Christian minister tells us the consequence. He says that all the educated people are looking for their religion outside the churches.

Consider another matter upon which there is a serious and sincere difference of opinion between evangelical Christians: the second coming of our Lord. The second coming was the early Christian phrasing of hope. No one in the ancient world had ever thought, as we do, of development, progress, gradual change, as God's way of working out his will in human life and institutions. They thought of human history as a series of ages succeeding one another with abrupt suddenness. The Graeco-Roman world gave the names of metals to the ages—gold, silver, bronze, iron. The Hebrews had their ages too—the original Paradise in which man began, the cursed world in which man now lives, the blessed Messianic Kingdom some day suddenly to appear on the clouds of heaven. It was the Hebrew way of expressing hope for the victory of God and righteousness. When the Christians came they took over that phrasing of expectancy and the New Testament is aglow with it. The preaching of the apostles thrills with the glad announcement, "Christ is coming!"

In the evangelical churches today there are differing views of this matter. One view is that Christ is literally coming, externally on the clouds of heaven to set up his kingdom here. I never heard that teaching in my youth at all. It has always had a new resurrection when desperate circumstances came and man's only hope seemed to lie in divine intervention. It is not strange, then, that during these chaotic, catastrophic years there has been a fresh rebirth of this old phrasing of expectancy. "Christ is coming!" seems to many Christians the central message of the Gospel. In the strength of it some of them are doing great service for the world. But unhappily many so over-emphasize it that they outdo anything the ancient Hebrews or the ancient Christians ever did. They sit still and do nothing and expect the world to get worse and worse until he comes.

The Literal Expectation

Side by side with these to whom the second coming is a literal expectation, another group exists in the evangelical churches. They, too, say, "Christ is coming!" They say it with all their hearts; but they are not thinking of an external arrival on the clouds. They have assimilated as part of the divine revelation the exhilarating insight which these recent generations have given to us, that, development is God's way of working out his will. They see that the most desirable elements in human life have come through the method of development. Man's music has developed from the rhythmic noise of beaten sticks until we have in melody and harmony possibilities once undreamed. Man's painting has developed from the crude outlines of the cavemen until in line and color we have achieved unforeseen results and possess latent beauties yet unfolded. Man's architecture has developed from the crude huts of primitive men until our cathedrals and business buildings reveal alike an incalculable

Prayer

ETERNAL God, our Father, we have prayed to thee for many things lest by our sins we should destroy our lives and hurt thy cause. Hear us this morning as with eager prayer we lift up our hearts and seek from thee the grace of magnanimity, the ability to differ and yet love, the beauty of tolerance and of a large heart. Grant thy church this grace, possessing which alone we may be disciples of the Master who said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." We ask it in his name, amen.

advance and an unimaginable future. Development does seem to be the way in which God works. And these Christians, when they say that Christ is coming, mean that, slowly it may be, but surely, his will and principles will be worked out by God's Grace in human life and institutions, until "he shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."

These two groups exist in the Christian churches and the question raised by the Fundamentalists is: Shall one of us drive the other out? Will that get us anywhere? Multitudes of young men and women at this season of the year are graduating from our schools of learning, thousands of them Christians who may make us older ones ashamed by the sincerity of their devotion to God's will on earth. They are not thinking in older terms that leave dead of progress out. They cannot think in those terms. There could be no greater tragedy than that the Fundamentalists should shut the door of the Christian fellowship against such.

I do not believe for one moment that the Fundamentalists are going to succeed. Nobody's intolerance can contribute anything to the solution of the situation which we have described. If, then, the Fundamentalists have no solution of the problem, where may we expect to find it? In who concluding comments let us consider our reply to that inquiry.

Intolerance Solves no Problems

The first element that is necessary is a spirit of tolerance and Christian liberty. When will the world learn that intolerance solves no problems? This is not a lesson which the Fundamentalists alone need to learn; the liberals also need to learn it. Speaking, as I do, from the viewpoint of liberal opinions, let me say that if some young, fresh mind here this morning is holding new ideas, has fought his way through, it may be by intellectual and spiritual struggle to novel positions, and is tempted to be intolerant about old opinions, offensively to condescend to those who hold them and to be harsh in judgment on them, he may well remember that people who held those old opinions have given the world some of the noblest character and the most rememberable service that it ever has seen blessed with, and that we of the younger generation will prove our truest best, not by controversial intolerance, but by producing, with our new opinions, something of the depth and strength, nobility and beauty of character that in other times were associated with other thoughts. It was a wise liberal, the most adventurous man of his day—Paul the Apostle—who said, "Knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth up."

Nevertheless, it is true that just now the Fundamentalists are giving us one of the worst exhibitions of bitter intolerance that the churches of this country have ever seen. As one watches them and listens to them, he remembers the remark of General Armstrong of Hampton Institute: "Cantankerousness is worse than heterodoxy." There are many opinions in the field of modern controversy concerning which I am not sure whether they are right or wrong, but there is one thing I am sure of: courtesy and kindness and tolerance is an intellectual adventure for the truth." Can you imagine any man who is worth while turning from that call to the church, if the church seems to him to say: "Come, and we will feed you opinions from a spoon. No thinking is allowed here except such as brings you to certain specified, predetermined conclusions. These prescribed opinions we will give you in advance of your thinking; now think, but only so as to reach these results." My friends, nothing in all the world is so much worth thinking of as God, Christ, the Bible, sin, and salvation, the divine purposes for humankind, life everlasting. But you cannot challenge the dedicated thinking of this generation to these sublime themes upon any such terms as are laid down by an intolerant church.

The Old Home

*T*HERE'S an old-fashion house, in an old-fashion street,
In a quaint little old-fashion town;
There's a street where the cobblestones harass the feet.
As it struggles up-hill and then down.

*And, though to and fro through the world
I must go,
My heart, while it beats in my breast,
Where'er I may roam, to that old-fashion home
Will fly like a bird to its nest.*

*In that old-fashion house, in that old-fashion street,
Dwell a dear little old-fashion pair;
I can see their two faces so tender and sweet,
And I love every wrinkle that's there.*

ance and humility and fairness are right. Opinions may be mistaken; love never is.

As I plead thus for an intellectually hospitable, tolerant, liberty-loving church, I am of course thinking primarily about this new generation. We have boys and girls growing up in our homes and schools, and because we love them we may well wonder about the church which will be waiting to receive them. Now, the worst kind of church that can possibly be offered to the allegiance of the new generation is an intolerant church. Ministers often bewail the fact that young people turn from religion to science for the regulative ideas of their lives. But this is easily explicable. Science treats a young man's mind as though it were really important. A scientist says to a young man: "Here is the universe challenging our investigation. Here are the truths which we have seen, so far. Come, study with us! See what we already have seen and then look further to see more, for science

Altercation on Minor Matters

The second element which is needed if we are to reach a happy solution of this problem is a clear insight into the main issues of modern Christianity and a sense of penitent shame that the Christian church should be quarreling over little matters when the world is dying of great needs. If, during the war, when the nations were wrestling upon the very brink of hell and at times all seemed lost, you chanced to hear two men in an altercation about some minor matter of sectarian denominationalism, could you restrain your indignation? You said, "What can you do with folks like this who, in the face of colossal issues, play with tiddledywinks and peccadillos of religion?" So, now, when from the terrific questions of this generation one is called away by the noise of this Fundamentalist controversy, he thinks it almost unforgivable that men should tithe mint and anise and cummin, and quarrel over them, when the world is perishing for the lack of the weightier matters of the law, justice, and mercy, and faith. These last weeks, in the minister's confessional, I have heard stories from the depths of human lives where men and women were wrestling with the elemental problems of misery and sin—stories that put upon a man's heart a burden of vicarious sorrow, even though he does but listen to them. Here was real human need crying out after the living God revealed in Christ. Consider all the multitudes of men who so need God, and then think of Christian churches making of themselves a cockpit of controversy when there is not a single thing at stake in the controversy on which depends the salvation of human souls. That is the trouble with this whole business. So much of it does not matter! And there is one thing that does matter—more than anything else in all the world—that men in their personal lives and in their social relationships should know Jesus Christ.

Just a week ago I received a letter from a friend in Asia Minor. He says that they are killing the Armenians yet; that the Turkish deportations still are going on; that lately they crowded Christian men, women and children into a conventicle of worship and burned them together in the house where they had prayed to their Father and to ours.

During the war, when it was good propaganda to stir up our bitter hatred against the enemy, we heard of such atrocities, but not now! Two weeks ago, Great Britain, shocked and stirred by what is going on in Armenia, did ask the government of the United States to join her in investigating the atrocities and trying to help! Our government said that it was not any of our business at all. The present world situation smells to heaven! And now, in the presence of colossal problems, which must be solved in Christ's name and for Christ's sake, the Fundamentalists propose to drive out from the Christian churches all the consecrated souls who do not agree with their theory of inspiration. What immeasurable folly!

Well, they are not going to do it; certainly not in this vicinity. Never in this church have I caught one accent of intolerance. God keep us always so and ever increasing areas of the Christian fellowship: Intellectually hospitable, open-minded, liberty-loving, fair, tolerant, not with the tolerance of indifference as though we did not care about the faith, but because always our major emphasis is upon the weightier matters of the law.

Of Interest to Women

In addition to the presentation of the work of the Woman's Home and Woman's Foreign Societies during the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention, the custom of former years is being followed in having an all-day meeting especially for women. This will be held in the auditorium of First Church, Meridan and Vermont Streets, Indianapolis, on Tuesday, June 13. The morning session will begin at 10:30 and will be an open forum, at which time matters of interest relative to women's work will be discussed. At 2 p.m. there will be reports from the Continuation Campaign Directors and items of interest connected with the campaign, followed by addresses from missionaries of the Woman's Home and Woman's Foreign societies. At 8 p.m. there will be a program in the interest of the World Wide Guild and the Children's World Crusade, in charge of the Misses Alma and Mary Noble. Women expecting to attend the convention are invited to reach Indianapolis in time to be at these meetings on Tuesday.

On Saturday night, June 17, there will be a woman's banquet at the Spink Arms Hotel. Banquet tickets are $1.50 and will be in charge of the local committee. An interesting program is promised for the banquet.

FIRST CHURCH, INDIANAPOLIS

Our Convention City

The nerve center of a great and rich territory, and center of distribution. With no physical features to make it accessible, it has made itself not only accessible to the outside world, but to itself. Almost literally it had to dig itself out of primeval mud.

By T. J. PARSONS

IT was in 1820 that the state of Indiana named ten commissioners and instructed them to meet "at the house of William Conner on the West Fork of the White River," and proceed to select "a site which, in their opinion, shall be most eligible and advantageous for the permanent seat of government of Indiana."

Thus was Indianapolis located—truly a "Capital in the Wilderness," as the opponents of the site derided it. Fall Creek and Eagle Creek were "good mill streams," the commission reported; the location was purposefully a central one. Ceased there the natural advantages of the spot. Indianapolis was not born with a silver spoon in its mouth. There was no deep carved harbor to welcome the commerce of the world—no deep and silent river to bring caravans to its door.

A finger was placed on the map. "Here shall Indianapolis be." Just so Peter the Great pointed at the map of Russia and said: "That spot shall be St. Petersburg."

It was not until 1839 that the first railroad, the Madison & Indianapolis, connected the new capital with the "Gateway of the State." With the advent of railroad transportation, Indianapolis began to rise to its present position as a great mercantile city. With the later development of interurban electric lines a vast population was brought into intimate contact with the stores of the capital.

"Keep Step"

"Keep step with Indianapolis!" Indianapolis has taken seven-league strides but the merchants of Indianapolis have kept step. They have sent their couriers to the ends of the earth to bring back rich stuffs. Their buyers are known in the world's markets. They have erected splendid buildings where their merchandise is displayed to the advantage of those whom they serve. Perhaps these merchants of Indianapolis have more than kept step, for their city, though twenty-first in population, stands sixteenth in retail sales.

In the heart of a state of diversified agriculture and industry lies Indianapolis, a city of diversified industry. With its thousands of manufactories, large and small, with its unusual wholesale trade, and with its highly developed retail business, Indianapolis rides through the waters of panic or depression on an even keel.

Nowhere in the country has the general level of retail prices been lower than in Indianapolis. Nowhere has more constructive merchandising been called on. Nowhere has there been a firmer belief that the duty of the merchant to the community in a time when disaster might easily have been precipitated, was to "carry on."

It has been well said of Indianapolis that it is more truly a state capital than any other city in the country. Consider this! Call the roll of states! The average citizen has difficulty in naming the capitals of many of them. State after state has its governmental capital in one

HOME OF JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY ON LOCKERBIE STREET

*"O my Lockerbie street! You are fair to be seen—
Be it noon of the day, or the rare and serene
Afternoon of the night—you are one to my heart,
And I love you above all the phrases of art,
For no language could frame and no lips could repeat My rhyme-haunted raptures of Lockerbie Street."*
—James Whitcomb Riley.

city, and its true capital—its capital of trade, of finance, of energy, of culture—in another.

Not so Indiana. If Indianapolis may be called the Wonder City, among the justifications for that title must be the fact that Indianapolis is the capital of Indiana in all things.

The state of Indiana displays an affectionate pride in Indianapolis. To it the city owes the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, the state Capitol, and other great buildings and institutions. The growth of Indianapolis in size, civic worth and beauty is the expression to the country at large of the progressiveness, not only of a dynamic city but also of a state which holds its head high in the company of its compeers in the union.

Every day, from every point of the compass, the steam and electric railroads bring thousands of people to "the great shopping district" of Indiana. The buying pulse of the city is quickened by this infusion, and the retail stores of Indianapolis are stimulated by a state-wide confidence in their ability to assemble the best of merchandise and to sell it fairly and honorably.

Indianapolis takes pride, too, in her other resources for recreation and amusement. Her parks, her golf courses, her athletic clubs, her speedway, are expressions of the same virile, ambitious, progressive spirit which has made Indianapolis a great mercantile and industrial city.

Indianapolis people can play as well as work. They are friendly to clean, wholesome fun and sport. They believe in fun and sport, both as individuals and as citizens of a city which realizes that playgrounds and public golf courses are as necessary to civic welfare as pavements and sewers.

What does the map of Indiana mean?

It means that Indianapolis is the nerve-center of a great and rich territory; that in the central portion of the state the channels of trade and commerce lead straight to and straight from a natural central market place—a market place with immense advantages to offer both to its citizens and to the people of the state at large. Indianapolis is a center of distribution. It is not merely a buying market, nor merely a selling market. It combines both functions and makes possible economical delivery and profitable sale of the products of the country to the city, and of the merchandise of the city to the country.

Accessibility was not given to Indianapolis. The physical geography reveals no natural reason for it. As a matter of history, Indianapolis made itself accessible.

"The Capital in the Wilderness" almost literally had to dig itself out of the primeval mud. The whole backwoods state, save for the fortunate settlements along the Ohio and the lower Wabash, was feverishly engaged in this vitally important task from the early days until the beginning of the railroad era in the fifties.

In the thirties, immense paternalistic schemes of internal improvement were launched. Turnpikes, canals, railroads and river improvements were projected on a lavish scale. Begun in a spirit of wild speculation, they collapsed in 1839 in a welter of financial disaster. The only legacy to Indianapolis from this period still stands in the few miles of ditch between the city and Broad Ripple, now owned by the Indianapolis Water Company. This was constructed as a part of the Central Canal, which was planned to link the Wabash near Muncie with Indianapolis and to parallel White River to the forks.

The Key to Accessibility

Impossible canal projects, corduroy roads, and later, the plank roads of the toll-gate days, did not solve the problem of making Indianapolis an accessible city. The key was found in the railroads, which, in the decade before the Civil War, swiftly established Indianapolis as the central point of a system of railroads providing outlets in every direction.

Indianapolis is not only accessible to the outside world. It is also accessible to itself. It is not divided by physical barriers. There are no valleys to be bridged by costly viaducts, no wide rivers or bays to be crossed by slow ferries or undermined by tunnels. Indianapolis is one city in name and one city in reality.

Visitors to the city are struck by the number, size and quality of the stores and by their ability to serve the whole city and the surrounding territory.

As a Missionary Secretary Sees It

I SPEAK impersonally as a missionary secretary though in no way representing the group. As one of these secretaries I readily yield to the general conviction that a secretary of a missionary organization should take no part in the discussion of those theological questions which divide the denomination inasmuch as our distinctive task is to bring individuals and churches of every group into cooperation on a great common task. I would commend this same restraint, and objective to some of our pastors.

Being one of those drawn against his will from a pastorate, where I had looked forward to life long service, I may speak freely of methods of organization since this is the peculiar work to which missionary secretaries have been called. From this point of view I see confusion, controversy and forgetfulness of facts readily ascertained. If the present controversy could be confined to the realm of fact, a solution would not be so difficult.

What the Board of Promotion Did Not Do

The New World Movement is an objective. The Board of Promotion is a means. The two should be kept distinct in our thought to avoid confusion.

Where did the New World Movement come from? Not from the Board of Promotion for the Board of Promotion was not created until after the objectives of the New World Movement had been defined by the convention itself. The New World Movement technically came from a recommendation of a sub-committee of five appointed by the Laymen's organization and adopted by the convention itself, after the missionary societies had had opportunity through their executive boards and secretaries for much discussion of this plan prior to the meeting of the convention. The New World Movement actually sprang from a denominational conviction born from the loyalties roused by the spirit of the times. It was the convention which in this spirit defined the task and assumed it.

Some organization or method had to be employed. The Committee of Five appointed by the laymen in presenting its report made the following statement:

"The recommendations of this report in substance as herein contained have been presented to (1) a conference of secretaries of state conventions and other representatives of the denomination, held in Chicago, Jan. 22, 1919, (2) to the boards of managers of all the cooperating organizations at various dates in January and February, 1919, (3) to the executive committee of the managers of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board in February, 1919, (4) to a joint meeting of committees appointed by the boards of managers of the several cooperating organizations, and representatives of the board of education, the state conventions, and the city mission societies, held in Evanston, Ill., March 9, 10, 1919, (5) to the executive committee of the national committee of Northern Baptist Laymen, and (6) to the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention at its meeting in Chicago, March 11, 1919. They were unanimously approved by the three bodies last named."

As one who attended certain of these conferences I can testify that the discussion was thorough and certainly prayerful and earnest. The final action of the convention itself as recorded by the minutes (see page 201) was as follows:

"On motion of Secy. C. L. White, of New York, and after discussion by Pres. Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, of New York; Secy. J. Y. Aitchison, of Massachusetts; Rev. M. J. Twomey, of New Jersey; F. M. Fillebrown, of Rhode Island; Henry Bond, of Vermont; and F. W. Freeman, of Colorado, the report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

"The convention sang a doxology."
This action then was not a hasty and ill considered as has recently been represented.

The Board of Promotion did not commit the denomination to the Interchurch World Movement. The Board of Promotion itself had no part in this decision.

The Christian Platform and Program

The late Professor Borden P. Bourne occupied such a prominent position among American thinkers and Christian leaders that the following paragraphs from his last published work, "Studies in Christianity," merit peculiar attention:

WE should reduce the fundamental Christian doctrines to a statement of what we conceive the essential Christian facts to be, and should distinguish these, as facts to be proclaimed, from the various conceptions or theories of these facts, which make up the bulk of so-called doctrine.

Such statement might run somewhat as follows: I believe in God, the Father Almighty, and in Jesus Christ his Son, our Lord. I believe in the Holy Spirit, in the forgiveness of sins, in the kingdom of God on earth and in the life everlasting. Let this be the Christian platform; and for our program let that run, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

It is perfectly plain that this platform contains in principle all that is essential to Christianity; and that all who stand on this platform and work for this program are in the truest sense of the word Christians. It is equally plain that this platform would command, with scantiest exception, the assent of all the churches. This is the true continuity of Christian thought, the same yesterday, today and forever. This is the true faith, received everywhere and by all. This is the true orthodoxy, and the only thing that should be called orthodoxy. All else is theology, perhaps good, but in any case relatively unimportant, and in most cases absolutely unimportant. For the victories of Christianity have been and always will be won on this platform. It is by these mighty conceptions that we triumph; and it is by bringing them into the minds and lives of men that we spread the gospel, the good news of God.

And against the Christian program there can be equally no objection. The aim is not to build up an ecclesiastical hierarchy, or a churchly domination, but to do God's will on earth as it is done in heaven. Against this there is no law and no opposition, except from the selfish side of our nature. This program commands the assent of every sort of men in the church or out of it. It has been the dream of every good man from the beginning, and is the dream of every good man today.

Action was taken by the convention on motion by F. W. Freeman and responsibility placed upon the board by the following action:

"That in our cooperation with the Interchurch World Movement we act through the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention. It is assumed that the state conventions will act through their respective state organizations."

Missionary Status

Tendency is more significant than status.

As a missionary secretary concerned with the progress of the work itself and not primarily concerned about the future of the Board of Promotion, that is, concerned only with the objective not with the means, I would seriously question the wisdom of cancelling all pledges, as has been proposed by one writer, and going back to the pre-New World Movement basis which, by the way, cannot possibly be restored for every society has lost touch with its individual constituents.

The Board of Promotion Not a Missionary Agent

It has been asserted that the General Board of Promotion has undertaken to dictate missionary policy and method. After many conferences with the general secretaries of each of our national societies, and many of the state and city organizations, I would assert unqualifiedly that there is no ground for such a charge. The Board of Promotion has nothing to do with the appointment of missionaries; with the policy of the missionary societies or with the administration of missionary work; nor indeed has the board anything to do with the administration of any educational institution, the appointment or retention of any teacher or the policy of any of these schools or colleges. It is little more than a ways and means committee. It would probably have been wiser had it been called such.

Errors of Judgment

The failure to divide our main financial objection into (1) missionary budgets; (2) educational budgets has been most serious and should have been avoided.

The failure to divide our financial budgets into (1) current expense and (2) equipment and permanent funds, and to give the preference to current expense budgets, was a huge blunder.

The year of preparation for the New World Movement without even the normal income is one of the main causes of the present indebtedness. This should have been avoided. For example, the Foreign Mission Society accumulated a deficit of $808,000 during the year.

Probably state boards of promotion have not been quite sensitive enough to the needs of the national organization and somewhat too sensitive to the needs of the states and cities. It was probably a doubtful policy of the general board to give preferential consideration to states and cities.

With a clear recognition of facts and by placing responsibility for mistakes where the responsibility should rest and not elsewhere, and with a clear cut distinction between missionary objective and means or agency giving precedence at all times to the former, it should be possible to adjust our financial and other difficulties.

DOCTRINAL AGREEMENT NECESSARY

"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." I guess you will say here comes another, and as one of our great southern statesmen said: "I plead guilty to the soft impeachment."

I have read with interest your article on page 521: "Can two walk together except they be agreed." I have always thought this question answered itself, and I still believe it does, the way the writer meant it: they cannot.

I think that the writer meant two cannot walk together who are opposite to each other, pulling against each other. I know that individual Baptists can walk together happily, though they are not agreed on many things, but can they walk together when one believes with all his heart, mind and soul that Jesus is his Savior, the one who alone can redeem man from sin and cleanse him of all unrighteousness, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and as God says "equal with God"; while the other denies the deity of Christ, denies that he is the Son of God, and regards Christ as a human?

These two cannot walk together for they cannot agree on the very vital beliefs. Baptists as a body have always taught that Christ is divine, the Savior of men and the One who redeems man.

It is very, very unfortunate that Baptists have had men who deny the deity of our Lord creep into their ranks and bring strife and war into their midst. How can a man be called a Christian who denies that our Savior is the Son of God? "They were first called Christians at Antioch," and why were they called Christians; because they followed Christ and like Paul they had seen the "light."

"Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Can Unitarians and Trinitarians walk together?

WANTS A SHOW-DOWN

In the issue of THE BAPTIST dated May 6, were two interesting letters on kindred and timely subjects. One by Mr. Wallace Pence on "Christ and Sinners," and the other "A Question about the Fraternal Communication," dealing with the Fundamentalists, by Mr. Franklin W. Sweet.

Both of these letters dealt with attempts upon the part of those who are essentially infidels, if not avowedly, to foist upon the world their own theories in the name of and through the prestige of Christianity or religion.

Speaking as a Baptist, I challenge the right of either scientists or our own denominational infidels to rewrite the Bible to suit their own peculiar forms of infidelity. Whether or not our Fundamentalist brethren are right in their demand for a creed, it is time that those who apparently glory in the name Baptist while denying those things which give that name its historic significance and prestige were called to account and battled to a finish by those who adhere to the faith of our fathers.

Mr. Sweet is evidently of the opinion that our numerical integrity is of greater importance than our spiritual integrity. Such a proposition is indefensible and beyond argument. Too big a price can be paid for such a unity and such a peace. The situation is here and must be met and a compromise with infidelity is treason to our Lord and Master.

Can we, who have separated ourselves from other believers on modes of baptism and church organization, part now to separate ourselves from those who in their scholarly conceit deny the fundamental propositions upon which the structure of Christianity itself as well as our own denomination has been reared? I say no, and, further, I say that such a challenge if carried to a victorious conclusion will be conducive to the greatest good to the cause of Christ.

It is time that Christians, and Baptists in particular, demanded that those who refuse to believe the Bible and propound theories of their own in doing so sail under their own colors instead of posing as liberal Christians. P. S. WHITCOMB.

BURNING WITCHES

In a recent number of THE BAPTIST there appeared in The Forum a spicy and stimulating article by William E. Braisted under the title of "Call the game and have it over." One may infer the writer thought a little "frightfulness" was preferable to a continuation of the present ecclesiastical clawing that is in vogue. Probably a "fight to a finish" might be agreeable all around.

The first paragraph contains an old saying which no amount of correction seems to put out of commission. I quote: "We might better have a few burnings at the stake, as the dear Puritans did the witches, and then quit, rather than have this perpetual guerilla warfare." It is not strange that the writer should make this statement. Many have done likewise. Even so great a man as Bryce in his last work on "Modern Republics" makes a statement, apparently as a quotation, from the American Declaration of Independence, which is not in that historic document.

The underlying motive of Mr. Braisted, which seems to be to get rid of a lot of undesirables by heroically forcing and facing the issue involved, is doubtless quite agreeable to a very large number of all complexions of opinion. The method is not so agreeable or satisfactory. The remaining sediment of human weakness resident in many ministerial saints has made it possible for underhand assassination to be practiced. However, Christian gentlemen have no need of doing ill to others, nor have they any such desire, regardless of their belief.

Unfortunately for Mr. Braisted he has no warrant for abusing the Puritans, as his charge, in his allegation that they burned witches, involves. I take issue with him about his declaration that the Puritans burned witches. We New Englanders have no relish for such ferocious and damnable accusation against a group, in many ways, quite wonderful. The fact is no witch was ever burned to death by the Puritans in New England or any place else on this continent, because the party was a witch. The so-called witches had a hard time of it at the unsympathetic hands of the serious minded and "over-biblical" critics, but no witch was burned.

PROMOTION—A SUGGESTION

We have read much questioning recently and considerable criticism. Now suggestions are asked for. I respectfully submit the following.

The local pastor is the "key man" in the Baptist denomination. The autonomy of the local church is absolute. It may, or it may not, just as it chooses. In every case that I know of, cooperation or failure to cooperate, support or antagonism towards the denominational "program" is quite entirely due to the attitude of the pastor.

In respect to the extension work of the denomination, pastors may be classified under four heads: First, those who are interested, informed and sympathetic, and have the ability to impart their enthusiasm to the church and secure support; second, those who have the above qualities excepting that they simply cannot impart their enthusiasm and secure support; third, those who are indifferent to the work of the kingdom outside their local church; and, fourth, those who sincerely believe that every dollar which gets out of the hands of the local treasurer is just that much less for "current expenses." They have never grasped the significance of the words, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

The pastors of the first class, and the churches they lead need little help though they appreciate it. But with the other three, the life of the local church and the work of the kingdom demand that they shall have "outside help." This help comes very largely if at all from the Director of Promotion. I consider this title, "Director of Promotion," quite unfortunate, for it suggests to many the

The Chimney Corner

The Yesbut-ers!

(A little play wherein certain ladies, known to all of us, come to a committee meeting and say the time-honored things they never will say again.)

Enter Mrs. New Broom (wears a hat trimmed with small whisk-brooms. Spices letter on her living-room table, sits down, opens letter, reads aloud:) "Dear Mrs. New Broom, This is to notify you that at the annual meeting of the Woman's Alliance of the Third Baptist Church the members unanimously elected you as their new president for the ensuing year. It was with peculiar pleasure that this action was taken, as we all crave the leadership of the newcomer in our midst, and hope it may widen our sphere of usefulness to follow the plans which you may suggest from your experience in similar societies elsewhere. Hoping you may honor the election by its acceptance, I am Very faithfully yours, Dorcas Doorkeeper, Corresponding Secretary."

Mrs. New Broom (unpins her hat and leans head back in comfortable chair.) "That middle part is Dorcas Doorkeeper's own little addition—hope it may widen our sphere of usefulness to follow the plans you may suggest; I'm afraid the other members never voted for me for such a reason!" (Flicks one finger against the letter thoughtfully.) Shall I accept? I ought to, of course! Such an opportunity. But . . . (Looks off in space, shaking head in negation) "how could I ever do anything with some of those members," (dreams, eyes closed) "they wouldn't want to change one jot or one tittle . . ."

Enter Angel of the Churches (draped in white cheesecloth with loose tinsel girdle, tinsel fillet in hair; white tarletan wings sprinkled with Christmas diamond dust. Carries Bible, and large new broom with a conspicuous label tagged on the handle stating: "The Four Corners of the Globe Need Attention, Madam.") Hands broom to Mrs. New Broom, who takes it as if unconscious of the Angel's touching her on the shoulders and saying:) "Remember—A New Broom Sweeps Cleanest!" (Angel then goes to side of room opposite entrance door and reads from Bible, in impressive recitative monotone, Rev. 2:1-7, emphasizing verse 4.)

Mrs. New Broom (strokes handle of broom, nodding affirmatively:) "Yes, surely that's our church—I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." (Smiles reminiscently:) "Just think how jubilant first love is! How enthusiastic! How ecstatic! How self-forgetful! Nothing too difficult to do for the object of one's affection! Just suppose the women in our church had such a passion of devotion to thee, dear God, and to thy cause?" (Reads label on broom) "The four corners of the globe need attention. Indeed they do! And it appeals to my housekeeping instinct to get at the job right away and see if a new broom sweeps cleanest—even in our dear conservative Woman's Alliance. But oh, Mrs. Wet Blanket, will you approve of me, I wonder?"

Enter Mrs. Wet Blanket (a perpetually-shivering lady is she, wearing a blanket around her shoulders. Behind each of the four corners of this blanket secrete a sopping sponge, so that as she enters she may wring out all the moisture as she answers, mournfully:) "Yes, but I do hope you aren't aiming to make too many changes. Far be it from me to chill your ardor, but this isn't a society that likes to be stirred up; and I, for one, don't set much stock in changes, especially in a society like ours which hasn't any need to do things different from the way they have always done things. You aren't aiming to give us any more of a program, I hope, for the ladies do like to sit and talk, and if they feel you are trying to educate them I guess they'd stop coming altogether; I know I would. And I don't think you can count on any of us doing any more work, for we're all too busy now; and I think a society like ours ought to bring physical as well as mental relaxation. Indeed, there's no sense in making any changes at all, as far as I can see; I'm afraid there'll be a lot of complaining if you do. I don't want to discourage you any, but why not keep right on—"

Angel (reads from Bible) "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

Mrs. Wet Blanket (looks over her shoulder, lugubriously:) "It's all very well to quote scripture, but it's a ticklish thing to stir up a woman's society in a Baptist church! So why try it, anyhow?"

Angel (reads:) "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." (Mrs. Wet Blanket purses her lips and nods in a semi-convicted fashion.)

Mrs. New Broom: "Here comes Mrs. Alarm Clock, I do hope she will cooperate!"

Enter Mrs. Alarm Clock (her hat and the hem of her dress trimmed with magazine advertisements of clocks and watches; around her neck hangs a nickel alarm clock which goes off as long and as violently as possible while she is crossing room with her hands held up in dismay:) "Yes, but not in any money campaigns! My dear, don't you dare ask any of us for another cent, ever! I'm panic-stricken at the thought of money; people are sick of the mention of it; you mustn't ruin your presidency by trying to rob us! You mustn't send us to the poor-house, for I assure you I'm really alarmed at these appeals to our pocketbooks. We're always giving a dollar here and a dollar there; so where's the money coming from for another campaign I'd like to know?"

Angel: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse."

Mrs. Alarm Clock (holding up hands in fresh horror:) "Tithes? But how impossible—I'm simply petrified at the mere thought of lopping a tenth off my little income. It may be right, but I just don't dare try!"

Angel: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room to receive it."

Mrs. Alarm Clock (subsides; shakes head dubiously. Holds clock at her ear) "How do I know it's time for me to change my money methods?"

Angel (gently:) "Today if ye hear His voice, harden not your hearts."

Mrs. New Broom (gets a chair ready:) "Here's dear little Miss Wall Flower. My dear, anyone as pretty as you, is going to be a real addition to my staff!"

Enter Miss Wall Flower (a bashful shrinking girl, carrying an exceedingly long-stemmed artificial flower like a cane. Moves chair flat against the wall and leans back in it shyly:) "Yes, but you aren't expecting me to do anything, are you? For I'm not a bit popular with the ladies in our church—I'm so tongue-tied and diffident; but if you'll let me take a back seat I'd love to look on. Only I just can't stand any responsibility—"

Angel (kindly) "The love of Christ constraineth us."

Miss W. F. "Yes, but there's nothing I can do—nothing! I'd love to, if I only could."

Angel: And Jesus said, Simon son of John, lovest thou me more than these? Yea Lord, thou knowest I love thee. Feed my lambs."

Mrs. New Broom (delightedly) "Yes my dear, and I have the loveliest plan for you, for see, here comes Mother Apron Strings." (Greets newcomer.) "I knew I could depend on you to help in our woman's work."

Mother Apron Strings (a jolly motherly soul in an apron with proverbially long strings, to each of which at least four merry little children cling, prancing in behind her!) "Yes, but don't count on me to work, for I'm tied at home with this quiverful of children!" (Turns and looks at them, fondling head of the nearest) "How can I find time to come to meetings with such as these at my heels all afternoon?"

Mrs. New Broom (clapping hands) "But you can! For I have the nicest plan in the world, for here's little Miss Wall Flower who adores children—why couldn't we start a Children's World Crusade, to meet the same afternoon as our women meet so that all of us can bring our boys and girls along with us? There are the dearest programs for little Heralds, Miss Wall Flower, and plans for the Junior Crusaders that are simply splendid. Wouldn't you love to try?" (Miss W. F. nods her head eagerly, and the eight children scamper over to her—some of them hopping up and down, others clapping their hands, each shouting a remark: "Oh goody! goody!" "Mother, we're going to be Crusaders!" "I don't know how to be a Crusader, is it fun?" "Mother, you can go to meetings now!" etc.)

Miss W. F. (puts arms around children, who obviously are greatly drawn to her—for one youngster climbs up into her lap, another puts arms around her neck, others lean on her knees.) "I remember hearing last spring that every Crusader filled a Foot of Dimes. Well, I guess you and I could fill a Foot of Dimes, too!"

Children, excitedly: "Rather!" "I should say so!" "We'd love to!" "How do you do it?" "We could earn the money, you know." "Mother, we're going to fill a Foot of Dimes!" "Hurrah!" "I'm going to be a Crusader forever and ever and ever!"

Miss W. F. "So am I!" (They continue to cluster quietly around her.)

Angel: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Mrs. New Broom: "Think what a Woman's Alliance they will be when they grow up! Ah, here comes Miss Sensitive Plant. I'm so glad to welcome you, for I've heard what a dependable worker you are!"

Enter Miss Sensitive Plant (a lady perpetually in a state of feeling injured; carries a flower pot in her arms, and continually shields the puny green leaves from others' looks. Has a chip on shoulder toward audience. Enters, chin in air, pained expression on face.) "Yes, but I'm through doing everybody's work, Mrs. New Broom! I don't want to say anything, for I never complain, but I'm always being put on committees. I like to be on committees, but only last Spring when I worked so hard collecting money, who do you suppose got all the credit for it? The chairman of my committee! Indeed, she did! Wonderful organizer, people said. Pff! Organizer, indeed! And when they had a big luncheon, who got invited to sit up at the speaker's table? Why, that woman! Yet she never lifted her hand to solicit a single cent. And I know for a fact that she didn't pledge half as much as I did, either. Credit where credit is due, is all I ask. You mustn't think I have a chip on my shoulder, for I haven't!" (flicks off the chip disdainfully). "But I think that money and work deserve a little more recognition in some societies I could mention!"

Angel: "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them, otherwise ye have no reward of your Father who is in heaven."

Miss S. P. (much pained). "Yes, but—"

Angel (holding out hand in tired protest). "Be not weary in well-doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

Miss S. P. (Sits down to think it over; gathers her skirts around her carefully; with her chin inclined still at an injured angle!)

Mrs. New Broom: "I've heard only the kindest words of your capability ever since I came to town, Miss Sensitive Plant; I'm wondering if you don't imagine some of these slights. We appreciate... O Mrs. Dinner Bell, how good of you to come! I knew if it was a question of work or money you'd be here!"

Enter Mrs. Dinner Bell (an energetic lady, the hem of whose skirt is decorated with luscious colored advertisements of food; her hat trimmed with cups fastened by their handles to the crown, a clump of spoons and forks sticking upright at a becoming angle. A dinner bell suspended around her neck.) "Yes, but I believe only in painless giving. The only way to raise money for missions is by church suppers, believe me! People don't mind giving a dollar to the Lord if a good hearty meal fills their stomachs in exchange for it. I know what I'm talking about, for there's my husband! I'm not ashamed that he's a house painter, because you all know it; and maybe you can guess that a poor working-man hasn't a red cent to give for charity; but he has got an enormous appetite at the end of the day; so feed him at the church, and kill two birds with one stone, say I! There are dozens of hungry men in our church, so if we just get enough donations from the ladies, why the suppers will be all clear gain. If I had my way, I wouldn't say a single word about where the money's going, either; folks get sick and tired hearing about the heathen not being converted yet. Seems like we've all been talked to about missions since we were knee high to grasshoppers. Don't rub it in any more, just give a dandy supper with some cheerful music, and—"

Angel: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Mrs. D. B.: "Yes, but—!"

Angel: "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they... shall... be... filled."

Mrs. New Broom: "It is the old question of the Marys and the Marthas, isn't it? Oh, Mrs. White Elephant, how good of you to come! I knew if you got home from New York in time you'd be here."

Enter Mrs. White Elephant (a large impressive white-gowned lady of noble proportions, who uses a lorgnette in grand style. Wears a black hat garnished with white paper elephants, and has her chauffeur at her heels laden with a curious collection of sofa cushions, curtains, pictures, pitchers, books, etc. which she points to him to deposit on the floor.) "Yes, but how I hope you aren't soliciting money, my dear, for I'm bankrupt! Simply bankrupt. All during the war we kept putting off the redecoration of our house, so now at last it just had to be done. And you know how things cost this year, with painters charging such exorbitant wages. The New Rich, I call them! Oh pardon me, Mrs. Dinner Bell, I quite forgot that your husband—er—" (they look each other up and down) "er—what was I saying? Oh yes, don't ask me for money, for I've bought out New York. Yes!! But I wanted to do my little share toward our year's work, so I've brought over these things from the house. You probably recognize some of them! But I knew even odds and ends would be lovely for the barrel. We always send a barrel, don't we? I think it's such a satisfaction to feel that we can do our share in this beautiful way—"

Angel: "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing."

Mrs. W. E. (bristling pompously) "Yes, but—"

Angel: "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth only to poverty."

Mrs. New Broom: "Mrs. Drop-in-the-Bucket, come right in! I'm delighted to see you."

Mrs. Drop-in-the-Bucket (Too humble; carries a big bucket with only a thimbleful of water. Deprecatingly:) "Yes, but I'm such a nobody that I was almost afraid to come. The little I can do and give is only a drop in the bucket—" (inverts it and pours water out.)

Angel: "God hath taken the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty."

Mrs. D.-in-the-B., modestly, "Yes, but—"

Angel: "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."

Everybody nods: "How true that is! How very true!"

Angel: "I know thy works; behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."

The door swings open disclosing a group of Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Negroes, Immigrants, Alaskans, Indians, etc. in costume, stretching out their hands and singing "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," or the verses may be sung as separate solos by these different representatives.

Mrs. New Broom (pointing impetuously) "See, my dear friends, while we are feverishly withholding our service because of petty yesbuts,—yes but this' and 'yes but that'—the four corners of the globe need attention! In order that we may enter God's open door with all the devotion of first love, shall we not take these little fevers of ours to the Great Physician who cured Simon's wife's mother long centuries ago when she, too, was ill of a fever?"

MAKING AMERICA CHRISTIAN (MISSION-ARY TOPIC)

Genesis 12:1; Hebrews 11:10

Write to the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, or 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, for free leaflets on Americanization. "Christian Americanization, a Task for the Churches," by Charles A. Brooks, may be secured for 40 cents.

Christian Americanization is a process that must begin within the breast of native Americans. It is born of such a love of humanity, regardless of racial origin, as Jesus revealed in his relationships with the Samaritans, the Syrophenician woman, the centurion, and the Greeks—the "foreigners" of his country.

A careful investigation of actual conditions existing in immigrant centers reveals many erroneous opinions regarding the immigrant in the minds of well-meaning and otherwise well-informed American citizens. Unjust prejudice and unintentional misrepresentation of facts result from lack of knowledge.

Error Number 1. For instance, the immigrant has been charged with the fault of "straining charitable resources to the utmost." A study of the alleged principal causes of poverty in a number of large cities with a considerable percentage of foreign population reveals some interesting facts; the two columns of percentages for the native and for the alien are closely parallel except in two instances. The number of foreign-born persons whose principal cause of dependence is "neglect or bad habits of the bread-winner" is 4 per cent less than the number of natives for the same cause; while, on the other hand, the number of native Americans whose principal cause of poverty is owing to the "death or disability of the bread-winner" is 4 per cent less than the number of foreign-born for this cause. According to these figures, foreign-born persons, therefore, do not arrive at a state of dependence for blamable habits in as large numbers as do native Americans, while thousands of immigrants every year ruin their health and suffer serious accidents in the enrichment of American industry. They ought not to be slandered and misrepresented by the American people.

Error No. 2. Another common error is the supposition that the immigrant is responsible for a large amount of crime committed at the present time. The average citizen is very hasty in his conclusions that the alien is directly or indirectly the cause of most of the civil disturbances in our cities. Hear the testimony of the U. S. Immigration Commission: "No satisfactory evidence has yet been produced to show that immigration has resulted in an increase in crime disproportionate to the increase in adult population. Such comparable statistics of crime and population as it has been possible to obtain, indicate that immigrants are less prone to commit crime than are native Americans."

Remedy Number 1. Following the teachings of Christ, if we should do unto the aliens as we would that they should do unto us, we should find them much more easily assimilated into our population. If we should use our influence at the polls, in the existing philanthropic agencies, and in the church in behalf of securing for the immigrant blessings similar to those which Americans enjoy, he would soon be transformed into a more desirable fellow citizen and neighbor.

Remedy Number 2. There is need for playgrounds for the children in foreign sections of our cities. Why should the foreign child be deprived of nature's gifts, just because his parents live in crowded quarters? Playgrounds are less costly than juvenile courts. Pleasant places for social gatherings of young and old, agencies for the cultivation of the moral and religious nature, are lawful rights of which many an immigrant has been deprived. Christian men and women who shall be living witnesses of the gospel should be at work in every foreign colony. In progressive cities Christian community centers have been established to meet some of these needs. Unfortunately, perhaps fortunately for wide-awake Christian young people, there are not enough missionary funds nor enough trained missionaries to establish such institutions in every town and city. But wherever there is a foreign family in the neighborhood of a Christian church there is a large opportunity for the young people of that church.—Adapted from Service.

Michigan Delegates to St. Paul Convention

Through the State Transportation Leader plans have been perfected as in previous years for the care of Michigan delegates and all who wish to join them. Special train will leave Chicago via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway (The Radio Route) at 6:30 p. m., Wednesday, June 28, arriving at St. Paul at 7:20 a. m., Thursday, June 29. Returning trains for Chicago leave St. Paul at 8:35 p. m. and 11:30 p. m., Sunday, July 2. For reservations on this train address the undersigned, or Mr. F. N. Hicks, G. A. P. D., C. M. & St. P. Ry., 620 Marquette Bldg., Chicago. As President of the Michigan B. Y. P. U., I extend a cordial invitation to all eastern delegates and their friends to join our special train at Chicago and make it an exclusive B. Y. P. U. Special."

THOUSANDS

of Baptist young men and young women are turning their eyes this month toward Saint Paul.

Because

- The event of the coming convention has been printed, spoken, heralded, nationally?
- They have heard of the unprecedented organized preparation for the entertainment of the convention?
- Of the summer beauty of the Twin Cities of Saint Paul and Minneapolis, and their state of ten thousand lakes?
- They have been attracted by such things of the program as "Religion at 21"?

NOT LIKELY

- "God moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform."

MORE LIKELY

For four days, eleven buildings will be used for the conferences of this "Forward with Christ" convocation. The entire Northwest awaits its opening June 28.

Will Your Young People Be There?

The prayers of the entire Baptist denomination are asked for this unforeseen, unexampled concern and interest nationally in this coming Convention of Baptist Young People.

Strengthening the Stakes

By WILLIAM H. MAIN

Our young people need a higher conception of the meaning of loyalty. The church must be first, for Christ founded the church, and is its Head. We young people do not mean to forget this, but sometimes we do. We have been in danger, sometimes of forgetting that the young people are a part of the church, and not the church. Some young people, not many, have been in the habit of attending only the young people's meetings, and giving only through the treasury of the young people's society. Have we been in danger of forgetting that older people know more than young people? The young people should be in closest touch with the pastor and officers of the church, and the pastor and officers should be in the closest touch with the young people. With the splendid consecrated body of young people such as we have today, I am sure that these dangers need but to be mentioned.

Spare not! This is the way to enlarge. Why should Christians do things on a small scale? Does society spare itself? Do business men spare themselves? Do places of amusement spare any expense? Why then should Christians? Are we playing at Christian service or do we mean to take this world for Christ? Are we really in earnest?

When the crusaders entered the Holy Land, small crosses were distributed to inspire the men to heroic deeds. There were not enough to go around. One man heated a piece of iron to a white heat and burned a cross on his bare breast. Others caught the idea, and crowded forward, crying, "Burn crosses on us." Have we this kind of earnestness?

The Cord of Better Living

Lengthen the cord of better living. We should never forget what Emerson meant when he said: "What you are thunders so loud, I cannot hear what you say." Life speaks louder than words. Lengthen the cord of deeper consecration. Christian consecration is to have Christ and his kingdom first in our lives. Lengthen the cord of earnest and frequent prayer. Was not Tennyson right when he said: "More things are wrought by prayer, than this world dreams of?" We may not understand the philosophy of prayer, but we can reason from cause to effect. We pray, and God answers. This is all we need to know. God always answers prayer. Sometimes he says "Yes," and sometimes he says, "No." Whatever his answer is, it is best for us.

Strengthen the stakes! Drive them in deep! The cords and the tent depend upon the stakes. Let the stake on the north be the absolute divinity of Christianity. Its Founder is divine, and it is the only true religion. Let the stake on the east be the sublime mission of the Christian church which is to give this divine Christianity to the world. The great purpose of Christianity is to save the lost and bless the saved.

A Clock without Hands

Let the stake on the south be the great purpose of our salvation. "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again."

Let the stake on the west be uncompromising belief in the great doctrines of our faith. Let us build up faith, not tear it down. If we have doubts, let us, for the sake of an unbelieving world, keep them to ourselves.

Last of all, let us remember that there is no true success in the young people's movement unless we are forming Christian character. Character is a mighty force in the world, but Christian character is the mightiest force in the world. Christian character is eternal. Eternal! The clock of eternity has no hands, the dial no shadows. The longer we look the shorter seems time. It is recorded that Adam lived 930 years; and he died. This is the universal epitaph of man. The majestic columns of the Propylea still stand; but Pericles died. We still sing Homer's songs, but Homer died. We can visit Mars' Hill, but Paul died. Angelos' "Moses" is still untouched by age, but Angelo died. We stand in wonder before "The Last Supper" or "The Transfiguration," but DaVince and Raphael died. We look in awe at "St. Paul's" or at "St. Peters," but Wren and Bramante died. Shall God's masterpieces live shorter lives than buildings they build, the pictures they paint or the songs they sing? Nay! Nay! When these things shall have all passed away, man's real life shall be but begun. There are three inscriptions over the doors of the great cathedral in Milan. The first is—"All that which pleased us is but for a moment."

The second, "All that which troubles us is but for a moment."

The third inscription, which is over the central entrance, is: "That only is important which is eternal."

"Take thou no thought for aught save truth and right

Content, if such thy fate, to die obscure, Youth fails, and honor; fame may not endure—

And loftier souls soon weary of delight. Keep innocent! Be all a true man ought:

Let neither pleasure tempt nor pain appal!

Who hath this, he hath all in his having naught.

Who hath it not, hath nothing, having all."

International Uniform Lesson for June 25

JUDAH'S PROSPERITY AND ADVERSITY

Lesson: Scripture for Weekly Lessons of the Quarter.

Golden Text: Psalms 33:12

Looking Backward

For three months the rise and fall of the Kingdom of Judah have been under consideration. The life of the people of the Southern Kingdom from the beginning of the rule of the godly King Asa to their downfall under weak, self-seeking Zedekiah has been followed.

Instead of being a mechanical, rather tiresome affair, the review lesson offers opportunity for the lesson of the quarter. Weeks of preparation have led to it. Now comes the opportunity to consider the entire history of the Southern Kingdom showing the effects of the policies of the different rulers, the work of the priests, of the prophets—studying it as a whole—a tapestry into which the individual lessons of each week have been woven.

Presentation

There is no doubt but that for such an hour of study the discussion method is best—if, indeed, it is not the best plan for any sort of a lesson. A few pointed topics which will serve as leaders to cover the quarter's work to a great extent might be given out the preceding week or on the previous Sunday—all the topics given to each member of the class so that the entire class may be prepared to talk on each topic. It is discussion that gives life and permanent value to such a lesson. The questions might be on this order: Why did Judah outlast Israel? Compare Joash and Uzziah. Was Zedekiah's weakness sin?—one leading question to bring home the point of each Sunday's lesson. As there are twelve lessons to consider and the time for discussion is probably twenty-five to thirty minutes, not more than two minutes should be allowed for the discussion of one question, nor should one person monopolize this two minutes. Two or three should talk on each topic. If the lesson has been properly handled before class time, the teacher need do little more than direct the discussion, offering a suggestive question if the class seems to be missing the point or going astray from the subject. The subject must be adhered to; there is a reason for each lesson, and to get the good from the whole, no question must be put aside for some other subject of discussion.

Our Own Folks

Ohio Baptists

By J. W. WEDDELL

The Ninety-seventh Convention of Ohio Baptists was held May 22-25 at Fidelity Church, Cleveland, Rev. John Raymond, pastor. Fidelity Church was formerly called Free-will Baptist, but is one with us today. The utmost of amity, fraternity, brotherly love and good cheer was everywhere. Not one dissentient note was heard. Every address was deeply evangelical and at the same time broadly aggressive and progressive. By general consent it was the best meeting the churches of Ohio have ever seen and the spiritual and devotional atmosphere was marked to the close. Rev. F. A. Stiles, of Middletown, conducted the noon hour of prayer and brought a message of spiritual power each day. Evangelism and church efficiency were the major themes, emphasis being placed on the group meetings of pastors held week ends over the state under the guidance of Rev. C. H. Stull, state evangelistic director, with the expert assistance of General Evangelistic Secretary Dr. H. F. Stilwell and local pastors of soul-winning gifts. This is called the "Ohio Plan" and it has wrought splendid results throughout the state this year.

Rural and community church effort was also particularly stressed, and the remarkable coalition of nearby Baptist companies in and about St. Paris under Rev. Clive McGuire received earnest attention. The speakers from abroad were Dr. A. W. Beaven of Rochester and Mrs. Helen Montgomery, of New York, and they lifted the great audiences to the heights of effective enthusiasm. Dr. Beaven with his ringing discourses on "The Challenge of Youth to the Church" and "Carrying the Flag," established himself in the estimate of Ohio Baptists as an outstanding leader in forward-looking church efficiency. Along with these were popular presentations by Rev. H. T. Houf, who preached the annual sermon; Rev. A. C. Archibald, recently come to Youngstown, who, by general consent gave the evangelistic keynote of personal evangelism to all the sessions; Rev. W. L. Steeves, the new and esteemed pastor at Lima, who gave a fine specimen of doctrinal exposition; and Prof. F. G. Boughton, who delivered the annual education address. Dr. H. F. Stilwell gave two of his strong inspirational appeals and Rev. F. G. Cressey cheered all with his report of successful promotion board work in the state.

The per capita rate toward benevolences has grown in five years from $1.46 to $8.01, $626,437 being Ohio's aggregate for 21-22. The obituary report memorialized four pastors who have passed on: Doctors Powell, Palmer, Rose and Lapp, well-known and beloved of all. At the same time a large number of new pastors were welcomed: Brethren Bates, Billieson, McKay, Hubbard, Harrien, Miller (O. E.), Smith (M. W.), Donaldson, Bowser, Landis, Gow, Thoms and Archibald.

The convention voted to go to Cambridge next year where Rev. A. R. Stark, formerly of Cleveland, has lately assumed the pastorate, the preacher of the annual sermon being named as Dr. Franklin Sweet of Cleveland.

In the choice of officers, E. H. Rhoades of Toledo was enthusiastically reelected to his seventh year's incumbency as president, with Dr. David Bovington as vice-president. This brief report would not be even measurably complete without alluding to the thronged and interesting meetings of the women both in the auditorium and at the banquet, where a great happy company of missionaries were introduced and the work of the women's societies outlined.

"O'er the Stands"

"O'er the stands in flaming crimson Harvard's banners fly..."

Yes, it was the swinging Harvard football song. It came from the bunch over

J. R. QUICK, RIVER AVENUE CHURCH,

at the right and if it wasn't quite up to Cambridge time, it didn't fall a bit short of Cambridge spirit. There was Davis, the captain (a Judson College freshman), and Morton. They were Anglo-Indians. There was Laurie, the teacher from the Shan School in the hills; Kya Byu and his pupil Edward Kaing from Tharrawaddy; and San Twe, another Judson freshman. They were all Karens. Then there was Aye Waing, a Christian, Aye Pe, a Buddhist, and Tin Kyaing, who is not quite either. These three were Burmans, though Tin Kyaing has a touch of China. Aye Pe is a Judson sophomore, and so was Tin Kyaing before he went out to teach. Queer crowd to be singing "O'er the stands" and in the summer capital of Burma, too!

This is how it happened. The fourteenth annual session of the Summer Bible Assembly went in for a new line of athletics this year. All of the 150 delegates who could jump over a blade of grass were induced to enter a competition and divided into teams. These teams were then named after some of the colleges and universities that are best known in Burma. The men had Harvard, Oxford, Cambridge, Calcutta, Madras and Rangoon; the women had Wellesley and Gin-ling. There were volley-ball and baseball, and three individual tests: the pull-up, the push-up, and the standing broad jump. Each win and each qualification in the tests counted points for the team. Of course Harvard won. But there were some surprises, too. The Madras team consisted wholly of Boy Scouts, with Mr. Paul R. Hackett (the new Sunday school and young people's secretary for Burma) as general inciter and exciter. Every one thought they would be outclassed by their older and more experienced competitors, but they made a very creditable showing: their scoutmaster even tied for first place in the jump at 8 feet 9 inches and one of the boys themselves did 8 and 7. Mr. Hackett is "some exciter." There was a tennis tournament, too, in which Laurie of "Harvard" and Richard Ba Te, of "Calcutta," both young Karen teachers, took the final away from Mr. Hinton of Mandalay and Mr. Dyer of Immanuel, Rangoon. The week wound up with an afternoon of comic races, after which the tennis cup was presented and the standings of the teams announced. It was this announcement that instigated the Harvard song.

The assembly was not all athletics, however. From "setting-up" at 6 a. m. to the end of the platform meeting at 9 p. m., there was a full program for many different groups: Bible classes in three languages, classes for preachers, Sunday-school teachers, scouts, women, singers and young people about to choose vocations. The assembly was especially fortunate in having present, quite unexpectedly, Dr. and Mrs. Robbins, just before their return to America. Their itinerary called for a visit to Namkham in the mountains near the Chinese border, but a Burmese prince started a rebellion—but that is another story. Dr. Robbins' message on the "World Kingdom" had that old student movement ring that has sent so many of us to the foreign field in the last thirty years. Let these extraordinarily likable young people (and the assembly was largely made up of young teachers and students) catch that spirit and we shall yet put Burma "on the map."

Mission Work at Locke

By MARY MAXWELL

Our work among the Chinese at Locke, Cal., is a new work. I am the first American missionary, and our needs are many. We expect to have our new building soon. This will meet the need of more room. At present our little room will hardly accommodate those who attend the Gospel meetings, and Sunday school. The Chinese show a marvelous interest in the Gospel and the better things of life. It is very encouraging when we see from ten to twelve women in the audience. There are as many or more women in Walnut Grove who will be coming, I believe, when it is possible for me to bring their children to kindergarten, for it has proved that "the way to a mother's heart is through her child." At present I have a kindergarten with fourteen enrolled, all children of kindergarten age in Locke, and when I get the car that some good soul is going to give us, I will be able to take the children of Walnut Grove to Locke where they will attend kindergarten. In this way about thirty little folks will be in daily contact with Christian teaching. It is beyond us to realize what this Christian training will mean to America and the lives of these who will be the mothers and fathers of tomorrow.

We have about forty or fifty young people and children between the ages of sixteen and twenty-two who already attend our services. A number of these are Christians and about twenty are waiting for baptism.

Isleton and Courtland, one eight miles up the river, and the other ten miles down the river have not been touched by us, owing to the lack of a car, but these people are not the only ones that are being neglected, there are many Chinese living on ranches whom we have not been able to call on owing to the same reason—"lack of a car."

I have a friend who always sings a song about the things she wants a few weeks before Christmas, she usually gets what she wants. I am trying her method. I am singing and praying

"Send a Car"

There's a call comes ringing o'er the mountain range,
Send a car! Send a car!

There're Chinese to rescue, there're Chinese to save.

Send a car! Send a car!

Chorus

Send a car! a blessed Gospel car!

Let it come towards the setting sun.

Send a car! a blessed Gospel car!

It will preach the Gospel near and far.

We have heard the Chinese call for us to come.

Send a car! Send a car!

And a car we need if to them we would run.

Send a car! Send a car!

We will pray that some good soul will meet this need.

Send a car! Send a car!

Then the Gospel message our Chinese will heed.

Send a car! Send a car!

Let us not neglect the work we have begun.

Send a car! Send a car!

Let us tell of God that all for him be won.

Send a car! Send a car!

Wanted—A Missionary

For Salvador, Central America

Applicant should not be over thirty-three years of age, and should be a college and seminary graduate. Successful experience in Spanish-speaking work elsewhere may be accepted when desirable, in lieu of completely meeting the above requirements.

Rev. William Keech, for twelve years the efficient general missionary of the Home Mission Society in Salvador, is prevented from returning to his field because of the health of his family. It is urgent that a missionary be found as soon as possible for the station formerly cared for by Mr. Keech.

Correspondence should be addressed to Rev. C. S. Detweiler, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

Big Bible Circulation

The biggest year of Bible circulation since the high levels of the war period, is reported by the American Bible Society in its annual report. The total number of volumes circulated during the year was 4,855,464, which is more than 1,000,000 in excess of the distribution of the preceding year. The largest increase is shown in China, where 2,372,730 were circulated. From Japan, the Near East, and all of Latin America, there has come an increased demand so great that the society has been unable to meet it.

During the year, the society has been busy with many important translation programs. The revised Spanish New Testament has been completed and will be ready for distribution during the coming year. Translation work has gone forward also in Luragoli for missions in British East Africa; in Quechua for the Bolivian Indians; in Zulu for the black people of South Africa; in K'pelle for use in Liberia. In China large parts of the Scriptures have been issued in the new phonetic script, which is a simplified written form endorsed and promoted by the government.

WORK is proceeding rapidly on the new edition to First Church, Evanston, Ill., of which James M. Stifter is pastor. The building will be ready for occupancy about Thanksgiving time. The cost will be about $225,000, nearly all provided for. This cut-stone building is, as the chairman of the finance committee said, "The gift of one generation to that following."

In anticipation of dedicating the building this fall there is now actively at work a committee of twenty, visiting and studying programs of successful work with young people in churches of similar equipment east and west. The presence of Northwestern University and other educational institutions in Evanston gives this church a large field in ministering to students.

During the year the society has arranged for the reorganization of its manufacturing program and hopes thereby to largely increase its output. It will make use of the largest and best organized printing concerns in America for the rapid production of its books in many languages for use in all parts of the world. It will continue to use its own plates and exercise painstaking supervision of versions in accordance with its policy of over 100 years.

the churches of the New London Association, together with invited guests from other associations of the state and Rhode Island. The council convened at eleven o'clock with Rev. D. A. Pitt, pastor of Central Church, Norwich, moderator; Rev. R. D. Trick, pastor of Third Church, Norwich, clerk. The usual formalities were followed by the presentation of the candidate by the church clerk, Mr. George E. Briggs. Mr. Nield's account of his conversion, call to the ministry, and statement of Christian doctrine was remarkably clear and satisfactory. Unanimously the council voted and authorized the church to proceed with the ordination service. The formal service of ordination was held at 2:30 o'clock, the moderator in charge; sermon was delivered by Rev. Charles A. Merrill; ordaining prayer by Rev. A. B. Coats, secretary of Connecticut Convention; charge to the church, Rev. Chester H. Howe, charge to the candidate, Rev. George H. Strouse; welcome to the larger field of service by Rev. H. B. Sloat, director of promotion. Mr. Nield has been on the field approximately two years. The Lebanon church participated in the New World Movement, and has at the close of the second fiscal year, paid in more than 50 per cent of its quota.

NEW YORK

CONGREGATIONS AT BAPTIST TEMPLE, Brooklyn, are keeping up to nearly high-water mark under the able preaching of the men who have been supplying since the going of Dr. J. C. Massee. The prayer meetings are well sustained with between 300 and 400 in attendance every Wednesday night. The Pulpit Committee of ten members, made up of three trustees, three deacons and four (two men and two women) representing the church at large, is still looking for a man who is able and willing to carry forward the work of this great church now ninety-nine years old and in the heart of Brooklyn. This church has not extended any call since the resignation of Dr. Massee on April 15.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 18, the class day program of the teacher training department of First Church, Johnson City, took place, the program consisting of class history, will, prophecy, address of welcome and a farewell address by Harvey Evans, superintendent. On Sunday evening, May 21, occurred the graduating exercises of a class of fifteen who had completed the full three years' course, Supt. of Teacher Training Selden S. Roberts of the N. B. C. from Philadelphia, giving the address and presenting the diplomas. The church has been blessed under the pastorate of Rev. L. E. Ford, who began his work there in 1915. From the beginning "the people have had a mind to work" as is evidenced by the teacher training work, the new $90,000 educational building, now in use seven days a week and by the Storehouse Tithers' Association of about 100 members. This has proved one of the greatest blessings both to the church and the tithers, in spite of the fact that it is made up of poor wage-earners. It has brought into the church for kingdom purposes over $18,000 in the last three years. This church is continuing to send strong laborers into the harvest fields. Among the older men are Harding, of Norwich; Chambers, of Oneida. Among the more recent: Hawley, of Corning; Morrison, Warren Center, Pa.; Sheerer, of Cal.; Everett, N. J.; Mary Evans who graduates this year from the Baptist Missionary Training School, Philadelphia; Claud Smith, Colgate and Orion Hess, who is to enter this fall.

NEW JERSEY

EVANGELIST HARRY W. VOM BRUCH and his party conducted services in Mt. Pleasant Church, Newark, in April. The spiritual life of the church was greatly enriched and ninety-nine cards were signed, for reconsecration and for decision for the Christian life. Baptism was administered by Pastor Powell each Sunday morning of the campaign. May 7, at the Communion Service, five received the hand of fellowship; and that same evening four others were baptized. Baptism takes place practically every other Sunday at Mt. Pleasant.

MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE SUDDEN DEATH of Rev. Wm. P. Stanley, aged 45, formerly of Portsmouth, N. H., is lost a scholarly and well-equipped minister. He was a graduate of Harvard and took graduate studies at Rochester and at Edinburgh, specializing in New Testament and theology. His ordination and first pastorate were at Oberlin, Ohio. He was twelve years at Portsmouth and was strong in church and city.

THE CHURCH AT MATTEPAN has unanimously called Rev. A. B. Webber, who has been five years pastor at Avon, making an admirable record there. Pastor Webber goes to one of the most promising fields on the rim of the city, and appreciates the opportunity it affords. He is one of the best of the recent Gordon graduates.

DR. EDWARD P. TULLER is deep in the hearts of the people at the Glendale Church, Everett. He and Pastor Henry E. Hodge of First Church make a strong team in that busy city. Both churches have generously shared the Easter ingathering.

DR. THEODORE L. FROST settles at Braintree, succeeding Rev. Guy Bleakney in that pastorate.

AT WEST MEDFORD, after an interval of about a year, which has been made rich and fruitful by Rev. F. W. Lockwood, one of our best supply pastors, the church has called Rev. E. A. Elwell, formerly of So. Berwick, Me., who begins his work at Medford June 1.

AT CENTRAL CHURCH, MIDDLEBORO, the pastor has been stressing evangelism at the regular Sunday evening services. Decisions for Christ have been frequent in the after-meetings held each Sunday evening. As a result of this work the pastor baptized nine on Easter Sunday and one on Sunday, May 28. He also baptized one young man into the fellowship of the North Middleboro church. On the evening of May 5 the annual roll-call of the church was held. About 275 members sat down together at the tables. A larger percentage of members than usual responded. Encouraging reports were given by the various organizations of the church. The address was delivered by Prof. Woodman Bradbury of Newton Theological Institution who spoke on "The Future of the Church." The average attendance of the Bible school has risen during the winter. In the fall the Junior Department will be organized as a separate department and will be given a room in which to meet by itself. Rev. C. Raymond Chappell begins the fourth year of his pastorate on July 1.

CONNECTICUT

MAY 16, REV. EDWARD E. NIELD, pastor of Lebanon Church, was set apart to the work of the Christian ministry. The council consisted of representatives from

First Annual Meeting of Woman's Missionary Society

Held in Hartford, May 11, upon invitation of the Woman's Missionary Society of South Church. It marked the first anniversary of the union of missionary interests of Connecticut women and was one of rejoicing as well, because of the results of the Continuation Campaign, conducted under the leadership of Mrs. J. D. Rough, Connecticut women having gone "over the top" by some $10,000.

Principal speakers were: Miss Helen Hudson, representing foreign work; Miss Albertine Bischoff, home, and Mr. Paul C. Meng, a Chinese student of Hartford Theological Seminary.

The ordinary routine of the program was brightened by the presentations of "The Missionary Drug-store," given by the World Wide Guild of the South Church, and of "Her Choice," by young girls of the Italian Mission of Hartford.

In a set of resolutions presented by Mrs. H. B. Sloat and adopted by the society, the women of Connecticut having already given proof of their financial and spiritual support to the leaders of our denomination, pledged like support during the coming year and also their prayers for the coming convention at Indianapolis.

Churches of Hartford carried off the honors of the State Reading and Bible School Contests, Asylum Ave. and First Church receiving the awards.

ILLINOIS

SELF-DENIAL WEEK recently held in Cairo Church brought in about $750. Many have been added to membership, but since the flood many members have left the city. The pastor, Dr. Wm. P. Pearce, has been preaching every Sunday night on the commandments. He leaves June 23 until September for Europe. His daughter, who is taking a pre-medical course in Ripon College, will accompany him. During his absence Rev. Long of the Northern Baptist Seminary will occupy his pulpit.

MAY 1, DR. J. W. HOYT, pastor of Belden Avenue Church, Chicago, commenced a series of sermons on doctrinal subjects. Judging by the number who gathered to hear the first one, there is a deep interest in these subjects. Belden continues to prosper, and the plans under way to allow for its broadening influence, are nearing fruition. Additions to membership, through baptism, letter and experience, continue in large numbers.

FIRST CHURCH OF MACOMB passed through a gracious revival, April 9-May 1, conducted by the pastor, Rev. L. M. Westrate, who was assisted by Prof. and Mrs. C. B. Brooks of Waterloo, Iowa, as singing evangelist and pianist. The results were seventy conversions. This is the third campaign conducted by the pastor for three consecutive years and each campaign has been bigger with more conversions. An evangelistic band has been organized to carry on the spirit of evangelism. Prayer meeting has ranged between forty and sixty and Sunday school has been passing the 250 mark out of a membership of less than 400.

FIRST CHURCH, JACKSONVILLE, REV. A. P. Howells, pastor, is removing from the north end of its property the oldest meeting house in the city, to make room for the erection of a religious education building to be constructed in the near future. The old frame building, recently used as the Baracca House, was built in 1831 of timber hewn from Diamond Grove, now the city cemetery. As it was a Presbyterian meeting house, Drs. Beecher and Sturtevant, founders of Illinois College, frequently occupied the pulpit.

REV. L. M. DUNK conducted three weeks of special meetings at Centralia Church, Rev. G. H. Murch, pastor. Thirty-six were received for baptism and seven by experience and letter. The church is in splendid condition for aggressive work.

OHIO

REV. F. A. MAIER, the new associational evangelist for the Marietta Association, began his first work with the Torch Church, where he held a week's meetings the first of May. Two were added to the church. Congregations were large and interest good. Mr. Weeks and Mr. Decker, two consecrated laymen from Marietta, filled the pulpit on Mothers' Day, rendering invaluable service.

PORTSMOUTH IMMANUEL reached a record of attendance and interest on Mothers' Day when 324 were present at Bible school. A mothers' and daughters' banquet was held on the evening of May 19, where eighty-five were seated around the tables. All departments of the church are live and growing.

REV. TALLIE WILLIAMS of Globe and Miami reports that the outlook is brighter in both churches. Several have recently come into the churches, both by baptism and by letter. Evangelist Bassett aided him in meetings in Miami.

VAN WERT FIRST CHURCH had a splendid two weeks' revival meeting preceding Easter, conducted by the pastor Rev. Albert Read. Ten adults were given the hand of fellowship on Easter Sunday, four received by baptism, three by letter and three by experience.

REV. M. R. SHELDON, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Bucyrus, was elected superintendent of the community daily vacation Bible school by a committee of the Men's Federated Bible classes and the ministers of that city. Eleven Sunday schools will participate.

Dayton Association

The pastors of the association held the last meeting, before vacation season, at First Church, Dayton, May 8, presided over by the Dr. J. B. Slocum. Election of officers: Rev. J. M. Cosby, of Tippecanoe City, president; Rev. J. C. MacFarlane, of Memorial Church, vice-president;

REV. J. L. JONES, WEST VIEW, INDIANAPOLIS

Rev. W. B. Sloman, of Third St., secretary; Rev. E. O. Miller, of DeGraff, treasurer. Report of the churches:

Memorial:—Pastor MacFarlane baptized seven and received in all fourteen. Pastor has the prayer and sympathy of the brethren in the critical illness of Mrs. MacFarlane.

Troy:—Pastor Brandt has had a gracious revival; baptized twenty-four and fifty-four have been received.

Linden Ave.:—Pastor Johnson baptized twenty-one and thirty were received. Pastor Johnson was made president of the Baptist Union of the city for the year.

Colorado Ave.:—Pastor Bagby baptized eight and received one by letter. The church is to be decorated.

DeGraff:—Pastor Miller and people rejoice over the visit from S. D. Bawden. His story of the work of God's grace in mission field is thrilling. Baptized ten.

Zion:—Pastor Smith has received thirty-eight. This pastor and people are a great influence among the Negro population.

Tippecanoe City:—Pastor Cosby had one of the best year's work. Two new Sunday-school classes have been organized. A good B. Y. P. U. society.

Third Street:—Pastor Sloman baptized thirteen. Pastor met a hearty response in his appeal for the Continuation Fund for the New World Movement.

Haynes Street:—Pastor Scruby baptized three and received one.

Springfield:—Pastor Smith gave the hand of fellowship to eighty new members.

First Church:—Pastor Slocum gave the hand of fellowship to fifteen. The prayer circle is enlarging each week. Dr. Truett began his ten-days' meeting May 24. First Church just closed the year's work. The reports were encouraging. More than $17,000 dollars for current work. The missionary budget raised was more than three times the current account.

North Dayton:—Received two for baptism. The work upon the new house of worship is going toward completion. The building will cost about $45,000. The members of First Church are largely financing this enterprise. The pastor is also conducting a Bible class of Sunday-school teachers each Friday at the Y. M. C. A. in which a summary and application of the Sunday-school lesson is given.

Rev. O. E. Hall is back in his pulpit after many weeks of illness. Pastor Hall is the senior pastor as to point of service. He began his thirteenth year this month. The church took cognizance of the fact.

MICHIGAN

THE ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, Flint, showed the past year to be one of the best in the history of the church. With the reception of eighty new members, most of whom came by baptism, the membership has reached 1,010. In the face of a financial depression keenly felt in this industrial city receipts from all sources amounted to more than $35,000, a substantial proportion of which was disbursed for benevolences. In addition to a noticeable development of spiritual life and interest the church is acquiring a marked increase of weight in matters of community life and the officers feel that the church has this year entered upon a period of much larger usefulness.

ON SUNDAY, APRIL 23, it was decided at the regular young people's meeting of Sault Ste. Marie First Church to form three societies, junior, intermediate and senior B. Y. P. U. There is a splendid senior society which holds meetings on Monday evenings, having a period of devotional service and then a social hour, which has proved a very attractive feature. At the first regular meeting May 1, officers were elected as follows: Pres., Roland Hetherington; vice-pres., Estelle E. Newcomb; treas., Burdett Ladd; recording secy., Helen M. Wyllie; correspondent secy., James H. Bell. The official installation of officers was held at the evening church service May 21.

REV. J. C. ROBINSON, of COLDWATER, passed to his reward April 19, at the age of 86 years. Mr. Robinson spent years of service in the Free Baptist church beginning his ministry in his young manhood in Ohio. After the Civil War he went to southern Minnesota where he did pioneer missionary preaching. He held pastorates in Minnesota, Ohio, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan. He was laid to rest by the side of his wife, who died six years ago.

ADRIAN FIRST CHURCH, Thomas J. Hopkins, pastor, at its annual business meeting reports one of the best years in its history. Eighty-five new members were received, the majority by baptism. This makes the present membership 751, after a loss of thirty-two during the year. A total of $12,518.39 was raised for current expenses, missions and local relief work. $9,000 was subscribed for repairs and re-decorating the church. The church has three strong young people's societies, the senior doubling its membership during the past year. The church has also a large active Brotherhood, which is closing another successful year's work. It will go to a nearby lake for a picnic in a few weeks. The Bible school is one of the largest in the city.

THE EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN CONDUCTED by Rev. E. J. Rollings and Mrs. Rollings at the North Church, Flint is said by the pastor, Rev. George M. Vercoe, to be the most successful series of meetings ever held in the church.

MINNESOTA

THE LAKE SUPERIOR BAPTIST ASSOCIATION met in Duluth, May 23-25, the Tuesday sessions being held in the West Duluth Church, those of Wednesday in the First Swedish Temple, and the closing sessions in the First Church. Dr. John Ross, of Second Church, Chicago, was the guest of the association and gave a series of lectures, two each day, which were very instructive and inspiring. The report from the West Duluth Church was especially gratifying, as during the first part of the year the church was greatly discouraged. The present pastor, Rev. H. W. Clough, came to the field Oct. 15 and from that time there has been a steady increase in congregations and interest. Twenty-one new members have been received by baptism and altogether by letter and experience, twenty-seven. Also the Sunday school has reached an attendance of over 100. Ten of the young people have registered as delegates to the St. Paul Convention and it is expected that others will attend.

ON THURSDAY EVENING, May 18, Woodland Park Church, St. Paul, extended to Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Smith and family a farewell reception as they leave soon to make their future home at Eugene, Ore. For three years Mrs. Smith was director of the home mission work in Minnesota; for three years, president of the state Woman's Missionary Society; for one year president of the Northwest District. Miss Carol Smith has been active in young women's work and secretary of the W. W. G. of the Northwest District. For years Mr. Smith has been on the state board and is a member of the state promotion board. Dr. Milo B. Price, principal of Pillsbury Academy, paid tribute to their sterling qualities, and to the services Mr. Smith has rendered as trustee and treasurer of the academy. Pastor John G. Briggs presented to them, on behalf of the friends of the church, a silver plate.

ON TUESDAY EVENING, May 23, First Church of Bismarck held a double reception in appreciation of its pastor, Rev. R. L. Johnson, and his family, and also in honor of Rev. C. W. Finwall and his wife about to leave Bismarck after seven years' residence to take up work as pastor in Fargo.

REV. C. W. FINWALL visited Newport Church, near the Canadian line, on May 21, where he preached to a large congregation and baptized four candidates.

A LARGELY ATTENDED RALLY of young people—the three B. Y. P. U.'s of Fargo—was held at the Swedish Baptist Church, Fargo, Sunday afternoon, May 21. The director of religious education, Rev. E. Wiesle, Rev. O. S. Jacobson and Dr. Hobbs participated. Rev. E. Wiesle preached in the morning at the Norwegian Church, and in the evening at a union service consisting of the three local Baptist churches at First Church.

SOUTH DAKOTA

FIRST CHURCH, VIBORG, recently closed an "enlistment campaign," following a survey of the church conditions in town. Since the new year fifteen new members have been received, ten by baptism. The high school baccalaureate service was held in this church, the pastor, I. Fredmund, preaching the sermon. During the winter months large audiences have filled the church almost every Sunday night. The Sunday school is growing rapidly, the three women's societies are busy and the choir is rendering efficient services.

FINAL FIGURES IN THE ATTENDANCE CONTEST between the Bible schools of Oakland First and Los Angeles First based on the largest percentage of increase in attendance for the period April 2 to May 14 over a January-February average, show the former with an increase of 60 per cent against the latter's 31 per cent. The silver trophy cup donated to the winning school by the Lyon Companies was presented to the Oakland school by Supt. W. R. Hoefflin of the Los Angeles school with a challenge to compete for the cup again in October.

LOS ANGELES FIRST, during the fiscal year which closed on April 30, showed an average attendance of 565, as compared with 442 for the year previous. 147 were accepted for church membership. $896.50 was the offering to missions disbursed through the regular missionary channels, and 766.43 was used for its own work. The church, as in previous years, provided for the educational supplies of the school, which amounted to about $100 per month for the year.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the First

Church of Pasadena, Rev. J. M. Dean, pastor, was held May 10. It was necessary to limit the number of tickets for the annual supper to 300. A largely attended general meeting followed for reports and the transaction of business. The membership showed a marked increase and now stands at 1,172. Over $100,000 was given by the church during the past twelve months, less than $20,000 for its own work and the balance for the larger interests of the kingdom. The full quota of New World Movement pledges are paid up to date and in addition a special cash offering of $32,000 was given at the Easter season toward the threatened denominational deficit. The church has the following assets toward the new building: A magnificent building site in the heart of Pasadena fully paid for; cash in the building fund $37,000; additional pledges towards the building over $75,000. It is estimated that $175,000 more is needed for the new building. The present plant is proving inadequate to accommodate the growing work of the church.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

BAY CITIES' UNION. The third annual meeting of Bay Cities' Union was held at First Church, Alameda, Monday evening, May 22. Following transaction of business, Rev. E. R. Brown of Los Angeles, superintendent of work among the Spanish speaking people, gave an address. Dr. E. W. Moore of New York, representing the Home Mission Society in its work among the Negro people, also gave a short, inspirational talk. Dr. Chas. R. Shepherd, in charge of the Chinese work, presented for the first time the moving pictures of the Chinese mission work in this country, entitled "America's Children of Cathay." These pictures were directed by Dr. Shepherd and present in a striking way the Chinese work in San Francisco, Sacramento and Locke. Mr. F. M. Davidson was elected president, Mr. C. A. Cross, vice-president and Dr. C. E. Tingley, secretary. Mr. J. O. Ernsberger, treasurer, reported a total expenditure of $33,347.51. The year prior to the organization of the City Union the total amount spent for mission work in the Bay Cities was less than $2,700. The total reception for the year ending May 1, 1922, for the New World Movement from the churches in this district was $74,390.24, which is $6,000 more than the sum of the two years previous from the same churches. This represents a giving of nearly $14 per capita, including the churches of all nationalities in the district. Every church in the district, with the exception of five, gave more for the New World Movement the year just ending than it had given during the two years previous. The great increase in the gifts of this district will be noted from the fact that three years ago, according to the reports in the 1919 annual, these same churches gave less than $12,000 for all missions. There are thirty-one churches and four unorganized missions in the district. This represents work among Dano-Norwegian, Swedish, German, Russian, Chinese, Mexican and Portuguese people, besides the English speaking. There have been twenty-five missionaries working part or full time paid by the city union, besides six women, including the teachers in the Chinese School, supported by the Women's Home Mission Society.

LINDSAY: An afternoon and evening missionary meeting was held May 25, participated in by many of the adjacent churches. The afternoon was devoted to a conference on the work of the women, conducted by Mrs. F. L. Blowers of Visalia. Supper was served at 6 o'clock to about 200 members of the church and friends. In the evening Dr. Chas. R. Shepherd, superintendent of Chinese Mission work in Northern California, presented Chinese life in America through the medium of motion pictures that had been prepared under his personal supervision. The young ladies of the Lindsay church presented a pageant entitled "Finding the Nations." This conference is remarkable in view of the fact that the Lindsay church is without a pastor and the management fell entirely upon the members of the church.

DINUBA. The church at Dinuba has broken ground for its new $75,000 building. This will be a much needed improvement and will greatly facilitate the work of this important church.

PORTERVILLE: The people here are rejoicing over the arrival of their new pastor, Rev. Geo. M. Lehigh. Dr. Lehigh comes to the field bringing a large experience in both evangelism and pastoral work and will be a valuable accession to not only his church but the entire association as well.

CHOWCHILLA: This is one of the new churches of the convention field, being the product of work done by the chapel car evangelists, Rev. E. R. Hermiston and wife. The church building is already proving inadequate to the growing congregation and provision will have to be made in the near future for the enlarged work. Pastor Matthews is the right man in the right place and has recently located with his family in the community. Plans are being prepared for a new parsonage and work will begin in the near future.

REV. DEAN HAMILTON, pastor-at-large for the San Joaquin Valley, was called to Moscow, Idaho, on account of the illness of his wife. In a recent letter Mr. Ham-costing $15,000. When these improvements are completed they will have one of the best equipped buildings for their purpose in the northern part of California.

BERKELEY, 1000 OAKS CHURCH will be represented at the Northern Baptist Convention, Indianapolis, by the pastor, Rev. Albert Ehr Gott. Following the convention, Mr. Ehr Gott will make a trip farther east in the interests of the new building soon to be erected by his church.

Lake Geneva Missionary Education Conference

The missionary education movement will hold its eighteenth annual conference at Lake Geneva, Wis., July 28-August 7. Rev. Francis C. Stifer, pastor of the Wilmette Church, Ill., is chairman of the territorial committee and will be the presiding officer. Many notable leaders and missionaries have been secured and the conference bids fair to be one of the best in recent years. One of the strongest features of the conference is the actual training that it affords for teachers of mission study classes and for chairmen of missionary committees. Three double period normal classes have been provided, two for adults and one for the leaders of young people. Mr. B. Carter Millikin, educational secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, will lead the foreign mission class. "India" will be the subject for this class. The home mission class will study "The Negro in America" under the leadership of Mr. Harry S. Myers of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention. Mrs. Marion Humphreys will have charge of the class for young people. These classes

SAN FRANCISCO CENTRAL CHURCH has recently had the help of Miss Myrtle Love, "Sunday-school doctor," and will be greatly benefited in the work by the suggestions of Miss Love. This church has so far outgrown its capacity that it has been necessary to make improvements to the auditorium and Sunday school room are scheduled early in the day and do not interfere with the Bible study or open parliament hours. During the first hour the various members of the class will take turns in leading. The second hour is spent in practical criticism, discussion of methods and conference.

The Servants of the King Group will have for its leader Rev. Milton Strahler, a Presbyterian missionary to India who is home on furlough. There will also be classes in missionary dramatics, Sunday-school work and Christian stewardship.

expressiveness while others bow their heads:)

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her."

He touched her hand, as he only can, With the wondrous skill of the Great Physician,

With the tender touch of the Son of Man. And the fever-pain in the throbbing temples

Died out with the flush on brow and cheek,

And the lips that had been so parched and burning

Trembled with thanks that she could not speak.

And the eyes where the fever-light had faded

Looked up, by her grateful tears made dim,

And she rose and ministered in her household,

She rose and ministered unto him.

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her."

Oh, blessed touch of the Man Divine!

So beautiful then to arise and serve him, When the fever is gone from your life and mine;

It may be the fever of restless serving, With heart all thirsty for love and praise, And eyes are aching and strained with yearning

Toward self-set goals in the future days, Or it may be the fever of spirit anguish, Some tempest of sorrow that dies not down,

Till the cross at last in meekness lifted, And the head stoops low for the thorny crown.

Or it may be a fever of pain and anger, When the wounded spirit is hard to bear, And only the Lord can draw forth the arrows

Whatever the tempest, His voice can still; There is only joy as we seek His pleasure; There is only rest as we choose His will.

And some day, after life's fitful fever, I think we shall say, in the home on high, 'If the hands that He touched but did His bidding,

How little it matters what else went by!'

Ah, Lord! Thou knowest us altogether, Each heart's sore sickness, whatever it be;

Touch Thou our hands! Let the fever leave us,

And so shall we minister unto Thee."*

[Play closes with players and audience singing, as a prayer, all the verses of "Take My Life, and Let It Be, Consecrated, Lord to Thee."]

ideas of authority and dictation, and these thoughts are "rank treason" in the Baptist camp. The old fashioned title of "secretary" or "representative" did not suggest anything of the kind, and in every church where I have been layman or pastor, their visits were red-letter days, bringing inspiration and renewed consecration, especially if he left the begging for money to the pastor to do after he was gone.

I am firmly convinced that a reduction in state or district "representatives" would prove an expensive economy. My first suggestion is that these all be retained if not indeed increased, but to reduce the general headquarters force to the minimum. Even if denominational headquarters should be moved nearer to our denominational center of population, as it should, yet it would require great expense of money, time and energy for general headquarters' personnel to reach our constituency.

My second suggestion is that state or district representatives should be left quite free to do the work in their territory as conditions demand. That they should with a few necessary exceptions, spend every Sunday visiting local churches, and very much less time and money in conducting with several others, institutes and conferences, which with very few exceptions are attended by only a very few, all of whom are already enthusiastic and well informed. My observation has convinced me that recently a considerable amount of time, energy and money has largely been wasted in these institutes.

These representatives should seek opportunities, not sit in their offices and wait for invitations, to visit local churches and bring to them the information, inspiration and encouragement they need, and which the last three classes of pastors mentioned above, never will bring to them. We have been informed recently that 60 per cent of the churches are not cooperating with the denominational program. It would be very interesting, if we could know what efforts have been made

Our Book Shelf

The Miracle on Hermon, by John Marvin
Dean. New York: Fleming H. Revell
Company. 60 cents.

One comment is worth a page of reviewing: A grandson of the reviewer, a Boy Scout, baseball fan and general husky, picked up this book casually, glanced into it, looked surprised, sat down to read it, never stopped till he had read it through; then exclaimed, "Say grandpa! here's a daisy." A man who can write a tale of the Christ with such effect as that, may scorn ordinary book notices.

Rural Community Organization, by Augustus W. Hayes, Assistant Professor of Sociology, Tulane University. University of Chicago Press: $1.60.

That it is done with scientific ability and thoroughness may be taken for granted. That print, paper, press-work and cover are beautiful, will be obvious to anybody who picks up the book. That it is a practical and useable manual for rural community work, will be discovered by a careful reading. That it ought to be in the hands of every rural pastor, is the clear opinion of this reviewer.

The Faith That Enquires, Gifford Lectures for the years 1920 and 1921, by Sir Henry Jones. New York: The Macmillan Company.

"The Rationalist is now a person who may be respected. But his successor, the Intellectualist, is an object of scorn to those who, I suppose are otherwise equipped." A Modernist in principle thus sets out to demonstrate the scientific validity of religious faith; and with a mass of abstruse reasoning, makes out a good case. There is many a fine critical reflection upon misconceptions and contradictions in Kantian and post-Kantian philosophy. There are many places in which a felicitous phrase expounds a system and makes it luminous. And the general conclusion tends wholly to the support of the

Landmarks in the History of Early Christianity, by Kirsopp Lake. New York:
The Macmillan Co. $1.25.

These lectures, which are the by-products of a larger work, were given in 1919 on the Haskell Foundation at Oberlin.
Taking as chapter headings, Galilee, Jerusalem, Antioch, Corinth, Rome and Ephesus, the author attempts to show the distinctive contribution of each city to the development of Christian thought and practice in the early days. The reader should have some knowledge of critical problems relating to the New Testament if he is to appreciate this little volume.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

THE MESSAGE OF MUSIC

This editor is always glad to note a minister's attention to church music, its pros and cons, either in the pulpit or in pages of the press. An especially good résumé of the matter is appended. It is quoted from the evening sermon of Dr. Judson MacIntosh, pastor of the First Roseland Baptist Church, Chicago, Jan 8, 1922.

"It is well worth our recalling the words of the celebrated Joseph Parker of London City Temple fame: 'There arose a genius in history who divided music into sacred and profane. What a faulty analysis he must have had! I have never heard any profane music. I have heard music profaned.'

"When the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy,' and I heard the voice of harpers harping upon their harps, and they sang as it were a new song,' we have the key to the whole situation. In its origin and in its essence, music is of God. It has been defined as 'Love, in search of a word.' It is one of the divinest gifts bestowed upon the human race. It is the harmony of heaven breathing celestial sweetness through the atmosphere of earth.

"True, it has often been degraded into the jingle of a devil's dance, or the ragtime jazz, of a second-class show-house, but let it be insisted on with emphatic iteration that every note of music and every instrument that was ever fashioned by skill of man, belongs to God. This creation is the inspiration of the one Spirit who is the very soul of harmony, beauty and light.

"In John's apocalyptic vision he heard the sound of 'harpers harping with their harps and they sang as it were a new song.' Their singing was like the sound of many waters as voice of thunder rising, swelling and crashing out great peals of praise.

"It was the glorious strains of the anthem of redemption that fell upon John's ear. The angelic hosts and spirits of just men made perfect—sang the song of Moses and the Lamb, and as the prisoner of Patmos listened, his heart so ravished by joy of heaven that barren rocks in Aegean Sea became like unto the Paradise of God.

"We know something of the wizardry of music, but we have heard only the very faintest whisper of it as yet.

"Our dull senses, fettered and prisoned by the body, are yet to be awakened by touch of kindly death and when that right angel comes to awaken us, our spiritual faculties will be acute, and upon our ears there will break the majesty of music, the motive of which we have not measured in our dreams. It may be that only in heaven we shall hear the grand men."

"Never can I forget the day when a professor in English literature awakened in my soul the first time an appreciation of the writings of Robert Browning. It was the poem entitled, 'Saul.' There was a figure blackest of all, leaning on the main prop that sustains the pavilion—a sunbeam then came through the tent-roof and revealed the gigantic king. Then David tuned his harp and played the tune the sheep of the hills of Bethlehem knew as one after one seeks lodging at eventide. Then the tune listened to by the quails on the cowlands. Then the reapers' song, when hand grasps hand and eye lights eye. Then the marriage chant to young maidens. David paused, the tent shook, and mighty Saul, shuddered. Then David sang to wild joys of living. 'I have lived and seen God's hand through life-time, and all was for the best,' and then David paused and cried, 'All's love, yet all's law!'

"On the Godhead! I seek and I find it! O Saul, it shall be a face like my face that receives thee.

A man like unto me, thou shalt love and be loved by forever.

A hand, like this hand, shall throw open the gates of life unto thee! See the Christ stand!"

"Oh, yes, that is what Christ wants to do for everyone of us.

"The harpist barely remembers that night how he made his way home. All earth amazed, cohorts of angelic witness about him, stars beating with new emotion. In the morning creation never so beauteous. The Lord's presence looked up from the white flowers, worked in the hearts of cedars and moved in the vine bowers.

"We are strung to play our little part and without him we stumble and trip and fail to strike the true note, the clear note of rapture with all our striving the discords unhappily prevail.

"But when he is seated by our side, with his skillful touch upon the keys of life, our frailties are caught up and blended with his strong chords of rich and tender music, and life is made one grand, sweet song.

"Will you not give the Master Musician the opportunity he seeks? Over there broods the heart of infinite love and longing.

"The hands outstretched to yours, though nail-pierced, are instinct with power to transpose your life to the keynote of God's will. I ask you: Surrender your life! For he can make it resonant with music. Give him complete control of the keyboard of your being—then in your soul there shall ring forever, the echo of the angels' songs."

MUSIC REVIEW

From The Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

- Upward Where the Stars Are
- Burning.....Fearis ($0.15)
- America for Me.....Wick ($0.06)
- Brotherhood.....Noll ($0.06)

Three choruses for mixed voices of much merit. The Fearis number is an easy anthem for solo and chorus, melodically ingratiating, and offering many opportunities for telling interpretative points at the hands of alert choir-directors. Less specialized as to sacred type are the other titles listed; their subject matter and application can be judged from the headings. Both are simple in structure and contents; both will provide needed repertoire for patriotic services.

Rock - Breakers

By P. H. J. LERRIGO

Doctor Lerrigo proves himself an observant traveler and a luminous writer. The business of Christian missions and the human material these missions must handle are his supreme concern. He shows how a station is created, the abilities and weaknesses of the native people, the cooperation of the different denominations, and the achievements in personal characters, and in family and community life that caused King Albert of Belgium to say, "The work of the Protestant missionaries in Congo is a very choice one." $1.25 net

The God of the Out-of-Doors

A Pageant for Outdoor Presentation

By ROBERT FRANCIS ALLEN

The theme of this pageant is God's progressive revelation of himself in the book of nature to caveman, Indian, Puritan, and man of modern culture. Admirably adapted for use at summer assemblies, where the natural surroundings of woods, hills, and water afford the proper scenery in which the adequacy of this fine representation of the response of man's heart and mind to God in his world of awfulness and grandeur and beauty will be readily appreciated.

Easy to present. No scenery, elaborate lighting, or spectacular costumes required. Directions for presentation are printed in each copy.

PRESIDENT and Mrs. Marshall and Former President and Mrs. W. F. Thomas are flanked by four Karen teachers, one of whom is accompanied by his wife.

"In the early days of the mission the man who could learn to read and to sing a few hymns went out as a teacher. But the times are changing. Our pastors must be as high as the better men of their communities. The men who are to be the leaders of our Karen churches must be men who know more than what is going on in their own village. The greatest experiment in democracy that the world has seen is being carried on in India and Burma. Unless our leaders can inculcate Christian principles and a high degree of Christian and social morality, the experiment will be in vain. The preaching of Christ is the great panacea for all ills, personal and social. Through the regeneration of the individual and his training will come the building up of the kingdom of God on earth."—Pres. Marshall.

We Are All Liable to Mistakes

In reading a recent issue of the Temple News, of Grand Rapids, Mich., a weekly leaflet noted for its sweet reasonableness, we find that our worthy contemporary has published an article "one somewhat startling because so far astray from truth and experience." Brother Laws, you must keep your eyes open.

The Acid Test

The subscription receipts of THE BAPTIST for the fiscal year just closed showed an increase of $13,854.02, over the preceding year. It might be worse. To say the least this shows a wholesome subscription situation and renewal orders are the acid test of any periodical list.

Killam's Kollum

Religious Education

It is encouraging to note the plans used by some of our churches in developing the interest of the young people in the work of the denomination and not least in the denominational journals. Rev. John Gerald York, of the First Church, Grand Forks, N. D., has a unique plan. We will outline it in brief. The church proposed a contest. It offered cash prizes for best verses based on some issue of THE BAPTIST, or some article therein. A number of young folks entered the contest and the money received is to be used to send delegates to the St. Paul Convention. We give below one of the productions based on Phillips Brooks' "Shepherd of Souls," which appeared on the front cover of the issue of March 25, written by Leslie Erhart:

Salvation of Souls: My Trust

If I each day can serve the trust
That God has given me,
I am content to die condemned
By all society.

For, oh, I feel a want, a need,
A longing in my breast
To seek for souls upon the earth
And give them of God's rest.

Pray, Father, let me never be Unworthy of this trust;
My very heart's desire is but
To serve it—Lord I must.

The Folks Back Home

When this number reaches our readers the Northern Baptist Convention will be in session in Indianapolis. Those of us who go feel our own importance. We propose to settle all the problems of the denomination. While we are in the process it might be well to remember the folks back home. We fear that many of them have little interest in the things which now occupy our attention. Others care little because they know little about Baptist work outside the local field. We ought to find a way to get them to subscribe for THE BAPTIST.

You Can Save Us Money

It is surprising what a number of our readers enjoy the privilege of a vacation. Hundreds of them ask to have their subscriptions changed for a month or more to some resort. We are glad that you want THE BAPTIST to follow you on your summer outing. It does, however, place us under quite a heavy expense. What? We have to cut a new stencil for this temporary address. And then there is danger of missing an issue at the end of the vacation. Could you not leave your address with your postmaster and have the paper forwarded? It would cost but a cent a week.

Fresh from the Field

Believing that only action by the United States government can save the remnant of Armenians from further persecution and probable extermination on account of their faith, the Federal Council of Churches is making a nation-wide appeal to 150,000 congregations in America to urge congress to take necessary steps to ensure the permanent protection of Christians under Turkish rule. This appeal is being sent in conjunction with the Near East Relief to all pastors.

Pursuant to the findings of a regularly called council at Ogden, N. Y., Benj. Harrison Marshall and Chas. S. Owen were on May 31 ordained to the gospel ministry. Dr. A. W. Beaven preached the sermon, Rev. A. E. Isaac gave the hand of fellowship and Prof. John R. Brown gave the charge to the candidates. Mr. Marshall who has been student pastor of the Ogden church goes at once to the church in Lewiston, Idaho. Mr. Owen, who was ordained at the request of his home church in Candler, N. C., is serving as pastor of the church in Chili. Dr. C. S. Savage served as moderator.

The annual meeting of the Free Baptist Woman's Missionary Society will be held in Jordan Memorial Hall, Ocean Park, Maine, Monday, July 31, at 9 a. m., for the following purposes: To hear reports of officers and committees, for election of officers and for such other business as may come before the meeting.

Mr. Ralph H. Rogers was recently ordained to the gospel ministry at the First Church, Burlington, Vt. Dr. W. A. Davison was moderator of the council and Rev. D. G. Donnocker was clerk.

Dr. Stuart B. Edmondson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Lake Forest, addressed the Chicago Ministers' Conference on June 12. There will be no meeting of the conference on June 19 owing to the fact that many of the brethren will be in attendance at the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis. The meeting of June 26, which will be the last meeting until September, will be given up to echoes of the convention, parts being taken by members who attended.

General Feng, the famous Christian soldier of China, who has brought three-quarters of his army to Christ, recently made governor of Shansi, has asked fifty Christian pastors to act as army chaplains.

At the annual meeting of the Woodlawn Church, Chicago, held on May 10, the reports presented showed a year of marked progress. During the year fifty-six persons were baptized and sixty-three received in other ways. Disbursements for current expenses were $18,419.33 and for benevolences $9,608.70. The missionary objective for the new year is $15,000. The church is now in the thirty-third year of its history and Dr. Melbourne P. Boynton will, before the year is over, have completed the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate. All departments show most vigorous life and the people are expecting the best year of the quarter century.

Keuka College, which has just completed its first year as a college for women, reports a registration of forty-one in the Freshman class for the last year, besides twelve others. Twenty-five students have already been registered for next fall. A committee has been appointed to continue the campaign for $1,000,000 for the college.

The exodus from the Roman Catholic Church continues in Czechoslovakia, in fact increases in volume. A letter from a parish priest to a missionary tells how he and 2100 of his people left the church and became Protestants, assuming self support when their act shut them off from government funds. In one city 5,000 have left the church, in another, 4,500.

Columbia University has recently announced the names of the winners of the Pulitzer Prizes in the field of literature. Booth Tarkington gets the $1,000 prize for the best American novel portraying "the wholesome atmosphere of American life and the highest standards of American manners and manhood." The prize-

Just To Be Good

*JUST to be good—
This is enough—enough!
O we who find sin's billows wild and rough
Do we not feel how more than any gold
Would be the blameless life we led of old
While yet our lips knew but a mother's kiss?
Ah! though we miss
All else but this,
To be good is enough!*

*It is enough—
Enough—just to be good!
To lift our hearts where they are understood;
To let the thirst for worldly power and place
Go unappeased; to smile back in God's face
With the glad lips our mothers used to kiss
Ah! though we miss
All else but this,

winning novel was "Alice Adams." Eugene O'Neill's "Anna Christie" won the $1,000 prize for the American play of the year best portraying "the power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste and good manners." The $2,000 prize for the best historical work of the year went to James T. Adams for "The Founding of New England." The $1,000 for the best American biography "teaching patriotism and unselfish service as illustrated by an illustrious example," went to Hamlin Garland for his "A Daughter of the Middle Border." The $1,000 prize for the best volume of verse published during the year went to "The Collected Poems" of Edwin Arlington Robinson.

Students in India are joining with other national groups in passage of resolutions condemning liquor shops and the use of liquor. This is one phase of the Gandhi movement, which maintains that beverage alcohol is sapping the vitality of body, mind and soul of the Indian nation. One unique fact is the system of pickets under which volunteers stand near liquor shops and in the name of religion and country ask the ingoing customer not to drink. If the customer persists, the picket falls on his knees and begs him not to drink. Some pickets carry bottles of milk and offer the thirsty man free milk to drink. In some places the drinker is boycotted. The movement is very successful in cutting down drinking and in closing saloons. Several of the independent states of India have adopted prohibition in varying forms.

At a recent dinner given by the American College at Madura, India, there sat together representatives of several different races and castes; including Brahmans and non-Brahmans, Mohammedans and Christians, Americans and Indians, all sat together and partook of common food. This caused great astonishment in the city and one Brahmin remarked, "This is simply wonderful. I never thought it possible. How did you do?" Well, how?

Chapel Car Evangelists Rev and Mrs. E. R. Hermiston have been visiting San Joaquin, Calif., and already an impression has been made on the growing community. A large tract of land has recently been opened for small farming and the agent for the improvement company, after investigating the character of the work of the chapel car, offered to give two lots and a donation of $500 in cash toward a Baptist church.

The annual meeting of the board of managers of the Free Baptist Woman's Missionary Society, will be held in Porter Memorial Hall, Ocean Park, Maine, Friday, July 28, at 2 p. m.

According to Zion's Herald an organization of laymen styled "The Faith of Our Fathers League" in the New Jersey Conference, tried this year to question ministers entering the conference in full connection. Dr. John Handley objected strenuously to any examination of ministers at the hands of self-appointed committees and Bishop Berry said it was a gross impropriety for that committee to draw up a creedal statement and to attempt to coerce men to sign it. Toward the end of the conference Dr. Harold Paul Sloan, leader of the conservative element, presented a resolution originally drawn up by the liberal party some days previous; this resolution expressed entire confidence in the loyalty of the Board of Bishops to the doctrinal standards of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Pacific Christian Advocate.

Mr. E. Thurston of the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. is predicting a population of 4,000,000 for Chicago by 1940. This means no small problem for the churches.

In his letters to the Board of Managers of the Foreign Mission Society, Secretary Franklin is reporting that on the fields which he has visited in China and Japan there has been notable improvement in the work since his last visit. He is especially impressed with the fact that young men of fine training, proved character and splendid devotion are coming into service and are assuming a larger measure of responsibility for the conduct of the work in their own country. He has found all the missionaries rejoicing whenever a Chinese or Japanese Christian shows himself fitted to take the leadership in any movement. All this is fortunate at an hour when the tides of national consciousness are so strong in the Far East. China must be evangelized by Chinese and Japan by Japanese.

Christian Credentials

WHAT are they, the credentials of the Christian? When an ambassador goes to another land to represent his country it is expected that he shall present some sign or token that shall identify him as authorized to speak for it. "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ!" We dwell among people who recognize him, but know nothing of us. We dare to go, ourselves or by our agents, to foreign lands to speak for Christ, and to represent him. How do we expect to secure recognition, and to have our right acknowledged? What are our credentials? How may we be known as Christians?

The "Salvationist" wears a uniform. There is something to be said for it. It at least marks him as a disciple of the Nazarene, so that when he goes to his task men recognize him and know what he stands for. The bishop may wear gaiters and a shovel hat, the priest his cassock and the nun her veil. There is something to be said for these. But they will hardly serve for us. They are artificial and exterior credentials for a Christian.

Some would make the correctness of their views upon matters of religious doctrine the proof of their claim to discipleship. There is much to be said for that also. Certainly it is the mark of a Christian to hold certain definite convictions firmly and clearly. But at the bar of a cynic world these will not serve as credentials. The world in general is a poor judge of orthodoxy, and in a degree indifferent to it. Nor will breadth and hospitality of mind, of which many boast, nor zeal in practical service suffice. Many possess these who cannot qualify as ambassadors of Christ, and put forth no claim to be such.

How does the world judge the credibility of the claims of the church? By the spirit that pervades it. Men recognize the spirit of Christ when they see it manifested, and they believe those to be Christians who have it. The world will not take them on their "say-so."

What is the spirit of Christ? "I have loved you!" That is it: the spirit of love. Have we it? Jesus says that we need not expect the world to recognize us as his disciples if we have it not. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

This is the "hall-mark" of the Christian. "Behold how these Christians love one another!" was not first spoken in irony and derision. It expressed the patent fact. If it is not true today, then nothing that is true will condone the lack of love, or take its place.

The world will not listen to the message of Christians who do not love one another. "What you are," said

Emerson, "speaks so loud, I cannot hear what you say!" How foolish to send out missionaries to preach a gospel of love to the heathen world if we have not sufficiently learned the lesson of love to love one another! Is it easier to love a pagan than to love one another? If we cannot win one another, how do we think we can win a hostile or indifferent world? The children of the world will even refuse to believe that we are disciples of Jesus if we have not love one to another: and they will be justified in refusing. Jesus has no unloving disciples.

We have been washing our linen now so long in the sight of the public that doubtless they will be watching carefully to see whether we finally get it clean at Indianapolis. Let us disappoint the cynics!

"Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God."

That does not necessarily mean that we must like one another: we cannot always control our likes and dislikes. We are happy to say we love a good many people whom we do not like very well. It does not mean that we must agree with one another. We shall never any one of us know as much about anything as some of us claim to know about everything. In some of the things with which we have to deal we are doubtless "like little fishes trying to talk like whales." But let us pity rather than scold those who disagree with us, and grant the liberty to others that we claim for ourselves.

But though love does not necessarily mean that we must find one another always and entirely congenial, nor that we must think alike, it does mean that we must treat others as we should like to be treated, that we must respect one another's opinions, and remember that our brother's belief is as sacred to him as ours to us, we must be scrupulously careful to impute to our brother only the highest and worthiest motive conceivable under the circumstances, and we must desire to share with our brethren the best and richest gifts with which God has blessed ourselves. What we desire for ourselves we must desire for others.

What is the most prolific cause of wars? There are many causes, but eventually each cause grows into mutual suspicion before nations take to arms. Unkind things said in the newspapers by members of one race about another, unkind aspersions cast upon another people's motives, an undue readiness to take offense, where offense was not meant—trivial things like that—fan the embers of war. Lincoln said, "The man who makes a charge without knowing it to be true, falsifies as much as he who knowingly tells a falsehood."

We shall get at Indianapolis much what we expect. For our part, we expect to see the beginning of a new era of mutual understanding and cooperation, and a new start on the last lap of the accomplishment of the great task which we undertook together at Denver.

"Be noble,
And the nobleness that lies in other lives,
Sleeping, but never dead,
Shall rise in majesty to meet thine eyes."

Love begets love. "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." What we take away from Indianapolis will depend upon what we bring there with us.

Pray, Therefore!

IN the ninth chapter of Matthew's gospel we are told that Jesus made a tour "about all the cities and villages," and on his return, having observed the multitudes with his kindly yet piercing eyes at their work and at their play, he sums up the impression they had made upon him.

It was an impression of sadness. Men are revealed in the light of what they see in the multitude. Some are repelled by the crowd, others appalled by it, and some see only the menace of it and are alarmed. Jesus "was moved with compassion," that is with sympathy and pity. The masses made him think of a flock of sheep distressed and scattered: "distressed"—that is rent and mangled and all wounded and bleeding (that is what the word means); and "scattered"—thrown upon the ground, prostrate, struggling to rise but unable to do so from weakness or fatigue or hunger. They were without a shepherd; their natural leaders had shorn and despoiled and deserted them.

Changing his figure, Jesus tells his disciples that the multitude made him think of a field of waving grain, ripe and golden and ready for the reaper. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

The need was great. He had seen multitudes of men on his journey untaught, occupied with the bread and butter problem and thinking nothing of the kingdom of unselfish service, and diseased, sick, perhaps, largely because of their ignorance and selfishness, or that of others, as many are today. They were despoiled and cheated and exploited, these multitudes of our Lord's day, without leadership, moving blindly, but without a goal. The need was very great.

And the need was urgent. If the time of reaping arrives and the reaper neglects the hour, the grain lodges and mildews and rots, and only a worthless tangle of ruined possibilities remains.

But the need was not being met; "the laborers are few." The need was imminent and importunate, but there was a lack of men willing and able to meet it. Must the rich opportunity pass, and the labor of the husbandman fail for want of reapers?

What the multitude needed, in the thought of Jesus, is evident in what we find he had been supplying in his journey through their cities and villages. For the mind, education—he had been teaching in their synagogues; for the soul, inspiration and comfort—he had been preaching the gospel of the kingdom; for the body, relief for their physical ailments—he had been healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness. His was a three-fold ministry to body, mind and soul.

What do you think the Lord Christ thinks as he goes about our modern cities and villages and looks upon the modern multitudes? Having learned to look upon them through the Master's eyes we see them today harried, smitten, wounded, exploited, prostrate, restless, with rancor and hatred in their hearts, ignorant, devoid of idealism and vision, without intelligent and unselfish leadership, and yet with a desire for better things, aspiring toward they know not what, spiritually hungry. The heart of our time is hungry for the living God.

We see that the need is urgent. Everywhere unrest, everywhere movement, men reaching out and up toward democracy, and independence and leisure and all the things they count good, in China and India as in America. It is the strategic hour. Empires are being shaped in the forms that they will presently take permanently. Great problems of industry are being agitated and decided. Political experiments are being tried and institutions moulded. Now in this plastic hour can the disciples of Jesus furnish a Christian mould into which the new idealism may run and be fixed? The great need of the hour is more and better Christians. Can the church produce Christian leaders in sufficient numbers to shape the new day? Can it win men to the Christ who must rule the future?

We see that the need is not being met. The work of the kingdom in foreign fields needs men and money, and the need is not being met: strategic opportunities are wasted because the laborers are so few. At home the church is with difficulty holding its own in the midst of our crowding populations in the cities, while in the country indifference is widespread. Whole classes in the community are said to be alienated from the church. The need is great, the need is urgent, and the need is not being met.

Where are the reapers? Where are the shepherds? They are back of the sheepfold somewhere disputing over the will of their Master! Each is sure he is right and the other wrong! They cannot meet the need until the quarrel is settled! Before God, brethren, it is a world tragedy!

What must the disciples do therefore? Here is a needy world, the multitude like sheep distressed and scattered, needing this three-fold ministry that Jesus rendered, while the shepherds are "manicuring one another's theology," and the church is quite distraught and insufficient, falling short of its opportunity. "The harvest truly is great and the laborers are few. PRAY THEREFORE!" says Jesus.

That is not what we should say. In view of a distressed and scattered society, harried and poverty-stricken, sick and ignorant, we might say that what we want is more legislation! Establish hospitals for the sick and schools for the ignorant! Is the spiritual need of the world so great and urgent and the resources of the church so inadequate? Institute the every-member canvass; start a new movement; get your laymen together and have a banquet and raise some money; hold a conference and pass some resolutions! But Jesus, having visited the people in their homes, and reviewed their need, and having seen the insufficiency of the disciples and what a poor lot they were, said. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few: PRAY THEREFORE!"

On the face of it it is a very impractical suggestion, and wholly unscientific! When all the facts seem to proclaim that something ought to be done and done at once, Jesus bids his disciples pray! Yes, to pray is to do something. "To pray is to labor"—orare est laborare. A new philosophy is teaching us not to judge a method or a theory by its apparent rationality, but to ask, "Does it work? Does it produce results?"

Subject the method of Jesus to such a test and there can be only one reply. It works. It has always worked. It is the only method that has ever worked. It worked with the first Christians: from the place of prayer they went forth to conquer the world. The Reformation in the sixteenth century was born in prayer. Every great forward movement in the history of the church was born in prayer.

There have been other periods in history when the outlook for organized Christianity seemed dark. Bishop Butler, in the introduction to his Analogy, published in 1736, tells us that he spoke to an age in which it was "taken for granted by many persons that Christianity was not so much as a subject of inquiry, but had been discovered to be fictitious." Warburton, his contemporary, declared that he had lived to see that "fatal crisis when religion hath lost its hold upon the minds of a people." But at that very hour a revival of prayer was passing, like a tide, over England under the leadership of John Wesley, and a new age of faith was beginning. Later in the same century the modern missionary enterprise began when a little group of country ministers drafted an invitation to all Christian people to join them for one hour on the first Monday in every month in prayer for the "spread of the gospel to the most distant parts of the habitable globe." The movement took root in America when a group of students at Williams college met under a haystack to pray. Every great modern revival has taken its rise in prayer and has been led by men of prayer.

We might have anticipated it. For what is prayer? To pray is to fall back upon God: to pray is to tap the divine resources of power and render them available for human uses. In view of the immensity of the task and the character of the obstacles how can any man or body of men, by whatever clever schemes or energetic efforts, hope to win the world to God? That is God's task; only he can do it. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest—God is the Lord of the harvest—that he send forth laborers into his harvest"—his harvest. So we pray in the spirit of Luther, "Lord, if thou wilt have thy world to be saved, thou must save it. We have tried every plan, and called forth every resource, and we cannot do it." It is his harvest: he must reap it. LET US PRAY!

Let us try Christ's way! Organization is needed, but God will not save the world by organization. Machinery is needed, but machinery is a hindrance if we lack power. Laborers are needed because God plans to save the world by consecrated personalities. Pray, therefore. Perhaps we shall find one another while we are seeking God.

Let Christ Be Exalted

Prayer unites. Discussion divides.

Service draws men together. Metaphysics drives them apart.

Where Christ is, men are brothers. Where the spirit of Christ is not, there is no such thing as brotherhood.

We may go to Indianapolis and make all the clear-cut definitions we will, but if we are not found in a spirit of prayer, we shall at the end be farther apart than ever.

We may formulate a confession of faith which shall be a world-beater, but if we do not gather as friends of Jesus, intent on showing ourselves worthy through our service of the confidence he has placed in us, we shall render nothing but lip-service. It avails nothing to say "Lord, Lord," with exactly the right accent if we are not doing his will.

If we really believe that Christ is in our midst, all bitterness and rancor and evil-speaking will disappear and we shall confer together as brethren, each one counting the other better than himself.

If we are not to gather at Bethlehem and at Calvary, it were far better that we should not have a convention at all, for nothing but ill will come of it.

It comes down to this, brethren: Are we really Christians or only calling ourselves such?

We Want To Be Shown

The United Presbyterian has this comment in a recent issue: "That theological unrest is not conducive to church growth is evidenced by the annual reports of the churches. The Southern Baptist Church, in which there is no theological controversy, has gained 19.9 in the last five years, while the Northern Baptists, in which doctrinal controversy has been raging, has in the same time lost 19.9 per cent."

It will be news to the editor of the Western Recorder and to Frank Norris of Texas that no theological controversy is waging in the South. But we will not stress that.

We would like to know the source of the figures touching our Northern Convention. For there has been no loss. On the contrary the additions to our churches by baptism during the last two years have been the greatest known for a long period. Figures are bungled somewhere.

The Runner's Bible

We have heard of many kinds of Bibles in recent years and not all have received full approval. But here is a note from The Herald of Gospel Liberty which ought to be passed on. Propaganda for peculiar sects has many forms and Bible-loving Christians should not be taken unaware by this latest attempt. The note reads:

"We would sound a warning against the 'Runner's Bible,' which is purely a Christian Science document of the most deceptive kind. Many sincere Christian people are being hoodwinked by it, being led to believe that it is only selections of Scripture placed in convenient manner for the traveler or other busy person who must 'run as they read.' It does contain Scripture—but it also contains the most insidious kind of Christian Science comment thereon."

Real Satans

"Even the demons are subject unto us in thy name."—Luke 10:17

By D. E. LEWIS

IF we had Christ's power to cast out demons we would need his insight to recognize them. Many of the most conscientious and spiritual leaders of the past missed a good fight against the devils of their generation because they failed to recognize them as the agents of the evil one.

No one denies the conscientious conviction and spiritual insight of John Wesley, who nevertheless said, "Unless witchcraft is true, nothing in the Bible is true."

Francis Xavier starts for the Indies, saying, "Whatever torture awaits me, I am ready to suffer it ten thousand times for the salvation of a single soul," and on arrival writes back, "The second need which India has in order that those who live in it may be good Christians is that your highness should send the holy inquisition."

These quotations and the following on slavery and liquor, taken from Kirby Page's chapter, "Is the Judgment of the Majority Infallible?" in his book, "The Sword and the Cross," show that many of the spiritual leaders of the past missed the kind of a fight that Billy Sunday enjoys with John Barleycorn because they failed to recognize some of the leading devils of their own generation.

"If Holding Slaves Be Sin"

In 1840 Rev. James Smylie wrote, "If holding slaves for the sake of gain is sin, three-fourths of all the Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians in eleven states of the union are of the devil." The estate of Dr. Furman advertised, "two mules, one horse, an old wagon, twenty-seven negroes, some of them very prime." Union Theological Seminary in Virginia on Christmas day each year hired out to the highest bidder the slaves left to them by the will of a pious old mother in Israel. The American Baptist Home Mission Society had in its employ twenty-six slave owners. Missionary Tryon entered Texas driving his slaves before him. Rev. Jonathan Davis, Baptist clergyman, declared, "He would wade knee-deep in blood to defend his rights to hold the thirty human beings he owned." George Whitefield, the great evangelist, said, "I have no doubt as to the lawfulness of keeping slaves. I should think myself highly favored if I could purchase a goodly number of them."

Alexander Campbell declared, "I would as soon become a free-thinker or a skeptic as to think slavery unchristian. I dare not, with my Bible in my hand, join the anti-slavery crusade against the relation of master and slave." The Southern Presbyterian church during the war expressed its "deep conviction of the divine appointment of domestic servitude and the peculiar mission of the church to conserve the institution."

In the early days of the liquor traffic the bulk of the clergy opposed the temperance movement. Rev. Leonard Woods writes, "I remember

*IN TOILERS of the world, true greatness lies
Not in great empires built o'er dead men's bones,
But in those deeds of charity and love
Which light our earth as heaven is lit by stars.—Victor Hugo.*

when I could reckon up among my acquaintances forty ministers, and none of them at a great distance, who were either drunkards or far addicted to drinking. At an ordination in 1816 I was ashamed and grieved to see two aged ministers literally drunk and a third indecently excited."

Rev. Joseph C. Lovejoy, after seventeen years of opposition to the temperance movement, wrote a book entitled, "Prohibition Ground to Powder," in which he said, "I have never flinched nor doubted; not one pang of remorse or regret. I told the truth in vindication of God's word and Christ's example; and in defence of the personal rights of every human being. The assailants are at war with God and man."

Strickland Gillilan's story in June Farm and Fireside of the recommendation of a certain pastor must have originated at this time: "The young man is an excellent and powerful speaker. He is unusually faithful and zealous in his pastoral work. You are fortunate if you can secure him for your pulpit and your parish. It may interest you also to know that he is rather quarrelsome when he is drunk."

Buckle in his "History of Civilization in England," says, "It is an undoubted fact that an overwhelming majority of persecutors have been men of the purest intention, of the most admirably unsullied morals. Such men as these are not bad, they are only ignorant."

Thus many of the best leaders of the past fought as allies with the demons of their generation because they failed to recognize them. The conscience of a Spirit-filled man was not sufficient to lead him to the truth. Even with the open Bible as a standard his misinterpretations lined him up with the enemies of his Saviour.

On the Fence

Many other conscientious men were "on the fence," during the bitterest debates. Judged by the fig-tree standard of Jesus, they lost out in the chance to fight unrighteousness through their "omissionary mistake."

Conscience judges according to accepted standards. If these men had been trained in the higher standards of the twentieth century, they would have opposed with earnestness the evils for which they fought or before which they remained passive.

My father voted the republican ticket. He was a conscientious Baptist deacon. I said to him, "Do you think Mr. Doe did the right thing at the last election when he swung his vote over from the democrats?" "He certainly did, and I am delighted to hear that he has been converted." A half hour later, I said, "Father, did you know that Mr. Doe changed his vote because some ward-heeler gave him ten dollars? Do you think he did right when he changed his vote?" "Oh, that puts a different attitude on the question," said father. A little additional information did more than a day's arguing or a year's praying would have done to change father's opinion. May the good Lord make us willing always to keep our hearts and minds open for a little additional information.

In the light of present times we can easily see the character of these old devils of the last century. We waste no time trying to prove the evils of witchcraft, inquisition, slavery, while we take a few parting shots at the liquor traffic, but our present danger is that of a passive attitude, a negative relation because of ignorance and dullness of apprehension to the devils next door. Shall we be satisfied with a conscience that lulls us to believe that these modern devils are not within the legitimate range of our protests and active opposition?

Thomas Carlyle wrote, "Let the world take the old spectacles off his nose and discover almost in contact with him, what the real Satan and soul-devouring devil now is! Original sin and such like are bad enough I doubt not; but distilled gin, dark ignorance, stupidity, dark corn law, Bastille and Company, what are they? Will the world discover our new, real Satan, whom he has to fight, or go on droning through his old nose spectacles, about old extinct Satans, and never see the real one till he feels him at his own throat or ours?"

The Chief Modern Devil

Chief among the modern devils is war. "I hate you most of all because you lay your hands upon the finest qualities of human life, qualities that rightly used would make a heaven on earth and you use them to make a hell on earth. You take our spirit of courage and devotion and instead of letting it be a benediction in the world, you use it to burn cities and sack cathedrals and slay men. You take our loyalty that, well-used, would redeem the world and you harness it to a movement that inevitably means the rape of women, the murder of children and the starvation of whole populations. You take our religion and to help your deadly work you rend our God in pieces and make of him a score of tribal deities to whom men pray, as old barbarians, before our Lord had come, prayed to their idols as the gods of war. You take our science, the fruit of our dedicated intelligence and you make even of that an effective minister of hate. This is the deepest charge against you, that you take our noblest powers and prostitute them to destructive ends."—(Dr. Harry E. Fosdick.)

You make "man loyal to his tribe but to his race apostate."—(Dr. Edward Shilleto.)

"That the end justifies the means is the fundamental philosophy of war. No sane man denies the horrors and brutalities of war. Plunging a bayonet of steel into quivering human flesh, mowing men down with a machine gun as wheat before a scythe, blinding men with gas, boiling men in oil, mangling women and children with bombs, drowning the helpless, starving the innocent, these are everywhere recognized as unspeakably horrible. Yet they are an essential part of war. Men abhor the practices. They sanction them because the end justifies the means. The law of military necessity holds sway. Do whatever is necessary in order to win."—(Dr. Kirby Page.)

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson wrote to Dr. Page in reference to his pacifist position, taken after his experiences overseas, "You know I am not able to go as far as you do, but I am always happy to have men who feel as you do express their convictions, for it is possible that you are right and that

The Sweet Old Chapters

ONE of the sweet old chapters
After a day like this—
The day brought tears and trouble,
The evening brings no kiss.

No rest in the arms I long for—Rest, and refuge, and home;
Grieved, and lonely, and weary,
Unto the Book I come.

One of the sweet old chapters—
The love that blossoms through
His care of the birds and lilies,
Out in the meadow dew.

His evening lies soft around them;
Their faith is simply to be;
Oh, hushed by the tender lesson,
My God, let me rest in thee!

the rest of us will have to come up to where you are." All honor to Dr. Jefferson as he stands in the front ranks of the Bereans, willing to search daily for additional information.

One of Carlyle's devils is still abroad. In the matter of spiritual education against "dark ignorance," we are "scratching the ground with pin points when we ought to be plowing deep." When Bismarck looked with prophetic vision toward an empire, he began by teaching militarism in the primary schools and in the churches and in every available place to every available person. Toledo, the best Sunday-school city in America, reports that the best that can be done even there is to line up one third of the children in the Sunday schools. This one-third attends irregularly, the few present every Sunday receiving twenty-six hours of instruction a year from indifferently prepared teachers. Our Catholic and Jewish friends set us an example in efficiency a thousand per cent higher.

If the mind of Jesus is to take the place of the spirit of force and materialism we must accept the dictum of Robert Raikes, "Evil is preventable; begin with the child." We must supplement our present high efficiency in every-day education with an every-day efficiency in spiritual education. Week-day instruction related to public school education in moral and spiritual realities is the coming weapon, already proved effective in 500 communities.

In spite of the missionary propaganda of over a century the devil of LITLNESS is yet with us. The hosts of the provincial minded are big enough to call for a vigorous campaign in behalf of the program for which Christ was willing to die. I picked out a duplex envelope from the plate recently and discovered that the giver thought Jesus merely wished to be mayor of the city. At least all that he had contributed was in the side of the envelope which stood for local work. He did not realize the meaning of his Lord's prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth."

It might be possible for some folks to be disciplined for some of the old orthodox sins; unbelief, stealing, lying, swearing, gambling, murder, etc., by a board of deacons who themselves ought to be disciplined for meanness and covetousness which is classed in the New Testament with idolatry and drunkenness. The man who works long enough to earn 10 cents in order to get a loaf of bread that he may put into his stomach so that he can get more strength to earn another 10 cents that may be translated into another loaf of bread to go into the stomach of a missionary over in China is learning how to overcome littleness in his life by transferring his strength over a world-wide area.

A Little Saint and Devil

There is a little saint and a little devil of the same name and it requires the keenest insight to tell 't'other from which. INDIVIDUALISM is basic in the Baptist denomination. In gospel work folks are not saved by crowds. You may lose a man, however, by sending him too far along the right road. The farmer who made his sour apple orchard produce sweet fruit did it by grafting the trees, one by one, but in the interest of the conservation of the fruit, he put a wall around the orchard and not around each individual tree. An over-emphasized individualism may hold a gospel truth so close to the eyes that another gospel truth concerning relationships in the crowd may be hidden from view.

The old individualism may be represented by a circle with Jesus in the center and the radii of faith reaching to the circumference and driving off the old orthodox devils that so persistently tempt us ordinary mortals. A few social service workers with a false conception have removed Jesus from this center and placed him within a circumference on which dwell the demons that interfere with the relationships of men.

The true circle has a double circumference. With Jesus at the center the radii reach out along the lines of faith to the circumference of individual salvation and then continue on through this to the farther circumference of social relationships.

The publican truly prays, "God be merciful to ME." Having obtained mercy he sits at the feet of Jesus and prays, "Forgive US OUR debts."

We shall never get beyond the need of singing the old individual hymns: "Rock of Ages, Cleft for ME"; "Jesus, keep ME near the cross"; "Lead thou ME on." We need, however, more hymns like "America," which begins "MY country 'tis of thee," and closes with, "Great God, OUR king."

When a man prays "Give US OUR daily bread," he must be interested in the means necessary to provide the bread and his thought necessarily goes out to the industrial world. Both employer and employe must remember they are helping to answer their own prayers that the other man may get what is justly coming to him.

On the outer circle of relationships among men the devils are laughing in glee today because so many Christians and churches have never seen the necessity of prolonging the radii of their religion beyond the circumference where abide the old, original, orthodox devils who interfere simply with individual salvation. Lord Shaftesbury's report, after he had worked fourteen years in the interest of a ten-hour day, sounds familiar, "I am puzzled by strange contrasts. Support from infidels with opposition or coldness from professors of religion. Last night I pushed the bill through the committee with most discreditable opposition. Sinners with me, saints against me, strange contradiction in human nature." Some of us are wondering what is the next best move to help get the little children out of the mills in the states which are happy over the recent decision of our Supreme Court that the national law is unconstitutional because it interferes with state rights.

"Preserve Chaos!"

Before mentioning the last grim devil, whom if we could slay, most of the others would flee away, I wish to say that I am not so much concerned as to whether this sermon will enlist you in the fight against any particular set of demons as I am that it will cause you to see the necessity of the open mind. Somebody said about Metternich, "If he had been present when God began to bring order out of chaos, he would have prayed fervently, 'O God, preserve chaos!'" Douglas Jerold says, "Some men can never relish the new moon out of respect for that venerable institution, the old moon." Of course there are folks who get out of patience with the old moon in their feverish desire to see the new come round.

We feel sometimes like the freshman class in the college scrap. The fact became known that the key-man on the sophomore side would wear a red sweater. He was plainly discernible among the great mass of white sweaters all about him. When the whistle blew for the start, fifty other sophomores stripped off white sweaters and appeared in red. The particular one that the Freshmen hoped to get was lost in the crowd.

Jesus says to us as we enter the fray, "Judge not. Why behold the mote in your brother's eye with the beam in your own?" Then he says again, "Give not what is holy to dogs. Cast not your pearls before swine." We wonder how we are to tell sometimes. Then he says again, "Ask and it shall be given you." If we seek God's word from beginning to end we shall find one truth so plainly set forth that this prominent devil with the red sweater will not get lost in the crowd. His name is UNBROTHERLINESS.

At times he seems omnipresent among the followers of the Lamb as well as the emissaries from the pit—Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile, White Man and Black Man, Presbyterian and Methodist, Soprano and Contralto, Conservative and Liberal. The red devil here enjoys the best times of his life. Some sweet day, bye and bye, grace enforced by common sense, will show the world that nothing can withstand the onward march of a brotherly Christianity. No other kind can truly claim to be Christian even though it fight every other demon from hell. Read I Corinthians 13.

My Prayer

I DO not ask, my God, for mystic power
To heal the sick and lame, the deaf and blind;
I ask Thee humbly for the gracious power
Just to be kind.

I do not pray to see the shining beauty
Of highest knowledge most divinely true;
I pray that knowing well my duty,
This I may do.

I do not ask that men with flattering finger Should point me out within the crowded mart,
But only that the thought of me may linger
In one glad heart.

I would not rise upon the men below me,
Or pulling at the robes of men above;
I would that friends, a few dear friends,
may know me,
And knowing, love.

I do not pray for palaces of splendor
Or far among the world's delights to roam;
I pray that I may know the meaning tender
Of home, sweet home.

I do not ask that heaven's golden treasure
Upon my little blundering life be spent;
But, O, I ask thee for the perfect pleasure
Of calm content.

Safeguarding the Teaching in Our Foreign Mission Schools

A word of assurance. Convert, baptize, teach, is the only successful method of missionary work. Government grants for school work are declined. The teacher must be first a missionary. Greatest educators come from missionary force on the field. Safeguarding union work.

By W. T. ELMORE

BEFORE taking up the discussion of the problems involved in this subject, I wish to speak a word of assurance. It is usually understood, and rightly so, that our missionary work represents the highest devotion to Christ and the truest allegiance to the foundation principles of our faith. Our foreign schools have usually been the direct outgrowth of the evangelistic missionary work, and thus have shared in this commendable position.

There are reasons for these high standards. First, it is only young people of a deep and genuine Christian experience and of real faith in the Bible and in the atoning and regenerating work of Christ who will offer themselves for foreign service. Our Baptist young people have been strong here, and because of our failure to provide for sending them out, we have lost many of them to other denominations which seem to be more successful in financing their work, but less successful in producing missionaries.

The young missionary is subjected to more examinations and a greater sifting process than is the young minister. And here our boards cannot be too careful, for the checks on the missionary are less than on the home worker. After reaching the field the romance and glamor are soon gone, and the trials and difficulties of the work are such that only those who have the root of the matter in them will continue in the work.

Foundations of Faith Strengthened

The general effect of missionary work is to strengthen one in the foundations of his faith. The missionary meets with many disappointments, but the greatest are the failures of anything but the gospel to change the lives of the people, and his greatest success and joy comes from the transformed lives of Christians. I have seen more than one earnest young man or woman who has come to the field with the idea of giving his or her main strength to educational or social work, become an ardent evangelist. They do not necessarily forsake their specialty, but evangelistic zeal increases as they see its absolute necessity. These influences have so operated that our foreign schools have, I believe, been uniformly true to the faith. In my twelve years' experience as a missionary, and from considerable observation, I have not known of any departures among our Baptist mission schools from the foundation principles as held historically by the great body of our denomination.

But all this does not indicate that this is an unnecessary subject. The time has come when our foreign schools are becoming stronger. They are getting more and more away from the control of the missionaries who established them. The modern emphasis on the redeeming power of education and the regenerating power of social Christianity, and the rationalistic influences in our educational institutions, both state and denominational, will certainly be felt in our foreign educational work unless due precautions are taken.

The Object of Our Missionary Work

One of the most important safeguards is that we never forget the great object of our work. Christ told us to go and make disciples, baptize them and teach them. It is remarkable how this sequence proves to be the only successful method of missionary work. We are in danger these days of inverting the order. Social Christianity, so-called, and education are often presented as being the real work which will stand the test of modern thinking.

For the Shut-Ins

*FOR hearts that to their home are true,
Where'er the tides of power may flow,
Have built a kingdom great and new
Which Time nor Fate shall overthrow,
These are the empire builders, these
Annex where none shall say them nay,
Beyond the world's uncharted seas,
Realms that can never pass away.*

—ALFRED NOYES.

I would not be understood as underestimating this work. Every missionary does educational and social work. The danger is that we should displace the evangelistic work for these. Some time ago the autobiography of Dr. Clough was published with the title, "Social Christianity in the Orient." That title was added after Dr. Clough's death. I have my doubts about his having chosen it. In any case it was misleading. At one time Dr. Clough brought a number of plows to India in his early days. Not one of them ever was successfully used. He gave them to farmers, and they rusted out, thrown out into the cactus. But Dr. Clough did not neglect educational and social work. He was a marvellous evangelist. I doubt if any other person since apostolic days has brought as many people to Christ. But he established village schools, then a theological seminary, then a high school and junior college, and during his last years was doing his best to get industrial work established. But this work all followed the New Testament plan. His early ideas of transforming India by bringing plows failed absolutely. I think it was but a passing experiment. He, and his successors in that wonderful Telugu Mission, have been strong in first working for the conversion of the people by evangelistic methods, and then teaching them in all ways of Christian life.

Moreover, one of the most recent attestations to this plan is the decision on the part of the Indian missions to decline government grants for school work. The missionaries wish to be untrammelled in their efforts to make the schools absolutely Christian, and in making them places for the training of young people who shall go back to their villages with the vital evangelistic message.

While humanitarian motives might lead us to do industrial work among the non-Christians, I believe we have no call whatever to give non-Christians a secular education. The humanitarian work is a failure in so far as teaching is concerned until the people become Christians. But the educational work is worse than a failure, as it produces some of the most influential opponents of Christianity. The one object of the educational work is to develop our Christian people in every good work, and to make them Christian workers. When non-Christians are admitted to the schools, as they usually are, it should be with the one idea of making them Christians. That this is the ideal in our schools is shown, for instance, by the Shanghai Baptist College, where in the entering class 16 per cent are Christians, while in the senior class 96 per cent are Christians. The college declares in its constitution that its purpose is "to propagate the Christian faith and to promote evangelical Christianity." Only with such a purpose should a college receive non-Christians. And such results will be achieved only when the teachers are first of all great missionaries.

Selecting the Teachers

It is very evident that the crux is in this. The schools will be what the teachers make them. The teachers in turn will be what the American homes, churches, schools, and social life make them. If my contention as to the object of educational work is true, then the teacher must be first a missionary. Herein is a present danger. I have often seen posted in the halls of our colleges and universities a call for foreign workers put forth by that great and worthy organization, the Student Volunteer Movement. And in the poster the call was made for physicians, engineers, agriculturists, teachers, stenographers, chemists, administrators, and other attractive occupations. This was done in all good faith, and no doubt the main intention was to challenge the student. As a matter of fact I think the reaction is the other way. When the student realizes that he must go out under a missionary board, his ardor cools.

Meanwhile the old call for real missionaries to advance the cause of Christ does not go unheeded. I am not distressed because of the lack of young people to respond. What distresses some of us who are dealing with the young, and especially with students, is whether they can be sent out or not because of finances.

I would have the teacher selected so far as possible from the missionary force on the field. There is where we have secured our greatest educators. No one is fitted to teach in a foreign school until he knows something of the people. The ideal way is not to send out one designated to a certain school, but to send out a properly equipped missionary, and when the time and need come he can be transferred to educational work. Such a teacher comes with the native language, without which it is impossible to understand the people or teach well. He will also be matured in thought and will have a knowledge of his great task.

With the increase in the number of our schools and the need for specialists as teachers, this may not seem practical in all cases. I believe it is highly practical. In fact, it is almost our established method in days past. Let the young missionary first prove his qualities in the field, and if his associates mark him for educational work, when he comes home on his first furlough, let him specialize in the required branches and you have your ideal educationalist.

Where one is sent out definitely for educational or industrial work, he should have at least three years' field experience, and be expected to learn the language. I have known people to lose more than these three years in ineffective work because this method was not adopted.

I would make one exception. I approve of sending out a limited number of young unmarried college graduates for short terms as teachers. Their youth and zeal will make up for lack of experience. But they must be young men of established character and who have been zealous in Christian work and real soul winners at home. For supplementary teaching in schools where English is used this is a worthy plan.

But the great objective as time goes on is foreign schools with their own native faculties of Christian men, with the leadership and inspiration of great missionary educators, so long as they shall be required. And these will never be secured by sending out young men because of their intellectual and scholastic attainments. We must still send out missionaries. We should choose only those who have shown a real passion for Christian service at home and whose one great object is to bring people to Christ.

The Control of Our Educational Work

I stand strongly for the local control of our educational work by the missionary organization on the field; as the institutions grow there is danger that they will become somewhat independent of the field and station missionaries. It is for the work of that field missionary who lives in tent month after month among hundreds of villages and hundreds of thousands of people, that the educational work exists. It is for the training of his boys and girls, and to send them back among those villages, well equipped Christian workers, that we give our money for educational missions. It is not to secure a career for native young men, nor for building up fine educational institutions.

This plan is largely followed, and should be understood and supported. The boards of trustees are made up of missionaries and usually they choose the teachers, or at least approve them. If there is any questionable teaching being introduced the missionaries who send their boys and girls to the school will discover it and correct it.

Union Educational Work

Much may be said in favor of union work, especially in colleges for women, medical schools, and other special work.

Such work is more economical, and usually more efficient. There is a possibility that it will make a favorable impression as to Christian unity, although I do not think that the need here is at all as often represented. Moreover, this union work may reach some individuals financially who would not give otherwise. For these reasons it should have due consideration.

The House-Top

SOME years ago the slogan was, "Watch your step!" In the street-cars, at the street-crossings, wherever you went, this sign could be seen and heard, "Watch your step!" It was meant as a warning to careless pedestrians. Perhaps at that time people became so accustomed to watching their step, to walking with eyes bent on the ground, that their hearts and minds have grown bent in the same downward direction. It is a good thing to "watch your step," if we do not at the same time, forget to look upward. Many of us are real pessimists all through life. Eye, heart, mind and soul take a downward direction. Even the best of Christians are often prone to the dark side of life. If there ever was a person who has a right and privilege to look up, it is the true Christian.

In Mexico we are greatly blessed with having house-tops. These are useful in time of rain and as protection from the sun. Our chicken coops are here—we hang our clothes here to dry. But these are not the only uses to which we put our house-tops. After a weary day of work, when tired in body and mind—after seeing misery, poverty, sickness and per chance death; after the narrow, dirty streets, filled with the hurrying crowds, after discouragement and grief over mistakes, perhaps—how glorious, how refreshing to fly to the house-top! Here we look "up and not down." To the east, the fine old snow-capped volcanoes send us their cooling breezes; to the west, the golden sun is sinking, leaving behind a path of gold, against which the picturesque old tower of the church shows in relief. This old church stands guard over the sepulcher of Mexico's stanch old hero who gave her religious freedom, Benito Juarez. What would Mexico be today but for the life and deeds of Juarez? But he lived and wrought for Mexico's religious liberty and we are glad that, from our house-top, we can see the green trees and the old church tower that shade his tomb.

On the house-top among the clouds and mountains we may come face to face with God, we may hear his voice calling us back to our task. This still small voice brings to our heart the peace and quiet which we need and gives us courage to go down to the crowds, amid the unrest, and try to give them that "peace which passeth all understanding." "He restoreth my soul, he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." Oh, that all the world had house-tops!

—May Bagby Rudd.

The union college, however, presents problems with regard to safeguarding its teaching. First, there is the control of several bodies, and no one of them, through courtesy, will press its own beliefs and teachings. The danger is that definite teaching may be lacking. By the process of elimination of anything not agreeable to all the others, definite doctrinal teaching may be left out entirely.

There is the danger from the control of several bodies that any defects in the teaching are more difficult to reach. The college board is likely to give less attention to such matters because of its diverse composition.

In the union college there is more danger of neglecting the evangelistic work. The ideals are likely to be intellectual. The faculty is likely to be chosen directly from America because of scholastic attainments. The work is generally in English, and the new teacher may begin at once without knowledge of the language or people. Teachers will more often come professionally for short periods and not as real missionaries.

These dangers come to the same thing that we find at home, that when a denominational college becomes well endowed, or otherwise independent of the denomination, it becomes at times very independent in its teaching, and when occasion rises may deny its parentage. The Baptist colleges which are still near to the heart of the denomination, and which are still dependent on the denomination for support, are the ones which give us no grave concern as to their teaching.

Shall we then refuse to cooperate in union work? I think we may well take our part here, but there must be the proper safeguards. We should study carefully the charters of these institutions to see what their ideals are. We should insist that they be absolutely Christian and evangelical. We should plan for the selection of our members on their boards in such a way that instead of self-perpetuating boards the denomination itself should have real representation. The control of such colleges should be definitely in the hands of the missionaries on the fields in whose missions they serve. No board with headquarters in America can do more than give long distance advice, the most of which proves to be impractical. The final and best safeguard is to give the control to the resident missionaries through their representatives.

Union Theological Work

Here is a different problem. I approve most heartily of union work when it is a union between different groups of Baptists. As is the case in Shanghai Baptist College and Theological Seminary, where Northern and Southern Baptists unite, and in the proposed Union Seminary on the Telugu field, where Canadian and American Baptists work together. I think we may safely plan for union work with the English Baptists, although the problem is not so simple. The dangers and safeguards mentioned above apply to uniting with other denominations in college work.

But when it comes to theological work and the training of Christian workers, I oppose any union effort with other denominations. In South India, when I was actively connected with our work there, a Union Theological Seminary was organized, supported by several denominations. The pressure was strong on the part of

The Tasks That Confront Us

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

Opening Address of the President of the Northern Baptist Convention at the Fifteenth Annual Session, Indianapolis, June 14, 1922.

THE delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention of 1922 face the most serious condition and the most momentous questions that have ever confronted a Northern Baptist Convention. I am sure that we are all sobered by the weight of responsibility that is ours. Our children's children will look back to this hour and judge us by what we do. If we are small, or weak, or cowardly; if we are swayed by passion or prejudice or take counsel of our fears they will write down our failure with shame and sorrow. We must not disappoint the present; we must not fail the future; the times summon every delegate to draw on his resources of spiritual power. The occasion summons him to lay aside childish things and really to be, during the days just ahead of us, the man he longs to be.

We meet as Baptists. We have a great history. We are trustees for great principles. We face great opportunities. We are not sufficiently conscious of our history and the notable contribution we have made to the cause of individual liberty, civil and religious. There was dedicated in Washington, recently, a memorial to Roger Williams. The president of the United States turned the first spade full of earth when they laid the foundation of the Roger Williams Memorial Church. Charles Evans Hughes, the secretary of state, delivered a great oration on the contribution of the individualist to the development of America at the laying of the cornerstone, and President Mullin, of the Southern Baptist Convention, preached an uplifting sermon.

Trustees of Great Principles

We Baptists may be proud of our history. We are trustees of some great principles, never more needed by the world than now. Let us not betray them. We Baptists are the recognized democrats of the Protestant world. The local church is our depository of ecclesiastical authority. The association has no authority over the local church; the state convention has no authority over the association; and the Northern Baptist Convention has no authority over the state convention. All these are voluntary cooperative associations created for the sake of greater effectiveness in the business of the kingdom. But as democrats we regard the right to cooperate as equally sacred with the right to differ. It is ours to prove that without abandoning our democracy we can learn to stand shoulder to shoulder in the cooperative prosecution of the great tasks of the kingdom.

These principles of ours, the independence of the local church, the competency of the ordinary man to come to God directly without the assistance or oversight of priest or bishop, the absolute separation of church and state, and the civic and spiritual freedom of the individual conscience, have some direct and practical applications to which I venture to call the attention of the delegates.

There has been much talk about the necessity of issuing some Baptist statement of faith. Some are violently opposed to this, others ardently long for it. Will it not help both parties to remember, that, as President Mullin has said, the thing to emphasize in any such confession of faith is that it must be voluntary in its adoption and in its operation. We have no body of delegates with power to impose upon our churches a confession of faith or a creedal statement. Certainly the Northern Baptist Convention has no such power, nor has any state convention or association, nor any other group of people. Much light is thrown upon the question by the study of our history. There were many statements of faith issued by various groups of Baptists during the seventeenth century. Every one of them was put forth for the purpose of enlightening the public regarding the real aims and beliefs of Baptists, not one was formulated to be an authoritative statement to which Baptist churches must conform.

The New Hampshire Confession

The famous New Hampshire confession itself was never adopted by the state convention which appointed the committee that framed it. It spread from church to church voluntarily. Now if the Northern Baptist Convention should appoint a committee to draw up a Baptist statement of faith we should never allow the committee to report back to the convention, we should never formally adopt the report as our official statement. We should allow the committee sufficient funds to give publicity to the statement and leave it in the hands of the local church to do, as it did with the New Hampshire confession, modify, or abridge, or adopt bodily as it sees fit. For we Baptists to have an official confession of faith would come perilously near to abandoning one of our fundamental principles.

It is hoped that if we do direct a committee to draw up a statement of belief it may be brief, expressed in simple, plain, non-theological terms and that it may emphasize the principles for which our denomination stands. It is to be hoped that able men, representative of the various phases of thought, among us, may be appointed upon the committee, and that they may take time enough to formulate a statement that in elevation of thought and felicity of expression may worthily record the apprehension of our own generation of the truths of the Gospel of Jesus.

We face great opportunities, too great for us rightly to measure them. One hundred million people in Europe, as a result of the war, have religious liberty for the first time. Our distressed brethren in many lands need us to help them set up the standard of a free church in a free state. In Latvia, Poland, Belgium, France, Czechoslovakia, Russia, Spain and Italy there are opportunities such as had not entered into our fathers' hearts to conceive, waiting for us to enter in and possess them. But we need to ask ourselves soberly a question. Have we, ourselves, a firm hold of the principle of toleration and religious freedom so that we can help them to establish it? Are we free from religious intolerance and bigotry? Pray God that we may purge ourselves of any root of bitterness and rise to the fullness of this great opportunity.

From all sections of our mission fields comes the news of rising tides of evangelism that are lifting our missionary enterprise in their mighty arms. Is this a time for us to diminish our aid when from Assam, from Burma, from India, from Africa, from China and Japan and the Philippines come tidings of nations in commotion prepared for Zion's war? If we look to our own beloved America the prospect is the same. The time demands of us such a program for home missions and city missions as shall enable Baptists to do their share in making America truly Christian. The Sunday-school world is awakening to a new sense of responsibility for the moral welfare of our nation. To our Publication Society we have entrusted our most precious possessions, our children. To it we commit religious education and to it we must also give the funds for a tremendous advance. The only limit to the opportunity is the spirit of the churches. The summons is clear to go in and possess the land.

One of the great topics that will engage the attention of the delegates is the prosecution of the New World Movement. We are not unique in having such a movement. We share with our Protestant brethren of every name the impulse and the determination to attempt vastly greater things for Christ than we have ever dared to dream before. The Centenary Movement of the Methodists, the New Era Movement of the Presbyterians, the Seventy-Five Million Movement of Southern Baptists, the New World Movement of the United Presbyterians and similar enterprises of the Lutherans, the Episcopalians and the Congregationalists, are all outward and visible signs of a great spiritual awakening on the part of the churches. Those who cannot discern the signs of the times see nothing in these great heroic enterprises, but the "commercializing of religion" because forsooth we strive to bring into the treasury sums adequate to prosecute tasks of the kingdom in the great new day.

Out of the War

One of the good heritages that came to us out of the war was the consciousness that we must either as a soldier boy expressed it "put up or shut up," that we could not continue to sing "The Light of the world is Jesus," "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun does his successive journeys run" and contribute only our loose change to make him King and Lord. We must either abandon our claim of his supremacy and our devotion to his cause or square our gifts with our claims.

Every one of these great denominational crusades has fallen on evil days. Each one of them is halted with the vision only partially realized. The voice of criticism is heard, deceit and distrust and disloyalty have their say. Greed speaks only too loudly in many of the objections that are made; but in spite of all, the movements move, the cause goes on, the standards of giving of the church are raised, a new vision of the supreme value of Jesus and his Gospel to the world is gained.

We look so often at the difficulties and disappointment of our present denominational situation, let us look rather at our achievements and take courage.

In a few years we have raised the per capita gifts of our denomination to benefices and education from less than $2 per annum to more than $10. This brings us well up toward the front among the big denominations, but leaves us still humble when we compare ourselves, for example, with the United Presbyterians, who have $21.50 per capita for similar causes. Let us push steadily forward to make a vigorous campaign for stewardship including the tithing of our incomes, and to draw into the blessed fellowship of the New World Movement, all the churches.

The Servant of the Denomination

We Baptists have only just begun to give. We are able to do vastly more than we have done. If our annual income is only equal to the average income of Americans, and who would doubt that we are above the average in thrift and industry, then we receive an annual income of $1,000,000,000. If all Baptists tithed we could give $100,000,000 a year. Malachi's prophetic voice is contemporary: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse and test me now, says Jehovah, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." A frank word ought to be spoken in behalf of the New World Movement, for there has been much unintelligent and misinformed criticism regarding it. It was unanimously adopted at the Denver Convention, and in that decision the Buffalo and Des Moines conventions concurred by overwhelming votes. The General Board of Promotion is not an arbitrary power that seeks to impose from above upon the denomination plans and purposes. It is the servant of the denomination, created by the denomination, elected democratically by the chosen delegates of each state, and is representative of every section of the country and of every group in our constituency.

The criticism directed at the finances of the movement go equally wide of the mark. We are working under a budget system. Every penny that the Board of Promotion spends is definitely budgeted for it by the national finance committee and upon recommendation is authorized by the convention. The same is true of each cooperating board and society.

Yet the mass of criticism has retarded the movement. The persistent stinging and nagging of petty accusations, the irresponsible statements, the wild charges have been believed by many people, confidence has been weakened and a great amount of money diverted to other channels, with the result that our national societies are gravely embarrassed and their work halted.

Brethren, are we big enough for a cooperative movement? Has our Christian democracy learned the lesson that the political democracy of the United States has learned—to acquiesce in the decisions of the majority? Our American nation fights things out at the polls, then adopts the successful candidate as the president of all the people, and goes on quietly for four years. South American nations do not so accept decisions, but are in a continual broil of revolution. Which model do we tend to approximate? I confess to you that nothing has been more disheartening to me than the apparent inability or unwillingness of an influential minority of our people to accept policies and methods decided upon by our conventions by overwhelming majorities, and to give them a fair trial.

If we cannot learn voluntarily to subordinate personal views and preferences to the decision of the majority, if we cannot learn to be good losers, if we cannot cooperatively play the game, then the outlook for our Christian democracy is dark indeed.

But I am persuaded better things of you. I believe we can learn to do team work. I believe we can learn the art and practice of cooperation. I believe that nothing could induce this denomination to go back to the old incompetent days of competition between causes. I believe that we are going forward.

But, we must change our tactics. The last few years have been the story of successive scrapping of machinery. We scrapped the laymen's movement. We scrapped the women's organizations. We scrapped the apportionment plan and now many voices are glibly raised saying, "Let us arise and scrap the Board of Promotion."

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!

Every such scrapping means a loss of power. Every scrapping means a very painful period of readjustment. Every scrapping leaves bitter feelings behind it.

Far better, let us begin to conserve. Let us mend and modify, if need be, but let such a mandate go forth from this convention for the continuation and strengthening of the New World Movement, as shall unify and hasten our purpose.

Let us get behind our leaders. We have magnificent leaders. Let us not cut the heart out of them by our carping criticism. Let us get behind them and go with them to victory.

A question that should receive the attention of the convention is that relating to our schools. Education is the breath of life to a democracy. Free public and compulsory education is one of the corollaries to the declaration of independence. Autocracies can get on very well with education in authority and ignorance in the mass, but our policy demands an educated laity, and not less an educated ministry. We Baptists must become enthusiasts for education. Our twenty-two colleges and twenty academies and seven seminaries are our seed corn for the future, they are our bank deposit, they are our insurance policy.

We get nine times as many candidates for the ministry from our denominational colleges as from all others; five missionaries come to us from denominational colleges to one that we get from other schools.

To keep these colleges standardized, well equipped, fully up to grade, to assure that their influence shall be Christian and only Christian, is the most important task facing the denomination. Let us correct any faults that may exist, but let us not so frighten our people with wild and unfounded criticism that they withhold their generous support and patronage from our schools.

At the Foot of the Class

We Baptists must recognize our need of education. We have to take our place humbly at the foot of the class. All the big denominations stand above us in the proportionate number of students that they send to college. Our ministers must preach on education. We must urge ambitious boys and girls to get an education. We must help to make it possible for them to go to college.

If we take a narrow or a reactionary policy at this time we may alienate the sympathy of our student body, we may drive out from us the very ones whom we shall need to be our leaders for the future.

We must not allow the impression that democracy in religion means smallness of vision and lack of sympathy with generous and progressive aims. I glory in the fact that our New World Movement nationalizes our educational enterprises as it does our standard city mission societies. Always before we have regarded education as a local interest. We have left poor and small constituencies to get their support for their colleges where they could; these little colleges that furnish so big a share of the leadership of the nation.

In the New World Movement the whole denomination mothers every one of its schools and colleges.

Three great civic questions should receive the attention of this convention: International peace, the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment, and industrial relations.

"To rally and to mobilize the whole church of every nation for a solid leadership against the pernicious theory of war is the supreme task just now" says a great leader. There is plenty of sentiment against war in our churches. We must make it intelligent, effective, determined, ready to cooperate with other Christian bodies full of international passion.

The outpouring of purpose on the part of the churches was the great surprise of the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments in Washington. More than 13,000,000 persons expressed themselves in favor of limitations of armaments or of even more drastic measures.

The church must not go to sleep now. We must watch our legislature, state and national. We must petition, write letters and telegrams whenever occasion justifies. We must meet war propaganda with anti-war education. The outbreak of the World War found the church divided, impotent, with no clear testimony. The reproach of that war is upon us. We must

"One Heart and One Soul"

Acts 4:32

THE Northern Baptist Convention is in session at Indianapolis. What transpires there will be of great importance in the work of the current year. It will be determined not only by the vote of the delegates there assembled, but also in large measure by the silent, pervasive influence that emanates from the body of the church membership which cannot attend the meetings. That it may be an atmosphere of fervent, unceasing prayer for divine grace and guidance requires in the hearts of those who go and those who stay at home humble readiness to learn the will of God, and the love that finds the way to fellowship through the patience that is born of God.

Let there be thanksgiving for the noble inheritance which our fathers have left us; for the churches which are their enduring memorial and our houses of praise and prayer; for the heroic pioneer spirit which is still active in men and women in the rank and file of our membership and notably among our missionaries at home and abroad; above all for the eternal God who is our Refuge and can lead us out of our perplexities, and Jesus Christ who is our friend.

The Future of the Baptists

A review of Bishop F. J. McConnell's "Christian Century" article

By GEORGE E. BURLINGAME

THE Christian Century, of Chicago, combines the two roles of an organ of the Disciples of Christ and "a free interpreter of essential Christianity." An outstanding current feature is a series of contributed articles, appraising, from without, and also from within, the leading Christian denominations.

President W. H. P. Faunce of Brown University, leads off, in the issue of May 4, with an article on "The Outlook for Baptists;" and this is followed a week later by a discussion of the Baptists by Bishop Francis J. McConnell from the Methodist point of view.

The dominant theme of the bishop's article is independency. The Baptists claim of pure democracy, the indefensibility of that claim, the inadequacy of such a democracy under modern conditions; these propositions occupy our Methodist critic throughout:

"The Baptist prides himself on what he calls pure democracy. The Baptist congregations are independent units, recognizing no ecclesiastical authority outside of the congregation. * * *

"Pure democracy is the Baptist slogan. What is to be the future of a church, or churches, with such a watchword? Is pure democracy necessarily a Gospel ideal? Are the Baptists as purely democratic as they think? If they are, is pure democracy the best instrument for the world-wide spread of the kingdom of God?"

Gets Us Going and Coming

The bishop's method is first to question the right of the Baptists to exploit this slogan, on the two grounds that our democracy is impaired by our insistence on immersion, and that our missionary administration is undemocratic. Then he proceeds to impeach such democracy as we have left, on the two grounds that it deprives the ministerial order of a preponderating influence over the laity, and that it hinders ecclesiastical cooperation and church union. Thus with a rather naive inconsistency the bishop gets us going and coming. We thought we were purely democratic, but we are not; we are however far too democratic for these modern days when the world is being made safe for democracy!

First, then, our claim of "pure democracy" (which the bishop does not differentiate from independency) is invalidated by our attitude to Christian baptism.

"I doubt if a church is altogether pure in its democracy when it so exalts a mere rite as does the Baptist denomination in preaching immersion. * * * A church which practically withdraws from free, open discussion a minor factor in Christian procedure like the form of baptism is not excessively pure in its democracy. I mean by free discussion that leading to possible rejection."

In his development of this proposition the bishop never once questions the view that "immersion is the New Testament mode of baptism." He goes further, saying, "I belong to a church that accepts immersion as a legitimate form of baptism. If a Methodist probationer should ask me to immerse him I would immerse him." Yet he hastens to express his indifference, if not his disgust, for this "mode" approved by his own church and warranted by the New Testament.

"Even though it is conceded that immersion was the form used in New Testament times, I do not find it under modern baptism conditions—impressive or dignified or self-evidently intelligible."

We can only wonder that so free and unfettered a churchman as the bishop should continue to practice, even by request, an obsolescent ordinance which to him means so little and deserves the severe censure which he bestows on it: "A mere rite," and "artificial requirement," "nothing of any particular consequence," an "elaborately artificial rite, a minor factor in Christian procedure."

In this connection it may be noted that Bishop McConnell appears in a two-fold role in his article on the Baptists. He writes not merely as a friendly critic of a body of Christians, but as an avowed apologist of liberalism and ecclesiastical opportunism. His attitude to the New Testament disqualifies him from appreciating the cardinal Baptist position of reverence for its authority:

"Of course the stock contention is that immersion is the New Testament mode of baptism. Suppose it is. Does that give it any binding force on us today? * * * Unquestioning acquiescence even to twenty centuries of tradition is not democratic. * * * Nor will it help to tell us that Baptist organization is that of the New Testament. We do not live in New Testament times, as regards problems of ecclesiastical organization."

However fully this promise may harmonize with the policy of the Christian Century as "a free interpreter of essential Christianity," and with the spirit of contemporary Methodism, the bishop well knows that it will find acceptance with a very minute segment of the body whose horoscope he undertakes to cast. The great majority of us Baptists are still content to abide by the historic Methodist Article of Religion (XIII) which affirms that "The visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in which the pure Word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly administered according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same."

A second fly in the amber of pure democracy among Baptists is in the undemocratic exercise of authority by state superintendents and mission boards.

"I doubt if any investigation could find much more democracy in the activities of Baptist superintendents than in the activities of bishops in episcopally organized denominations. * * * Even with the local self-sufficient congregation * * * board secretaries * * * attain almost to what the Methodists call 'appointing power.'"

Reasoning from Exceptional

It is hardly needful to remind the bishop that the typical self-supporting Baptist churches which make up the larger constituency of the Baptist denomination, are the legitimate theme of his criticism, rather than the embryonic and immature bodies which, during the period of their fostering and supervision, are of necessity in some measure responsible to the missionary societies which develop them and which commission and support their ministers. Self-supporting churches democratically select and elect their own ministers, either with or without the suggestion and approval of board secretaries, entirely at the pleasure of the churches concerned. The bishop seems to have fallen into the fallacy of reasoning from the exceptional, while we are here concerned with affirming the customary and usual, which is vital to any accurate consideration of the bishop's theme.

Having convicted us (if one considers the evidence adequate for conviction) of possessing a democracy far from pure, Bishop McConnell shifts his position and ventures the implication that we have too much democracy, such as it is. Our ministers are too indifferent to their position, too generous with the laity in ignoring their own relative rank.

"The emphasis on pure democracy among Baptist churches is inclined to take the form of mixing ministers and laymen rather indistinguishably together. * * * The Baptist idea of ecclesiastical democracy is not such as to allow the opinion of Baptist ministers as a group to count as it should, as over against the voice and practice of the laity."

If we are at all capable of sensing current tendencies in the thought of America and the world, this mild reproach laid upon the Baptists by the bishop may be worn with proper pride. Moreover when we reflect that the term laity includes the womanhood of our Baptist fellowship, we confess our amazement that the bishop should have written these words concerning the laymen:

"The fact remains that in the social and industrial applications of Christianity, the forward movements of Christianity today, they are not as a class as reliable guides as a group of educated ministers."

Saints—and Saints

By MRS. FRED E. STOCKTON

SOME lives there are, amid the world's high places,
That stand erect, alone,
About them press a throng of other faces—
None they can call their own;
But silent, strong, they breast the storms and dangers
And tower on high,
In desert spots at home, in crowds but strangers,
Their view—the sky.

And other souls, amid earth's lowly places,
Where mankind throng and press,
Go forth to save—all heaven in their faces,
Live but to heal and bless;
All Christ is theirs—his aching, holy pity
For sinners' loss,
With yearning love, they walk the sin-filled city,
And lift—the cross.

The invidious and archaic distinction in Christian churches between clergy and laity, accentuating the superior intelligence and wisdom of the ministers as a professional class, is so contrary to the trend of modern Christian civilization and so subversive of the spirit of "pure democracy," that we are content to lie under the honorable censure of the bishop's frank indictment of us as a people whose ministers refuse to organize themselves as an exclusive class for the more effective domination of the laity of our churches.

The final comment of Dr. McConnell on our denomination is that its democracy serves to hinder the proper development of the whole body of Christ, and to prevent church union.

"If the Baptists could forget some shibboleths, they could join in a federative movement of churches which would be virtual union without surrendering anything essential to the Baptist faith as a Christian faith. * * * I do believe that our Baptist brethren will have to find some closer connectional bond among themselves [has he overlooked our highly-organized and closely-connected General Board of Promotion?] and with the other denominations if they are to play their legitimate part in an expanding spiritual democracy. * * * Until the Baptists are willing to make such modifications it is futile to expect much help from them in effective church cooperation."

The Record Open

The record of American Baptists in the sphere of Christian cooperation is open to all who care to read it. The notable and hearty cooperation of our Baptist missionary societies in the Home Missions Council and the Foreign Missions Conference, to Baptist cooperation in interdenominational Sunday-school work, in the ill-starred Interchurch World Movement in which the bishop himself was so large and useful a factor, in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and in numerous other representative Christian bodies. We perceive a valid and momentous distinction between the terms "cooperation," "federation," and "union." As for any form of federation or union which would substitute "procedure by discussion" for the authority of the New Testament, and so destroy the distinctive elements in the Baptist message and mission, we heartily voice for ourselves the prayerful interlude of Bishop McConnell: "The Lord deliver us from any type of church union which will level us all down into a dull uniformity, or wipe out the distinctive spiritual marks of the denominations."

Lincoln and His Critic

"What would you have done in our place?"

DURING the Civil War, President Lincoln and the cabinet one day made a very important decision and announced it to the world. The same day in the senate, Senator Ira Harris of New York, one of the president's friends and a good Baptist, by the way, rose and severely criticized the president and gave six reasons why the action taken by the cabinet was wrong.

That evening President Lincoln happened to meet the senator and said to him, "Harris, I hear that you criticized us in the senate this afternoon and gave six reasons why we should not have done what we did. Now, Harris, it was like this: we felt that the decision was a very difficult and doubtful one, and we reviewed all the arguments on one side and the other and made up our minds as best we could. We had to act within twenty-four hours. We thought of all the reasons which you gave to the senate against our action, and we thought of several other arguments on the same side, which did not occur to you. I will tell you in confidence the reasons which led us to our decision in spite of all the arguments to the contrary." The president then proceeded to detail them.

"Now," said the president, "I want you to tell me just what you would have done if you had been in our place, and I will give you just twenty-four hours to reply. Come to the White House tomorrow evening at eight o'clock and tell me what your decision would have been with all the facts before you."

Senator Harris spent a rather sleepless night, trying to make up his mind, but he couldn't do it. He dodged the president for three weeks, but finally they chanced to meet and Abraham Lincoln said to him, "Well, Harris, I have been looking for you for three weeks; have you yet made up your mind as to what you would have done in those difficult and delicate circumstances?"

"No," replied the senator, "I really can't tell you what I would have done."

"Well," said Lincoln, "you have had three weeks, and we had only twenty-four hours. Now, Harris, there is only one thing for you to do, and that is to rise in the senate and to tell the people that after ascertaining all the facts of the case, you wish to withdraw your criticism of the administration, and to say like a man that you do not know what you would have done under the circumstances."

And Senator Harris, being a gentleman and a Christian, went and did as he was advised.

Some of our brethren in New York have been under considerable criticism. They have had very difficult and delicate questions to decide. Sometimes they have had a time limit imposed on them. Events beyond their control forced a decision long before they thought they were competent to make one. With great reluctance and hesitation they have made these decisions with insufficient light in the best way they could. Subsequent events proved that many of them were wise, and that some were mistakes. But if you, with your omniscient hindsight, had been sitting with them in New York, you too would have hesitated and wavered and doubted, and finally would have been forced to decide just as they were, and probably just as they did.

The Open Forum

"FAITH, FELLOWSHIP AND FUNDAMENTALISM."

The Closed and Open Forums of THE BAPTIST—the editor's columns and the opinions of controversialists—of the issue of May 27, especially interest me. They deal with three important words, and words that one must admit are now in the ascendant—"Faith," "Fellowship" and "Fundamentalism."

True to its constant attempt at novelties, the editorial column really accomplishes this time, and teaches us "that two can walk together without being agreed." We confess frankly that we had always supposed the Scriptures meant exactly the opposite; but, of course, literalism is tabooed, and when the Scriptures are spiritualized they can be made to mean anything one desires—witness Mary Baker Eddy in her remarkable production "Science and Health with a Key to the Scriptures."

The editor further argues that the basis of brotherhood in the Baptist denomination is not a matter of doctrine, but a confidence in the sincerity of one's faith. If so, why on earth have we so long behaved after the unbrotherly fashion of refusing fellowship to pedit-Baptists, demanding that they be baptized before they come into our churches at all; and that they receive the same ordinance before they sit at the table with us? And why, pray, have we disfellowshipped Unitarians; they are sincere men, are they not, and have as much right to their opinions as we have to ours? In truth, why disfellowship anybody, why not make up a church, as advised only three years since, by our Baptist president, of "Jews," Unitarians," "Agnostics," and "Atheists?" With mutual trust we might walk together on a "basis of unity other than identity of doctrinal conviction!"

The editor's "Closed Forum" seems offended because I quoted with approval The Presbyterian. What is wrong with the Presbyterians? Only a little while ago an extended article appeared in the columns of THE BAPTIST lauding a certain Methodist conference in the East, and paying remarkable tribute to the "liberalism" that characterized its thinking. Why did not THE BAPTIST object to having Methodism set before us as an "authoritative exponent of Baptist policy?" In fact, I have in my left hand The Congregationalist of May 18. It contains an article on "Fundamentalism and Fellowship." If THE BAPTIST is so much afraid of introducing the opinions of pedit-Baptists into our church policy, how does it happen that it revokes the very sentiments of the confessedly liberal Congregationalist?

The editor can hardly be ignorant of the fact that this represents a denomination that enjoyed the first and greatest opportunity in America; but by permitting Unitarianism to surreptitiously capture its leaders, lost its crown, and was, in the course of time, outstripped by Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist peoples whose greater progress was absolutely due to their greater loyalty to the plain teachings of God's Word. At least, if not, it presents a puzzle to Baptists, who are with the Congregationalists in church government, and with evangelical Congregationalists in doctrines.

Now to the Open Forum for fundamentalism. Dr. R. M. West and myself were neighbors for five full years. I think in that time, we agreed once on something or other; I can't just remember what. I am, therefore, delighted to find that we are in agreement again, for we both believe that fundamentalists should explain both "their utterances and methods," if in any instances the meaning has not been made plain.

In answer then to his first proposition, I want to refer him to my Buffalo address in which he will find quotations that prove absolutely that certain leaders in our denomination deny the authority of Scripture, and all authority save their own inner consciousness; and we refer him to the declaration of the Denver Convention as a sufficient evidence that "social service" is asking to be made a substitute for evangelism.

Concerning his second proposition, we have to say that no fundamental Baptist has any disposition to "misrepresent or insinuate against any Baptist preacher or leader who carries in his heart a reverence for all that the Des Moines Confession contains." We hail every one of them as brothers in the faith as well as brothers in affection; but we know full well the difference between a confession sincerely made, and a camouflage.

In conclusion let it be said that if Fundamentalists have not defined themselves sufficiently, time remains and we will continue to affirm our position until even our enemies will understand it. Martin Luther wrought "turmoil," "confusion," and probably even "stayed the progress" of the papacy; yet that hardly disproves either the correctness of his position or the righteousness of his conduct.

THE HEART OF THE MATTER

I move that all Baptists rally around the central article of our faith:—

Jesus Christ is the world's only hope of salvation.

Even this crucial doctrine conveys various shades of meaning to as many varieties of Baptists; but it contains the heart of the matter for all of us, and it is the most vital declaration which we can utter in unison.

THE FOLLY OF ADOPTING A CREED

1. No person or group of persons can define a creed that will truly express the conviction of so many people as are embodied in the Baptist denomination.

2. No creed adopted would be interpreted by any two members in exactly the same ideas.

3. If it were possible to state in words a creed that could apply to all present members, new members would be constantly received who had no voice in shaping our formula and ought not to be bound by our personal interpretation.

4. The creed of a living, growing Christian is a living, growing comprehension. It changes from day to day with the growth in capacity and experience of the individual.

5. The better any knowledge is understood, the simpler it becomes. Jesus Christ was the perfect revelation of the Father. These are the words of Jesus, "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life."

6. On the wall of the First Baptist Church in Minneapolis, facing the assembly, are these blessed words, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." That is my creed. That alone is fundamental. That creed all can understand. That is all the creed we need.

THE MACHINERY OF OUR MISSIONARY WORK

We have some mutterings of discontent about what is called the centralizing of our missionary management. It is of interest to note that the Presbyterian general assembly has set aside sixteen organizations and consolidated into four, with women in good proportion on each board. Thus our Baptist idea is in a degree approved. But they have done better than we in one particular. They have divided the country geographically into eight districts. This makes it possible to utilize the local interests and to lighten the detail work of officials. Our Baptist plan has undertaken too much under one central idea. We have as a field the world missions. Then we have at home evangelistic, publication, education, Negro and foreign-speaking work and church building under one convention. No other denomination has such an ambitious undertaking. The Roman Catholics, the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Episcopalians have their dioceses, their synods, their conferences—several of them—but we undertake under one head at one office at one side of the field to cover all the work. It reminds us of the goose that tried to sit on four dozen eggs at once. Some of them were sure to addle.

If we would divide our Northern terri-

Mountain Mania

I MAY as well admit at the outset that I climb mountains myself. I spent the summer in a community in the White Mountains where one was considered hardly respectable unless on every brisk day one dressed up like a pirate and went steaming off up a peak; and I admit that I steamed with the best of them. I wore a flannel shirt that could hold its own against any. No khaki trousers in the neighborhood were more variously spotted, more quaintly discolored, than mine. No tin cup jangled more loudly at any hip than did mine. No sneakers, once white, took on more exactly the sombre hue of the mountain trails up which they twinkled. No one devoured dry sandwiches and hard-boiled eggs with more gusto.

"But to everybody who climbs there comes at last a moment of introspection and doubt. That moment came to me one night when I was camping, without shelter, high on a mountain slope, and when, at about 2 a. m., I felt a first drop of rain on my nose. That drop of rain quickened my torpid brain; the events of the preceding hours passed in review and I asked myself, 'Why do we climb mountains?'"

"I had ascended that mountain the previous afternoon, bent double under the weight of a pack that, in any civilized place, under any normal conditions, I shouldn't dream of carrying if I could hire a porter or an express company to carry it for me. If any employer had paid me, for any useful purpose, to fume and struggle as I did on that climb, and the Consumers' League had caught him at it, we should have heard a lot about a new sweated industry. When I arrived at my destination, I built a fire which for cooking purposes was practically worthless. On that fire I cooked what I was pleased to call a meal. I am convinced that if that meal had been set before me in any restaurant, at the first mouthful I should have risen and walked resolutely from the room. The doctors and the Life Extension Institute and similar organizations spend thousands of dollars every year trying to educate the public not to eat the sort of meal that I ate on that mountain.

"A friend of mine, who is chemically inclined, tells me that he thinks the trouble with that meal was that there weren't any vitamins in it. He explained to me that, if people go without vitamins for a while, they die. I told him his description convinced me that the meal I cooked didn't have a single vitamin in it. He asked me if I thought there were any carbohydrates in it, and I told him that if carbohydrates were any good to eat, I believed we didn't have any. But I admitted that along about midnight I had an uneasy feeling that a calorie must have got into the soup while I wasn't looking.

"After supper, I stretched my wearied limbs to rest on a fir-balsam bed of my own manufacture; and I may say that, if any reputable furniture concern were to put on the market a bed which embodied any of the salient characteristics of mine, an enraged public would sweep it out of business in a week. Finally, at 2 a. m., it began to rain. And I asked myself,
'Why do we climb mountains?'"

"I remembered that the theory had been advanced that mountains are climbed for the sake of solitude. Solitude! At the mere suggestion I laughed a dismal laugh.
I was not thinking of the dense crowds of mountaineers whom I was wont to encounter on this peak or that, or of the thrilling moments I had spent on the upper rocks of the mountains, dodging the flying ginger-ale bottles and sandwich boxes of those who had already gained the summit.
I was thinking of the devoted attentions of the ambassadors of that great triumvirate, mosquitoes, black flies, and midges, of whom, it has been justly said, the greatest of these is midges. In ordinary society, I said to myself, we can generally at least choose our companions. But in the mountains—well, I am no snob, but there are some visitors who don't know when to leave. They will not take a hint.

No; the solitude hypothesis was a feeble one.

"It occurred to me that some persons claimed to go camping in the mountains for the sake of rest. My idea of rest on a mountain, I said to myself, would be to sleep in a spacious four-poster bed, with a roof over me, and at about 9:30 in the morning to open one eye and say to my faithful valet, 'Meadows, my good fellow, have you warmed the pool and put out my clean clothes for me? Very well, then;
now you may describe the sunrise to me.
No, I doubt if I shall do any climbing today. I may climb out of bed, but I'm not sure.'"

"Not until I got home from the mountain that night did I discover why it is that we go climbing. It is that only by absolutely depriving ourselves of the comforts of home on the mountains do we learn to enjoy them when we get down. The usual devotee of the mountains, poor wretch, will tell you, as he crawls in under a fifty-pound pack and staggers off up the trail, that the only way to appreciate the mountains is to go up them. But what I discovered is that the only way to appreciate the mountains is to come down from them.

"That night, when I got home, I found myself in a real house, with a water-tight roof over my head. I began to realize what an ingenious device a house is. Windows, for example, which let in the light, let in the view, let in the air when we want it, and keep it out when it is too hot or too cold for us—I wanted to congratulate the fellow that invented windows. The house, I found, had a kitchen in it, which I had hitherto seldom visited; and in the kitchen was a stove, which sent the smoke up the chimney, collected the heat for the warming of the food, and kept the rain out of the fire. You may not have realized what a great thing it is to be absolutely sure, when a shower begins, that it won't put out the fire in the kitchen stove. I appreciate the vast superiority of the stove over a stone fireplace where the smoke blows in your eye wherever you sit, the ashes deposit themselves in a fine rain on the surface of the coffee, and the fire, after you have finally wheeled it into burning, does so most hotly at the opposite end of the fireplace from the miserable receptacle in which the oatmeal is trying to keep comfortably warm.

"That night I ate dinner off a table, sitting in a real chair. For comfort and convenience, rocks simply weren't in it with that table and chair. Separate spoons for soup and dessert—why, I could hardly believe it. I slept in a bed, with sheets, and with blankets that tucked in, so that you didn't imperil the whole structure whenever you turned over. And, for that matter, why turn over? The impelling urge that comes from the gradual numbness of a sharp left hip was absent. And pillows!—what an improvement on a knapsack containing a can of condensed milk, a flashlight and half a loaf of bread!

"I found myself pausing in rapture before such commonplace objects as a bureau. A contrivance for keeping clothes—dry clothes, plenty of them—all stowed away out of sight and out of the dust, combined with a shelf where one can place a comb and brush and a lamp; how exquisitely adapted to its manifold purposes! When I came down from the mountain, the mere presence of a bureau in my room made me feel like a millionaire. I had made a great discovery. This modern civilization, which we hear so much decried, is great stuff.

"Now that I have learned my lesson, I look with an indulgent eye upon mountain climbers. When morning dawns cool and fair, and I see them plodding forth into the forests, with their tin cups clanking and their drawn faces peering out from under their gigantic rolls of blankets, I wish them well. Sometimes I walk with them a little distance, until the trail begins to get uncomfortably steep; and then I wave them a jaunty good-bye. They are on their way to the great discovery, I say to myself; and then I walk back to my shady porch, surrounded with mosquito netting; and I sit down, and put my feet up on another chair; and as I comfortably settle myself for the morning, I reflect upon the delights of mountain climbing."

The Young Reserves

Young Ever-So-Hungry Writes a Letter

Our New Summer Contest, Open Until August 1.

HAVEN'T you often wondered how it would feel to be some one else for a whole day? Well, here's your chance! For our new summer contest, open to all Baptist boys and girls under fifteen, will consist of a letter which you are to write to yourself from that boy or girl in India who will be your other self!

1. Imagine yourself a boy or girl in India, a very, very hungry boy or girl, who has been invited to a missionary feast. You can think of yourself as a boy wearing a turban or perhaps a girl with a white sorce over her head. Choose to be whatever boy or girl in India you wish, and make yourself think for awhile that you really are that boy or girl; then

2. Decide why you were hungry, and why the missionaries invited you to this feast of

"Curry and rice
And everything nice—
Served on a leaf
The meal is brief!"

3. Then write a letter to yourself telling all about it! Like this, you will probably begin: "Salaam, oh Robert Jones (or Mary Smith, or whatever your real name is!) I thought you would be interested to know why I was hungry and how the people in your church fed me, so I am writing you a letter. It's a long story, because—" etc., etc. With all the dear little India explanation about yourself and your family and what the missionary did and why you were glad. Then sign a name that you think your other self would like, for in India names always mean something: e. g., "Little Ear-Ring," "Star Bright," "Tall Grasses," "True Boy," "Fine Man," etc., anything you want for your new name will do!

4. You may not know enough about your new self to write this letter at once, but the following storybooks will give you dozens of delightful hints: "The Wonderland of India" (50 cents), "A Child Garden in India" (75 cents); or if you own any of these books you will find much about India on the following pages: In "Around the World With Jack and Janet" (30 cents), see pages 32-75; in "Friday's Footprints" ($1.50), see pages 30-82. They may all be ordered from Literature Department, General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York. Then in Missions you will find many ideas, and in your geographies too.

5. Instead of mailing this letter to yourself, of course mail it to Miss Applegarth, in care of THE BAPTIST, 417 South Dearborn St., Chicago, by August 1. Be sure to put your real name, address, and age, in one corner, for the best boy's letter and also the best girl's letter will each be awarded prizes and printed in these

Little Miss India

THERE is a little Hindu girl—
Just about so tall—
Each morning she has rice to eat
But never eats it all.

Oh no, she takes a little out—
About so much, I think,
And gives it to a wooden god
That cannot eat nor drink.

She lays it down before his face
And says a little prayer,
The idol cannot see nor hear,
I wonder—DOES HE CARE?

She does the very best she knows,
'Tis what her mother taught her,
She thinks the idol old and grim
Can help her little daughter.

Why don't you help this Hindu girl
To love the Lord of glory,
And do all that you can to help columns. Other letters deserving honorable mention will be printed too.
Send her the old, old story?

6. Summer vacation is ahead of you, and you will have plenty of time to write the best letter ever. Who's going to begin right now to win these prizes? By the way, they came all the way from India for you!

A number of new India games will be given next week, so that you can play them all summer with your friends.

tory into four sections and have a yearly meeting in each with a quadrennial meeting of all the boards, coupled with assignment of definite fields of missionary work to the sections, we should utilize the local interests and the reserve power that comes from "individual responsibilities." It would give closer oversight to details and could be made to cost less than the present somewhat wasteful method.

It seems to me that the suggestions by the committee for improving the Board of Promotion have this weakness. First, no board of fifteen can know the whole of the United States well; second, the state convention of California and other western states cannot have good equipment for knowing the conditions in Boston and New York, and vice versa; third, annually elected members do not have time to learn the business. No business concern would appoint new managers every year intentionally. I was a member of the home mission board for several years. It was three years before I felt justified in holding any decided opinion about details, and yet I attended, without an absence, monthly meetings regularly and not infrequently an extra meeting in between. I am confident that such a board will not be able, no matter how carefully chosen, to learn the trade well. It ought to be elected if at all for not less than five years, with a yearly election of a part of the board only.

But if the suggestion for four sectional divisions were followed the whole plan would need to be recast. I should like to see it done.

"WILL THE ADOPTION OF A NEW BAPTIST CONFESSION OF FAITH TEND UNTO UNITY?"

At the "fag end" of the afternoon session on June 2 of an annual meeting which had registered more than 400 delegates, the Chicago Baptist Association by a vote of 46 to 22 voted to approve the Columbia recommendation regarding the adoption of a new statement of faith. In the preamble of the resolution one purpose stated was the promotion of unity in the denomination. All other votes at the association, as I remember them, were unanimous; this one was 46 to 22. Moral: If we wish to bring greater unity into the denomination, let us steer clear of conventional adoption of new statements of faith. The action of the Southern Baptists in the matter "tendeth unto unity."

BETTER PRAYING

Matt. 7:7-11

CONSECRATION MEETING

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

Literature

Some very helpful tracts on the subject of prayer may be secured from the American Baptist Publication Society, price 50 for $1. "The Meaning of Prayer," by H. E. Fosdick, price $1.15, should be in the hands of every Christian.

"Prayer is the soul of religion, and failure there is not a superficial lack for the supply of which the spiritual life leisurely can wait. Failure in prayer is the loss of religion itself in its inward and dynamic aspect of fellowship with the eternal."—Fosdick.

Carlyle once stated that: "Prayer is and remains the native and deepest impulse of the soul of man."

If this statement is true, it would appear that the "deepest impulse" of the souls of modern men lies dormant in many professed Christians. Many do not pray at all. On the other hand, there are the millions who in one way or another pray. We may consider prayer:

1. As an approach to God. By this means we shut out the outside world and come into direct communion and fellowship with the very God of our lives. No intermediary is needed for even the simplest child of God. He has access to royalty. When in need the Christian does not have to run the gauntlet of court servants. He only needs to open the floodgates of his own soul; to bring his own will into harmony with the divine. The Christian's God is not confined to any one place. We can meet him on the highway; at the stenographer's desk; in the marts of trade; around the family fireside; in the quiet of our own room, or out with the busy throng. How personal is our God!

2. As a means for supplying our needs. If prayer is the "soul of religion," then it is very evident that there are spiritual needs which can be met in no other way than through prayer. There are temptations to be overcome; difficulties to be surmounted; associates to be won for Christ; personal problems to be settled; life choices to be made.

Prayer is indeed one of the very fine arts of the Christian life. Young Christians will be better Christians when they do "better praying." This does not mean that we should be habitual beggars or that we should continue a worn-out phraseology of other days. It does mean that we will,

in our own way, bring our needs to the great Source of supply.

3. As a cooperative effort. No one has a right to pray "Thy kingdom come" unless he is willing to do something to help bring in that kingdom. Through prayer we are given strength, but for something. The sentimental whine, or the plaintive cry, "The Lord will provide" of the "do-nothing" come pretty close to insult Deity. The robust Christian is the fellow who will learn the secret of real prayer, and yet he will go out to work as if the whole answer depended on him.

Prayer should not be regarded as an obligation, but as a privilege.

"O Lord, keep me sensitive to the grace that is round about me. May the familiar not become neglected! May I see Thy goodness in my daily bread, and may the comfort of my home take my thoughts to the mercy seat of God!"—Jowett.

Here and There

For the period January 1 to March 1, 1922, the B. Y. P. U. of America distributed within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention over 3,000,000 pages of titling literature.

The B. Y. P. Association of Fort Wayne Association, Indiana, announces its first annual assembly at Blue Lake, Aug. 18-20.

The Spring Rally of Toronto, Ont., B. Y. P. U. was held May 1 at Dovercourt Road Church. Twenty-five unions responded with an attendance of about 800.

The annual rally of the Ottawa, Ont., young people was held May 8 at Park Church, Westboro. Rev. M. A. MacLean, the new pastor of First Avenue Church, delivered the address.

The National Americanism Commission of the American Legion is carrying on a national essay contest for which prizes will be awarded. The subject of the essay is "How the American Legion Can Best Serve the Nation." The prizes are to be used to assist the winners to pay for a scholarship in college. Full particulars may be secured from The American Legion, Indianapolis, Ind.

The closing rally of the season for St. Louis young people was held at Euclid Church, June 8. Gen. Secy. White was speaker for the evening.

City B. Y. P. U. of St. Paul, Minn., met in Merriam Park Church for the last rally. Gen. Secy. White was speaker of the evening. Mr. Munson was elected president for the new year. Other officers elected were, Ed Lightbourne, Miss Agnes Hedeon, Miss Helen Briggs, Bert Valiant, Miss Florence Dunn, "Freckles" Gilbert, Miss Anna Glewwe, Elmer Stassen, Miss Leona Smith, and Miss Catherine Erskine.

The encampment for Texas Baptist young people will be held at Palacios, by the sea, July 4-14.

The eleven B. Y. P. U.'s of First Church, Dallas, Tex., sent their director, Miss Effie McDaniel, to the Southern Convention in Jacksonville.

Ford Porter, a live wire down in "Hoosierdom," reports that the young people of the state are greatly enjoying their activities throughout the various associations. Inspirational gatherings are held and young people are won to Christ. Why not? "Young people at work for young people."

The Southern Western B. Y. P. U. and S. S. Convention was held at Liberal, Kans., May 18-19. The Liberal Church people entertained royally. In addition to a large number of conferences, Gen. Secy. White delivered two addresses dealing with "The Present Task" and "A Program of Advance."

The Ohio Baptist Young People's Assembly will be held at Granville, July 28-August 6. The buildings and campus of Denison University provide a most attractive place to the young people of the state.

Over 500 young people attended the Michigan State B. Y. P. U. and S. S. Convention held at Jackson, May 13-14. Gen. Secy. White delivered two addresses.

Mr. W. Fred Reynolds, a member of the board of managers of the B. Y. P. U. of America, conducted a general B. Y. P. U. conference at the Ontario and Quebec Convention meeting in London, May 23-24.

A Publication Society team consisting of Drs. Brown, Chalmers, G. L. White, and Miss Meme Brockway recently held conferences with S. S. workers in Portland and Salem. The conferences were largely attended and resulted in a better understanding of some of Oregon's problems.

The Oregon young people are planning big for the summer assembly.

March 10 a Life Service rally of the Williamette, Ore., B. Y. P. U. Association was held. The attendance reached the high mark of 1,600. Ninety-three young people made a decision for some specific form of Christian service. Rev. G. H. Young is state director.

Mr. A. G. Seibold, 904 6th Street, Peoria, Ill., president of the Peoria B. Y. P. U., has worked out some novel ideas for increasing attendance, etc. He will be glad to pass these suggestions on to other local organizations on request. Write direct to him.

At a recent meeting of the city B. Y. P. U. of Parkersburg, W. Va., held at the Calvary Church, four unions pledged $54 to the state organization, the unions giving in proportion to members enrolled. Plans were perfected for the holding of "pep" meetings in the interest of the summer assembly during May, June and July. Rev. A. B. Withers is state director.

"The Oracle," an attractive bulletin, is the official publication of the Cleveland Association of Baptist Young People. Perry B. Sherman, Jr., has rendered a fine service as president of this organization.

Information regarding Lake Geneva Missionary Education Conference may be had by addressing Missionary Education Movement, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The Southern Illinois B. Y. P. U. and Sunday School Institute was held at First Church, Mt. Vernon, April 21-22. A number of able speakers and conference leaders assisted Director L. H. Koehler in the work of the institute. A similar institute was held at First Church, Galva, April 28-29. The program was built around the theme "Investment of Life." The spring rally of the Bloomington Association B. Y. P. U. was held at First Church, Fairbury, April 28-29.

Hoosier young people observed B. Y. P. U. week, April 30-May 7. The plan called for the young people to have charge of the mid-week prayer service. B. Y. P. U.'s were urged to hold services in the pastorless churches all over the state, Sunday, May 7. Plans are under way for a good delegation to the St. Paul Convention.

St. Louis young people will send delegations to St. Paul Convention and Missouri Summer Assembly, Arcadia Heights. General Secretary White addressed a city-wide rally, June 8.

Up Dominion Way

The Inter-provincial Convention of Ontario and Quebec was held at London on May 23-24 at Adelaide Street Church. The statistical report presented to the convention showed an active membership of 5,421, associated membership of 3,458 or a total of 8,879.

A total of 1,858 took the Bible reader's course, 724 the sacred literature course and 883 missionary studies.

The unions of Ontario and Quebec contributed for local work for the year, $4,205.87, for missions, $2,815.14, and for famine relief, $251.28.

Considerable effort has been put forth along the lines of Bible study, life service activities, trained leaders' courses and the Baptist tithers' league during the last year under the leadership of Mr. Thomas tithes.

A number of conferences were conducted of a very high order. The addresses before the convention were full of interest and enthusiasm for the young life of the provinces. Rev. Sumner R. Vinton was at his best each evening in the presentation of his pictures outlining the missionary task.

The convention voted a number of recommendations, such as holding district rallies in every association this coming fall; an energetic campaign in personal evangelism and soul-winning during the entire season; the advancing of the interests of the various educational institutions; an energetic campaign for new subscriptions to the denominational paper; a membership campaign with an objective of 25 per cent increase in membership; the emphasizing of the need of the attendance of young people upon the worship services of the church; and the objective of 10,000 daily Bible readers for next year.

Mr. Babson Says:

"THE tithing system, if adopted by the churches, would give astounding figures. A compilation shows that the annual business turn-over in this country amounts to over $500,000,000,000. It is estimated that of this amount four-fifths pass through the hands of the church people. One per cent of this amount would mean $5,000,000,000 a year. Assuming that there is a profit of 10 per cent on this turn-over, it would mean that there is coming each year to the church people of this country an income amounting to $40,000,000,000. If the tithing process were in operation, this would give the church in tithes about $4,000,000,000 a year. These figures seem very extraordinary, but on checking them up no flaws can be found. The facts are that the church people of the country are giving less than 1 per cent of their income to church and missionary work. If this were increased to 10 per cent the church would become the most powerful organization, and the wonderful results which have been indicated in this book could eventually come to pass. Then the church could come to its own in a great big way that heretofore it has been able only to talk about."

The key-word of the convention "Others" was used very effectively for setting in motion the advance program for 1922-23. Total registration for the convention was 1,118.

Peoria Wakes Up

Several weeks ago the B. Y. P. U. of First Church, Peoria, Ill., had what they called a "wake-up" meeting. It started off in somewhat usual fashion, songs, prayer, announcements, and the devotional topic. Just as the topic discussion began one of the B. Y. P. U.'ers, dressed as a telegraph messenger, came in calling, "Telegram for Mr. Jones." The telegram proved to be a message from Dr. White, general secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of A. A general discussion on the "wake-up" message followed. After an interval the messenger appeared again with a message from Mr. Howard, state B. Y. P. U. president. Again the discussion of the message was taken up. At intervals of a few minutes each, messages were brought from Mr. Koehler, state director of religious education; Mr. E. E. Leader, associational B. Y. P. U. president; Miss Porter of the training school, and others. This plan helped to put over a big "wake-up" meeting and brought the national, state, district, and associational B. Y. P. U. right into the meeting.

Stewardship Special

Mr. Benjamin Starr of the stewardship department of New York State Board of Promotion is always on the job, as indicated by the following letter:

"Some time ago a tithers' league was started in your church. We have received, up to the present time, — names. If you have added any members to your league since last report will you kindly forward the names so that our records may be correct.

"We now have a neat certificate of membership that will be furnished for all whose names are sent. We will also furnish them for the old tithers if they have not received them and care for them.

"We have some fine reports from the winter's campaign. One church with seventy-three resident members enrolled sixty-eight tithers. Another church with one hundred members enrolled sixty-four. Two rural churches enrolled one-third their membership, and many others secured results that will be a great blessing to the church.

"We now have more than 5,000 tithers enrolled in our office. This number would be considerably increased if we had complete reports from all the churches. A complete report from your church will be greatly appreciated and be a help in promoting the work.

"Write me at any time for stewardship literature, or regarding any service I can render to help promote the work."

Student Fellowship News

Denison University, Granville, Ohio, organized a Student Fellowship Life-Service, March 20. The charter membership list has ninety-nine names (forty-five student volunteers, nineteen for home service, thirty-five who are undecided regarding their field of service). Real enthusiasm has greeted the proposed plan for this movement.

Boston University

"Article 2, Section 2. In addition to the general purpose of the Student Fellowship for Christian Life-Service, the purpose of this organization shall be to promote among the students of Boston University intelligent interest in and cooperative devotion to Christian service in America."—From Constitution of new Fellowship.

University of Nebraska

The president of the Y. M. C. A. at the University of Nebraska writes, "Glad we are hearing about the new organization so soon. It is no doubt an epochal event in Christian life-service annals. What shall we do? I have long felt the need of such an organization and will get behind it for all I am worth here. We are with you!"

Religious Education

New Testament Latin

News comes that Professor J. R. Crawford has started a class in sight reading of the Latin New Testament in Lafayette College. He was casting about to find suitable material for rapid sight reading of Latin by a Freshman class and it occurred to him to take the four Gospels and the Acts. He secured class room copies of the excellent Latin Testament published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In two months the class had covered the Gospels and the Acts.

Professor Crawford says:

"In the first place, the Latin proved easy reading, following as it did the traditional training in Caesar, Cicero, Virgil, and Livy. There was, as a matter of fact, a distinct gain in this, in that a number of youthful minds, grown pessimistic, like De Quincey's boyhood colleagues, with regarding Latin sentences as so many grammatical mines to be exploded, became refreshed and reinvigorated with their introduction to a simple and most readable, if unclassical, Latin prose. So far from raising difficulties, the Graecisms and Hebraisms were pounced upon with relish, and I am sure damaged no one's Ciceronian style or Latin idiom—perhaps, indeed, established for the first time in the minds of the dull the fact that Cicero had a style, and Latin, an idiom. Certainly both the more scholarly and the less so vastly improved their power in the rapid reading of Latin. Several lads stated frankly at the end of the semester that they had actually read Latin for the first time, meaning doubtless that they had for the first time acquired that Sprachgefühl so essential to the mastery of any foreign tongue. This was evidenced certainly in their complete abandonment of the "pony" method of preparation upon which badly trained students are ordinarily and unfortunately so dependent. As a matter of fact, we read in some quantity, and the laggards actually found it easier to buckle down and learn to read the simple anecdotal text than to half-memorize page after page of it.

"Furthermore, the content of the story, which we kept uppermost in our minds, was thoroughly assimilated, both in detail and in the unity of its consequence. Digests were kept day by day, and we gained, I think, an impression of the whole that was new to all and a revelation to those who had never attempted a synthesis of scattered anecdotes and teachings more or less reverently garnered from the lectern of chapel or church. The fact that no one in this class of fifty had ever made the attempt to read through a Gospel in a sitting or two, by the way, throws an interesting sidelight on how the Bible is ordinarily read, and accounts in a measure for much vulgar ignorance of its content. We made no attempt at austerity of translation, and many a rude and unpretentious Latin phrase was turned direct into its rude and unpretentious English equivalent, shocking enough to contrast with the charm and flow of the Jacobean version, but still having the advantage of being free from the archaisms and obfuscations of the great classic, of being very meaningful. Indeed, insistence on exact translation became a demand, not of the cathedra but of the benches, and we were often compelled to waive our fiction of the new-found document and pore over the Greek original, in order to settle uncertain or question-raising readings. Finally, allusions to prophecies and to the Jewish people diverted us to new fields, and we declared a moratorium for a week to prepare and present reports on Jewish history, from Ur of the Chaldees to the days of Bar-Cochba, with digressive investigation into the life and thought of the Jews at the period of our study."

Why not try this plan with high-school and college students in the Sunday school?

The Child's Right to Play

All animals play. Play is likewise one of the fundamental instincts of the child. If there are any inherent rights of childhood, the right to play must be considered one of them. It carries with it immeasurable benefits, but the exact results still remain comparatively uncertain. It is unquestionable, however, that play promotes the physical and mental development of the child, and that it is no mean factor in his social and moral elevation. . . . The ancient attitude toward play was that of toleration of the ebullient spirits of the growing boy. . . . The utilitarian function of play was undreamed of. The physical weakness of the child and his incapacity for concentrated thought and endeavor saved to him the enjoyment of play until his parents could use his services in some gainful occupation.

Whatever be the correct theory of play—that it is practice in the line of future methods of conduct, that it is simply the discharge of the surplus energy of the young, or that it is for the purpose of relaxation and recreation only—whatever theory be adopted, the inestimable value of play to the child and to the nation cannot be gainsaid. Play is an irrepressible method of self expression. . . .

The social and moral influences of play produce indelible effects upon the child mind. . . . The recognition of mutual rights is one of its initial values. These rights are but little understood by the unthinking child, and when brute force permits, are often entirely overthrown or perverted into a mere toleration of privileges. . . . On the supervised playground a new regime is put into operation. . . . The growth of the instinct of cooperation is perhaps the most valuable result of the play. . . . Ability to cooperate spells ability to excel.—George B. Mangold in "Child Problems."

International Uniform Lesson for July 2

EZEKIEL, THE WATCHMAN OF ISRAEL

Lesson: Ezekiel 2:1—3:27. Golden Text: Isaiah 55:6, 7.

Historical and Geographical Setting

The young priest Ezekiel, son of Buzi, was among the first exiles taken by Nebuchadnezzar to Babylon in 597 B. C.—the choicest of the population, "very good figs, first ripe," Jeremiah describes them. Five years after this he received his call as a prophet. This occurred six years before the destruction of Jerusalem. The scene of today's lesson is by the river Chebar, the latter part at Tel-abib (Hill of the Deluge), a common Babylonian term for mounds formed by floods before a system of irrigation was installed. The hill here specified was not far to the east of Babylon.

The Lesson

In the first chapter of his book Ezekiel attempts to describe the vision before which he fell prostrate. Then speaks the voice of God in the first verse of the next chapter: "Son of man, stand upon thy feet and I will speak with thee." And so Ezekiel is called to his life's work—to proclaim to rebellious Israelites the Divine message: "Thus saith the Lord" with all of its denunciation and prediction of doom. But formidable though the task was, Ezekiel was admonished to "be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns are with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor dismayed at their looks, though they are a rebellious house." In the intervening verses between 2:8 and 3:17, Ezekiel figuratively describes his inspiration as received by the swallowing of a book-roll bearing upon it lamentations, mourning and woe, which suggests that while the message is God's he must assimilate it and make it his own to give it full force and power. At the end of a week Ezekiel received another Divine message, which the last half of the lesson takes up: "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel." Thus was Ezekiel's task made unmistakably plain to him.

Leading Thoughts

1. It takes a man of humble heart, who prostrates himself before God, to speak words of reproof to others. 2. Ezekiel's mission was to warn—its success lay with God. 3. Tasks are never overwhelming when God is allowed to carry his share.

Our Own Folks

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

There is something to be said for the smaller churches of our city. With limited resources—financial and otherwise—they are seeking to bring the gospel of Jesus Christ to their respective communities. They have problems of leadership and financial support from which many of the larger churches are happily delivered, but they are doing a real service for those who are connected with their fellowship. In a city like St. Louis no one church, however big or influential, can meet the need for Baptist expression. All of them—big and small—have important work to perform, even though some may not have large accessions to membership or big financial gain. Some may be churches of influence chiefly, without much local following; others are family churches, with power to direct in peculiarly effective way the lives of their members. The excellency of work for the Master is in character and life, not essentially in size and volume. Not a few of the smaller churches could be larger if their equipment were better. Some have inadequate housing, others suffer through lack of competent leadership to which they are entitled and still others are financially unable to maintain the kind of work that may be needed. Because our large cities are increasingly the problem or possibility for the future of our nation, each Baptist church in St. Louis has a responsibility, as well as an opportunity, for determining the outcome.

Baptist Brotherhood

The St. Louis Baptist Brotherhood held its first public meeting in Third Church, Sunday afternoon, May 28. There was a representative attendance. Judge David W. Hill, a member of Third Church, spoke. Quite a number of additions to membership. The next meeting will be in Tabernacle Church, 12th and Barton Streets, Sunday afternoon, June 25. The roll of charter members will remain open until after that meeting. This organization can be a great power for the strengthening of our Baptist work in the city, as well as an important agency for increasing civic good.

Plans for the Annual Training School

Our annual training school for Sunday-school and other workers will be Jan. 15-19, 1923, and in two simultaneous sections, one in Euclid Church and the other in Lafayette Park Church. A competent faculty is being arranged. Already some of our Baptist leaders have consented to serve. The training school is more and more filling a large place in the Baptist work of our city.

Separatist Tendencies

Good Baptist people, now and then, have a tendency to separate and form independent church organizations. No doubt they feel themselves warranted in such procedure, but the new church organization often has a precarious existence and becomes a worry and care to the association not at all consulted or considered in its formation. If there were territory not yet occupied, the separatist tendency might turn out for good to the Baptist cause, but, unfortunately, the success of the new venture often means harm to regularly recognized Baptist endeavor. Two such tendencies are worrying Baptist people of St. Louis at the present time. A strong secession movement started some years ago is gradually falling apart because there was no particular call, aside from a spirit of dissatisfaction, for its existence and certainly there is less provocation for the present disorder. It is to be hoped that wiser and more considerate action may yet be taken and before the next meeting of our association. Without the approval of the association no new organization in St. Louis can be recognized as a Baptist church, however earnest its membership and however worthy its claims for recognition.

Miscellaneous Notes

Rev. G. C. Schwartz has resigned the pastorate of Tabernacle Church. He has gone to the U. S. Hospital, No. 37, Waukesha, Wis., for needed medical treatment and rest. Our Baptist Ministers' Conference, at its meeting on Monday morning, May 22, unanimously commended him to all Baptists with whom he might come in contact. He rendered earnest and devoted service while in St. Louis. On Monday, May 29, the conference had its annual outing, which was at Carondelet Park. A good opportunity for our pastors and their families to get together. On Sunday, May 28, Third Church had an enrolment of over 1,900, the last day of a contest between two classes of the Third Church and two classes of the North Presbyterian Church. The Hon. Charles M. Hay addressed the two classes of the Third Church.

North Dakota Convention

By REV. L. MCKINNON

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the North Dakota Convention was held with First Church of Grand Forks, June 1-5. The report of the general superintendent, Rev. Fred E. Stockton, indicated a substantial development of the work during the year. A number of revival meetings have been held. Several new fields have been entered. One new church has been organized. The missionary contributions for the year are $28,540.12. This is slightly more than 82 per cent of the contributions of the previous year. The appeal of the Continuation Campaign was met with a fine spirit and was a decided success, through the blessing of God upon the cooperation of the laymen and the women, the W. W. G's, and the C. W. C's.

We are losing some of our general workers this year. Rev. L. M. Stolberg, who has been colporteur-missionary west of the Missouri river, will take up the work as missionary-pastor at Kenmare and Niobe on July 1. Rev. C. W. Finwall, who has served for two years as pastor-at-large, has accepted a call to the Norwegian Baptist Church of Fargo. Rev. E. Wiese, director of religious education for the past two years, will enter the University of Chicago this fall for a three years' course of study. Miss Emma E. Anderson came to the work during the past year, and has endeared herself and honored the Master wherever she has labored. Rev. L. R. Johnson, of Bismarck, and Rev. W. A. Daniel, of Minot, are newcomers to the state during the year.

The convention proper was preceded by a pastors' conference Thursday forenoon. Rev. R. W. Hobbs, of Fargo, was elected president, and Rev. L. McKinnon, of Page, secretary and treasurer. R. B. Griffith, of Grand Forks, was re-elected president of the convention for the eighth consecutive year. F. D. Hall was chosen corresponding secretary and S. C. Hendrickson, treasurer.

The convention program was favored with a number of denominational workers who contributed largely to the inspirational and educational value of the sessions of the convention. Dr. A. K. Foster of New York, gave us some great and inspiring addresses. Dr. A. W. Rider preached Sunday morning on the subject, "This Baptist Hour and the Type of Baptists to Meet it."

We were happy to have with us this year Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, the new Candidate Secretary of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. Miss McVeigh contributed largely to the success of the convention and was heard with delight at all times. We are especially glad that some of our young people were permitted to hear her and to come in contact with her interesting and consecrated personality.

Rev. Charles Rutherford, home on furlough from India, brought us in a very intimate way into touch with India and its life today. We heard reproduced on the phonograph a Telugu preacher's voice singing the gospel into the hearts of his hearers. Mr. Rutherford used as a basis of his talks the Mission Study book for the year, "Building With India."

The convention was also pleased to make the acquaintance of Rev. W. H. Bayles, director of religious education for South Dakota. He brought us greetings from our twin state, and a message from Sioux Falls College. He addressed the convention on the "Teaching Ministry of the Church." Dr. H. J. Humpstone of the State University, gave an interesting talk on "The Psychology of the Adolescent." The convention closed Monday noon with two banquets, one for the laymen and the other for the women of the convention.

The convention adjourned to meet next year with First Church of Fargo.

Esthonian Baptists After the War

By WOLDEMAR CORJUS

For two years during the war the Baptist chapel "Philadelphia," in Reval, was occupied by Russian soldiers. They turned our place of worship into barracks and into what might be called a "den of robbers."

During all this time the small congregation had to use its money to remove the refuse. As we had no public meetings and therefore no collections it was very hard for the church to raise so much. We had strict orders not to assemble and only here and there in the houses could we hold communion services. I, myself, was under daily police observation from 1915 to 1917. In February, 1918, the Russian soldiers moved away and left the church with its surroundings in a state altogether indescribable. We had then our hardest years, no money, no bread, so the members themselves came to clean the house and the yard. We reopened it again in the middle of March, but the woodwork and roof were in need of thorough overhauling, as the building had settled and had not received needful repairs. After the coming of the Germans our condition became still harder. Then came the Bolsheviks and the war with them, and we fell into difficulties out of which we cannot emerge without help.

Our church consists only of people who have to earn their daily bread by hard work. Our house of prayer is situated in a poor quarter of the city, and all our members are poor. We have about seventy members in Paval, but we have also branch churches. Members have removed from Paval and have founded churches which have now become independent.

In the church there is a young people's union and a Sunday school which probably is the largest in Esthonia. The work, however, is made much more difficult owing to the fact that our large bright chapel possesses no musical instrument, and the congregation will never be in a position to obtain one since they can only afford the most necessary expenses, and the house is threatened with decay in consequence of the damaged roof.

We have already received so much help through the love of those across the water for our poor and for our sick folk by gifts of money and clothing (for which once more we would express our gratitude) that we really should not ask or hope for more, but—our need teaches us to ask, especially now in spring, when the snow is thawing and runs through the roof. We are most thankful for the gifts from our friends.

Crozer Puts on Record a Minute

In reply to a communication signed by about twenty-five petitioners concerning a member of their faculty the Board of Trustees of Crozer, at its annual meeting, June 5, 1922, put on record for publication and distribution the following Minute:

"The trustees of Crozer Theological Seminary recognize fully the responsibility assumed in the administration of their trust. They recognize the fact that the local Baptist church is the ultimate source to which the individual member is answerable for his doctrinal beliefs. Accordingly, every Baptist church alone has the inherent right to determine the qualifications of its own membership and to judge the doctrinal beliefs of its own members in accordance with its own interpretation of the New Testament.

"And yet the trustees fully recognize that they are justified in assuming responsibility for the protection of class-room and pulpit from teaching that leads to harmful results in the religious life beyond that usually assumed by a local church with regard to its members.

"Since, however, Baptists have never formulated any standard of faith recognized among them as authoritative, and inasmuch as there has always existed wide diversity of opinion among them, both in the pulpit and in the teaching force of their seminaries, the trustees have no disposition to depart from the policy their predecessors have laid down. They are convinced that the course of truth and righteousness will be more surely advanced by guaranteeing liberty to interpret the Scriptures and Christian history as a Christian conscience and competent scholarship may justify rather than by formulating a prescribed doctrinal statement to which conformity of opinion is demanded.

Chicago Baptist Association

By ARTHUR C. HODGSON

The eighty-seventh annual meeting of the Chicago Association took place in the beautifully renovated edifice of First Church, Elgin, Ill., on the afternoons and evenings of Thursday and Friday, June 1 and 2. Dr. R. N. VanDoren, the retiring moderator, presided. In his opening address, he first drew some suggestive comparisons between conditions in the association when it last met in Elgin, twenty years earlier, and at the present time, and then spoke on some aspects of the present critical denominational situation. The reports of the various commissions, committees and other bodies were in the main encouraging. Rev. A. E. Peterson, state director, reported that the contributions received from the churches of the association toward the New World Movement during the year amounted to $257,654 or over 98 per cent of the amount received during the preceding year.

The opening session included the presentation by laymen and a profitable discussion of four modern problems: "Shall the Sunday evening service be abandoned?" "Is the mid-week prayer meeting worth while?" "Why not elect more young people to the church boards?" and "Are numerical goals a blessing or a bane?" Between the Thursday afternoon and evening sessions, the ladies of the entertaining church served an appetizing supper for young people and workers among young people.

Thursday evening was observed as "Young People's Night," and was conducted by Mr. John H. Singleton, president of the Baptist Young People's Union of Chicago. Nearly 300 "Oskies"—Illinois B. Y. P. U'ers—of the association made an enthusiastic railroad picnic trip from Chicago to Elgin for the occasion. Rev. A. H. Gage, director of education, spoke on "Summer Activities," stressing especially the daily vacation Bible school work and the approaching summer assembly at Shurtleff College. The chief attraction of the evening was the address of Dr. Bernard C. Clansen, of Syracuse, N. Y., on "The Strategy of Marshal Foch," which bubbled up with wit, humor and worthwhile Christian lessons.

The former part of the Friday afternoon session was a service of worship, which included the annual sermon, preached with characteristic Welsh fire by Rev. W. H. Jones, pastor of the North Shore church of Chicago. He took for his text Isa. 40:9, and developed in a forceful manner the following three points: 1. The vision of the vantage point. 2. The summons to strength and fearlessness. 3. The supreme mission of God's prophets. Following came the women's hour, presided over by Mrs. R. P. Fales, the leading features of which were the address on "Native Love Songs of Assam," with vocal illustrations, by Miss E. E. Vickland, a missionary on furlough from that country, and a monolog in Italian dialect and costume, "Italiana Redeemed," by Mrs. Arthur B. Strickland, of Philadelphia, which moved considerably the heart-strings of her large audience. The Permanent Council on Ordinations and New Churches reported eight ordinations to the gospel ministry and the recognizing of five new churches during the year. A welcome was extended, either in person or by "absent treatment" to twenty-one pastors who had assumed charges in the association in the twelve months, and the five newly-organized churches and one older one were admitted into membership with the association.

The closing session was "Nationality Night," in charge of Dr. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago. The introductory devotional service was conducted by Rev. Swaney Nelson, a Swedish pastor. Under the heading of Negro interests, Rev. B. F. McWilliams, of Toledo, who comes to Chicago to take charge of the Negro work for which the Baptist Missionary Training School of Miss Mary Burdette fame is being transferred to the colored Baptists, delivered an address on "The Training School for Christian Workers," emphasizing its pressing need and hopeful prospects. Dr. S. E. J. Watson, pastor of the great and growing Pilgrim Church of Chicago, followed with an address on "Negro Baptists in Chicago." Then, under the caption of "Our New Americans," five-minute talks were given by Bohemian, Hungarian, Croatian, Lithuanian, Polish and Russian pastors and missionaries laboring within the bounds of the association. The addresses of the evening were pleasantly interspersed with a number of vocal selections by a Negro quartet from the Pilgrim Church and a Russian trio.

The new officers of the association are: Moderator, Mr. Edwin Phelps; first vice-moderator, Mrs. Smith T. Ford; second vice-moderator, Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse; clerk, Rev. A. C. Hodgson; treasurer, Mr. Lewis T. Walker; historical secretary, Mr. Henry R. Clissold. The total enrolment was 513, which, considering that Elgin is about forty miles from Chicago, was remarkably good. The excellent manner in which the association was entertained reflects much credit to the pastor, Rev. A. D. McGlashan, and the Elgin church.

French Children Help Russians

As an expression of gratitude to the children in American Baptist Sunday schools who contributed toys which were forwarded to France on the Ship of Fellowship, the French children in the devastated city of Lens, when the toys were distributed, raised a collection on behalf of the children of Russia who have been deprived not only of toys but also of bread. This interesting information has come from Rev. O. Brouillette, Director of the Foreign Mission Society's relief work in France, and was conveyed to him by Miss Jeanne Long, the capable young woman who has charge of the work among girls at Lens. Thus the toys sent by the American children have not only rejoiced the hearts of the children in the devastated area of France, but have stimulated in them a desire to help other children who have been deprived of the necessities of life.

NEW JERSEY

REPORTS AT THE ANNUAL business meeting of the Hightstown Church, Harry Evans Owings, pastor, indicate a favorable year. There were twenty-seven additions to the church and nearly $7,000 contributed to the New World Movement. A newly organized brotherhood for the men and an organization of the younger women have proved a valuable asset to the work. Once a month on Sunday evenings the student body of Peddie Institute has worshipped with the Church. The church has given the pastor a Buick sedan to assist with the pastoral visitation.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH OF PLEASANTVILLE, has had a record of faithful work. Before the New World Movement came along, it was the third in missionary giving in New Jersey. Last year it gave over $3,700 for all purposes of the ordinary work of the church. $1,300 went for benevolences. The most imperative need with the church is to have a place where it can have a Bible school, and a modern church building. Plans are under the way for a building which will cost around $25,000. The church is composed of business and working people who will do whatever lies in their power toward the desired goal. Prayers of the denomination are desired.

NEW YORK

DURING THE SPRING MONTHS the Sunday schools of Watertown engaged in a contest for which trophies were awarded in four departments of Sunday-school activity. The school of First Church, Dr. H. J. Vosburgh, pastor, won two of the trophies and was a close second in the other two contests.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Baptist Union of Rochester and Monroe County (taking the place of the ninety-fifth of the former Monroe Baptist Association) was held May 25-26, with the Baptist Temple, Rochester. Reports from the thirty-six churches of the county showed 486 baptisms and a net gain of 440. The Mt. Olivet Church, (Negro), made the greatest increase, equaling 86 per cent of its membership. Rural churches which during the past five years have shown a loss of 10 per cent, made a slight gain this year. Re-opening of the Italian Mission was one of the important features of the year's work. The building on Hebard street, formerly used only as a preaching place, has been converted into a Christian Center, with gymnasium, shower baths, club rooms, chapel, play ground, etc. Located on the most congested street in Rochester, it is now rendering a large service of practical Christianity to the community. It is called the Hebard Street House, and is under the care of Rev. James W. Herring. Mrs. Herring is a graduate of the Chicago Training School. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Fred. E. Dean, of Greece. Contributions to the New World Movement were slightly less than last year. The churches paid $165,000 into the treasury of the New World Movement and spent $148,000 for its local expenses.

CONNECTICUT

THE MINISTERS OF THE HARTFORD and New Haven association met together, on May 29, in Goodwin Park, Hartford, for inspirational, informational and recreational purposes. Dr. Rockwell Harmon Potter, pastor of Center Congregational Church of Hartford, spoke on the nature and wider implications of the present fundamentalist movement throughout the various denominations. A basket luncheon was served.

IN FIRST CHURCH, HARTFORD, on May 15, the pastor, Rev. Herbert Judson White, conducted the funeral service of Mrs. Heman H. Barbour, mother of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour and Rev. John B. Barbour of Rochester. Dr. White paid a beautiful tribute to the Christian worth of this estimable woman and devoted mother.

REV. O. G. BUDDINGTON, pastor of the Poquonock Church since 1916, has resigned the pastorate to take effect July 1. Not only his church but Mr. Buddington's many friends throughout the state, deeply regret the indisposition which made necessary his resignation. He stood for the larger things of the kingdom but never neglected the local interests of his parish. He was a member of the convention board and held positions on various committees within the Stonington Union Association. He will continue to reside near his former parish.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE CHURCHES OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE Convention for the year ending April 30, 1921 paid 100 per cent and something over on pledges made to the New World Movement. For the year ending April 30, 1922, the churches of New Hampshire gave approximately 75 per cent of the amount paid in the previous year making an equivalent of 87½ per cent of the amount pledged paid up to date. There was but one church in New Hampshire that opposed the New World Movement. All of the other active churches are allied with the denominational program and these churches represent 98 per cent of the entire membership in the state.

THE CHURCH AT STRAFFORD CENTER recently held a service of rededication. The house of worship has been renovated and presents a pleasing appearance. Rev. C. W. Doe is the successful pastor here. Mr. Doe teaches in the Austin-Cate Academy (undenominational) located near the church.

EVANGELIST FAVRO HAS BEEN WITH the church at Laconia and with some good results. At this writing Mr. Favro is with the church at Belmont. Rev. F. W. Fitzpatrick, pastor. East Tilton has been favored with services by Mr. Favro. Brother Fitzpatrick is also pastor here. This church recently received a legacy of $1,600 which will be placed with the convention as trustee.

THE TWO RURAL CHURCHES AT ORANGE AND WARREN, formerly Free Baptist churches, although separated by twenty-two miles of hill country, continue the custom of holding quarterly meetings. Formerly the group in this quarterly meeting was large, but these two churches continue the custom with enthusiasm. Baptisms are not unusual at these meetings. The last meeting was held at Orange, June 3-4. Both these small churches are without pastors but they refuse to become inactive.

REV. S. D. RINGROSE OF ROGER WILLIAMS CHURCH, Providence, R. I., will spend his vacation of July and August with the church at Melvin Village, a pastorless rural church beautifully located on Lake Winnepesaukee.

THE CHURCH AT EFFINGHAM FALLS, for some time without a pastor, is to be served by the pastor of the Christian church at Freedom. The service at Effingham Falls will be in the afternoon.

REV. BERNARD CHRISTOPHER, formerly at Newton, has become the pastor of the Hampton church.

TWO RESIGNATIONS ARE RECORDED WITH regret: Rev. D. S. Brooks at Jackson and Glen, and the colporter-missionary, Rev. F. W. Rollins. Colporter work was never more needed than at present in New Hampshire. Mr. Rollins who has been very successful in this work enters business for a time.

MASSACHUSETTS

DR. F. F. PETERSON, LEADER OF THE YOUNG BAPTIST WORKERS in the state has come to his own, or to his deserts. The young people of his wide parish have surprised him with a brand new auto—a sedan. It was a befittingly beautiful surprise, gladly and generously given. Now the doctor will spin around among the Baptist centers, and bless more of the workers than ever, as he multiplies their number and shows them how.

EVERYONE AT THE GRADUATING CLASS AT NEWTON is settled before his graduations. This shows that at present there is no discount on fully trained men. Newton is full to capacity, and the prospect is for a still larger student body next year.

DR. LERRIGO MADE A CHARMING ADDRESS at the Ministers' Conference on May 29. He took us to Africa, and made conditions on our mission fields there very realistic. It was "circus day," and many of the brethren succumbed to the baby elephants. But they missed it.

THE ISSUE OF THE JEWISH INVASION AT HARVARD is attracting much attention, and many will watch with much interest to see the difficulty handled. It will not be easy, for it has long been of steady growth, and in student quality has good traditions. The Jews need not to apologize for their representatives. It is the easy forecast of the inevitable that brings disquietude and compels action. What can that action consistently be in a free state? With Jewish wealth, efficiency, intellectual brilliancy, and numerical expansion, why have we not great Jewish schools? Another un-American query. But our Roman Catholic brethren answer it.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

JAN. 1. PASTOR J. J. VANGORDER of Ohio began his work at Brookville. Since then thirty-six have been baptized; the majority were adults. Others have come into our fellowship by letter and experience. The seating room is often taxed to its capacity, while the men's class of the Sunday school has quin-tupled. The Sunday school as a whole has doubled. The missionary activities of the church are moving along with the other departments. Rev. H. Stewart Tillis editor of "The Baptist Believer" of Portsmouth, Ohio, a former pastor of the church was greeted by a capacity audience of old friends May 26. The church is sending the pastor to the Northern Baptist Convention.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. J. P. CURRIN, pastor of Central Church at Steelton, was elected moderator of the Harrisburg Association, at its last session. Pleased at the splendid showing of the Steelton church this honor was conferred on Mr. Currin. Fifty-five united with the church, fifty-three by baptism. This is the largest ingathering in the history of this church, and led all the churches of the Association. The striking feature of this numerical growth was—no special services, no extra helper, no outside singer, no close organization. The gospel presentation, and the personal effort of the membership, and the Holy Spirit at work, brought the result.

WEST VIRGINIA

WITH THE CLOSE of our church year April 30 Rev. E. Leroy Dakin completed three years and eight months as pastor of Baptist Temple, Charleston. During that time a debt of $7000 has been paid, $300,000 has been pledged for a new building, a lot for this has been bought and paid for at a cost of $53,000. A frame annex has been built at a cost of $4,000 to help house the school which has grown from 213 enrolled to 820 and average attendance more than quadrupled. Two mission schools have been opened with a combined enrollment of nearly 200. A director of young people's work, and a church secretary have been added to the staff of workers. 1,247 have been received into the membership, more than 900 of these by baptism; 315 this past year. Membership now is 1,492, making the Temple the second strongest Baptist church in the state. It is hoped that financial conditions will allow the building of the new church edifice during the coming year. The Brotherhood is expecting to open two more branch schools within the next few weeks. Preparations are being made for a vacation school. A vigorous "No slump" campaign will be carried on in the school for the summer, and evangelism will have the first place in all the services of the church through the summer as always.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

REV. H. A. BELTON HAS RESIGNED as pastor of the Virden Church to take effect the last Sunday in July. Rev. Belton has been pastor in Virden for six years. He will make his home permanently in Springfield, and will be at liberty for one-half, or one-fourth time pastorates, or for supply work, after July. Any church needing his services may write him in Virden up to the last of July.

BARRY: A school of evangelism was conducted in First Church, May 22-26, with good results. Dr. D. O. Hopkins, Rev. L. M. Koehler, Rev. R. V. Meigs of Quincy, Rev. L. C. Taylor, of Kinderhook, and Mrs. T. Elmer Jones, of Barry, made up the teaching force.

REV. A. H. RHODES died at Carlinville, May 16, at the age of eighty-four years. At the time of his death he had been in the ministry fifty-one years, holding charges at Palmyra, Mo., Sydney and Malvern, Iowa and at Paris, Effingham, Mason City, Normal, Roseville, Christman, Griggsville, Pana and Carlinville, Illinois. Fifteen years ago he went to Carlinville where he served as pastor of First Church until his advanced years caused him to retire from the ministry. He was instrumental in the education of twelve orphan girls and assisted in educating ten others. Funeral services were held at First Church conducted by Rev. J. G. Little, pastor, assisted by Rev. Ralph Rutenber, Rev. W. S. Phillips, pastor of the Methodist church and Rev. William Riemer of St. Paul's Evangelical church.

Woman's Mission Society

The state board was invited by Mrs. W. P. Topping, state president, to meet at her home in Elgin, June 2, for its regular meeting. About fifty, board members and invited guests, were present. Several ladies of the Elgin church served luncheon in the dining-room of the lately remodeled church. Much business was taken care of, interesting sidelights on the continuation campaign given, and good reports from the various departments made.

Miss Bessie Stickney, W. W. G. state secretary, will represent that organization at the Alton Summer Assembly. All are urged to send the right girls and women to the summer schools at Alton, Lebanon, Winona, Geneva and Dixon. One church will send fourteen to one of these schools.

Mrs. W. P. Topping, president, will represent the state board at the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis.

Miss Isabelle Crawford and Miss Susan Roberts will be eligible for speaking in Illinois, June 9-July 1.

The W. W. G. and C. W. C. went "over the top" in their apportionment in the Continuation Campaign, the C. W. C. giving one-tenth of the entire N. B. C. apportionment. Fifty-five new C. W. C.'s are reported this year.

The reading contest, state and national, proved a success. In the state contest, Rock Island Association won the loving cup; Freeport Church, Rock River Association was awarded the banner.

The program, of the state meeting at Centralia in October was outlined by Mrs. C. H. Carpenter. Mrs. G. W. Coleman and Miss Luella Adams, home mission worker, will be among the speakers. Mrs. G. M. Porter and Mrs. C. W. Peterson will teach the study books. There will be a pageant and a W. W. G. banquet.

After the adjournment of the board meeting all attended the Woman's Mission Union which was meeting in connection with the Chicago Associational meeting in Elgin. Miss E. E. Vickland of Assam, told of her work and sang native Assamese songs. Mrs. Arthur B. Strickland, worker among Italians, gave a monologue in Italian dialect.

MRS. W. C. RUTHERFORD, SECY.

IOWA

WAVERLY CHURCH HAS BEEN enjoying some prosperity notwithstanding some misfortune. Early in February the church was partially destroyed by fire and the repairs have only been completed making the church more beautiful than before. In March were held a series of revival meetings which resulted in great good to the church and about 25 additions. The meetings were conducted by Dr. J. B. McMinn of Wheaton, Ill. Rev. E. F. Muir, pastor here for three years, recently moved to Arkansas City, Kansas. During the month of May the pulpit was supplied by Rev. Penn Moore, a returned missionary of Siam and a former pastor of the church. The church is to be supplied through June, July and August by Dr. J. B. McMinn who held his first service yesterday. As the result of an intensified program in the Sunday school, B. Y. P. U. Society and all other church lines, a special Sunday-school class has been organized to be taught by Dr. J. B. McMinn, numbering about fifty. Also special Bible work is to be done in connection with the mid-week prayer meeting.

MICHIGAN

A THREE-DAY CONFERENCE CAMP was promoted for boys from fifteen to twenty years of age of Marshall Church, at Camp Tehoma, June 9-11. While a full week's camp is put on for all who are able to stay that long, some who will be anxious to go to work had an opportunity to go to Camp Tehoma for several days. This was for older boys and a program, including talks and devotional exercises, was put on. One meeting was held Friday evening, three on Saturday, and three on Sunday. Each meeting lasted from an hour to an hour and a half, and the remainder of the time on Friday and Saturday was occupied by swimming, boating, and athletics. Sunday, opportunities were given for excursions into the woods, and personal interviews with the leaders. The conference was in charge of Rev. J. Burt Bouwman, who has promoted several similar conferences in his work as Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

THE AFTERNOON of MAY 26 the S. F. Club of the Marshall Sunday school promoted an athletic contest and group games at the county fair grounds, for children of rural public schools. The athletic contest consisted of 50 yard dash, running broad and high jump, and a relay race. Following the athletic contest, the group games were promoted. This play festival was put on in cooperation with School Commissioner Davis. The athletic meet was in charge of Douglas O'Leary, athletic director of the Baptist Sunday school, and Howard Rundle, athletic director of the S. F. Club. Some of the older boys of the Comrades also assisted. Several months ago, the rural work committee of the Baptist church planned this festival as a part of its rural program. Mr. Eben Mumford, when he spoke at the Baptist church at the rural work committee meeting, gave hearty approval to this kind of work.

MINNESOTA

IN RESPONSE to a call from the Swedish Baptist Church at Fahlun, eighteen representatives from seven Baptist churches met in the church as an ordination council. Rev. E. Carlson from the First Swedish Church of Minneapolis, was chosen moderator; and Rev. Soneson, Lake Elizabeth Church, Clerk. Brother Axel Anderson, the candidate for ordination, gave a satisfactory testimony and was unanimously recommended to the church for ordination which took place in the evening. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. E. Carlson; prayer by Rev. E. Lagerstrom; charge to candidate and hand of fellowship, Rev. A. Lindgren and charge to the church by Rev. Berg-falk.

WISCONSIN

THE ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, Eau Claire, was held in the church parlors Thursday, June 1, at 6:30 p. m. About 200 of the church membership sat down to an appetizing repast, after which the regular business meeting was held. Every department reported a balance on hand in the treasury and good progress made during the past year. A grand total of $7,136 was raised through the various departments, including the Easter Sunday morning offering, which amounted to over $400. Of this amount nearly $2,000 has been expended for benevolences, home and foreign. The average attendance in the Sunday school for the year was 221, in the junior society, twenty-five, and in the young people's society, fifty. The attendance at the Sunday evening services has never been less than 100. Eleven baptisms were recorded for the year. The meeting adjourned with a short address by Pastor MacKinney.

OHIO

AFTER NEARLY TWO YEARS AS PASTOR of First Church, Shelby, Rev. W. H. Carlisle, will end his services there June 25. During this period 126 were baptized into the church, and there were thirty erasures from the church roll. After a few weeks of needed rest Mr. Carlisle will take up his work in the southern part of the state where the climate is more congenial to the health of himself and family.

FIRST CHURCH, ZANESVILLE, Rev. O. L. Martin, pastor, closed a two weeks' evangelistic meeting Sunday, May 28, evangelists Littrell and Moody leading. About 40 expressed a desire to live for Christ. Thirty received so far. Pastor Martin baptized twenty Sunday, June 4. The church is completing the first year of its second century, in some ways the most successful in its history, going several hundred dollars over the top in its pledge to the New World Movement; also wiping out an old standing debt of many years.

NEBRASKA

JUNE 4 MARKED THE SIXTH Anniversary of Dr. A. A. DeLarme's pastorate of the First Church, Omaha. The six years in Omaha have been years of prosperity. Five hundred and eleven have been received into the church without any outside evangelist or other help than that of a well organized and cooperating church membership. The contributions have increased nearly 200 per cent. The Sunday school has entirely outgrown its present quarters and plans have been adopted and a subscription secured for a large modern Sunday-school building and parish house adjoining the present church building. Dr. DeLarme will supply the pulpit of his former church, the First, McKeesport, Pa., in August.

THE CORNER-STONE of the new Baptist church of Fremont, Rev. Fred Young, pastor, was laid Sunday afternoon, June 4, with appropriate ceremonies. John Mason Wells, president of Grand Island College, delivered the address. Mayor C. H. Green of Fremont, lowered the stone into place. The old church was destroyed by fire on Sunday morning, Jan. 22, just before the hour of service. The new building is to be modern in every way and built at a cost of $60,000. The architect is Harry W. Jones, of Minneapolis.

Rev. H. M. Wyrich, pastor of First Church, Fairbury, has been granted a leave of absence to attend the Divinity School of the University of Chicago this summer.

Rev. M. H. Wilkinson, state missionary for the Negro Baptists, working in conjunction with the state convention, returned from Hastings, June 3, where he raised $309.50 in four days to help in raising the mortgage on Second Church; the remainder, $96.50, will be raised June 25.

Grand Island College

The thirtieth anniversary of this college occurred May 26-June 2. Special interest attached to this commencement week. It was the close of the first year of President Wells' administration. Some new features were introduced and for the first time the student body of the college passed the hundred mark.

Campus activities opened the week, the first event being a "May Pageant" by the Y. W. C. A. There was a banquet for juniors and seniors, a banquet for trustees, faculty, etc., a reception for all given by President and Mrs. Wells and the regular commencement dinner with interesting accompaniments.

Three classes held declamatory contests; seven members of the senior academy class, five of the freshmen class and five of the sophomore class. Some finished productions were given in each exhibition. Not one of the entire number was deficient in memory.

Three leading addresses were given: the baccalaureate sermon, the sermon before the Christian Association and the commencement address. The first was by Rev. J. H. Stitt on "Faith the Essence of Life." Rev. George Van Winkle of Omaha preached the second sermon on "Character Building." The commencement address was given by Rev. David J. Evans, of Kansas City, on "Marks of an Educated Man."

Meetings of alumni and former students were held. At the last of these action was taken on the building of a home for the president, this to be called the "Sutherland House," a fitting monument to the man who, for nineteen years as president, was the builder of the college.

The graduates from the college are John F. Daly, Jesse M. Hungate and Milford J. Flood. This small number is owing to the closing of the school for a year during the war. The other college classes, larger than ever before, assure large increase in the future.

At the commencement dinner President Wells spoke of what had come to the college recently and what was planned for further improvement. Seven prizes were awarded for excellency in declamation.

"History" and "Outlook" were presented in addresses at one of the general student gatherings. Dr. Sutherland gave a brief and interesting statement, recalling events of the thirty years of college history. President Wells looked forward, a look of faith, a hopeful look, a look of courage and assurance.

NORTH DAKOTA

VALLEY CITY: Rev. J. A. Moe closed his work at Valley City, April 1. He has accepted a call to the Norwegian Church of Artichoke, Minn. Miss Emma E. Anderson supplied the church during April, and reports large and interested audiences.

KANSAS

JUNE 1 BEGAN THE SIXTH YEAR of the pastorate of Louis S. Bowerman, First Church, Kansas City. During the five years 114 have been received by baptism and experience, 138 by letter and relation. Losses by death, letter and exclusion, 116. The apparent net gain is only ten, but the real gain is very much larger, for it now practically represents a resident membership. The amount of money raised is approximately $48,000.00. Debts of $7,000 have been paid and a building fund of over $7,000 has been accumulated. The current expense fund has increased nearly 80 per cent and the benevolence offerings about 500 per cent. The church roll has been carefully revised and about 25 per cent removed from the list. An excellent Tithers League has been formed.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

IN THE CONTINUATION CAMPAIGN, the women of First Church, Sacramento, set for themselves a goal of $1,000. They went over the top with $1,032.12. The annual reports of the church were encouraging. The pastor, Rev. Bryant Wilson, baptized fifty-six during the year and gave the hand of fellowship to a total of ninety-one. The work with the Boy Scouts received special mention. During the "Days of '49 Celebration," a pageant written by Mrs. F. B. Gillett, was given which paid tribute to those who founded the church in "the days of old, the days of gold, the days of '49." Particular mention was made of the Rev. O. C. Wheeler who was sent out by the American Home Mission Society, arriving in San Francisco Feb. 28, 1849 on board the first vessel to steam through the Golden Gate. He organized First Church of San Francisco, the first Protestant church organized in California, and then came to Sacramento and organized the First Church there. He returned to Sacramento in 1852 to become the third pastor of the church. He is buried in the local city cemetery.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE BIBLE CONFERENCE held at First Church, Pasadena, May 14-21, was attended by large audiences. In addition to the pastor, Dr. John Marvin Dean, the faculty consisted of Prof. Edgar B. Van Osdel of Redlands University, Drs. Sherman, Gifford, Brougher, Dixon, Cortland Myers, Hunter, Horton, Rev. Robert McQuilkin, Gordon Palmer and Amy Lee Stockton. The theme for this year's conference was "The Cross of Christ." Among the themes presented were "The Bible and the College Student," "America's Need,—the Bible, the whole Bible and the supreme Bible," "The Cross and the Incarnation," "The Power of the Cross," "The Bible and the Jew," "The Virgin Birth," "The Suffering Messiah," "The Life in Christ," "The Bible and World Evangelism," "The Cross of Illumination." The church is enthusiastic over this type of service and will make the conference an annual affair.

Rev. V. H. Cowsert has finished seven months' work at Clovis, during which time he has baptized forty-one, received eighteen by letter and eight otherwise; six have been dismissed. The associational report recently rendered shows over $6,000 raised for all purposes with more paid for benevolences than for current expenses. The medical missionary in Africa, Dr. C. L. Trout, has baptized more than fifty during the past year, has a day school with an average attendance of over 100 and preaches to 400 to 500 on Saturday market days. Dr. Cowsert hopes to celebrate the thirty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the Baptist ministry by preaching in his home church in Goodman, Miss., on August 6.

OREGON

ON MAY 3 AND 4, 1922, at Portland, occurred the Eighth Annual Meeting of the Columbia River District. Officers and delegates from Montana, East and West Washington, Idaho and Oregon were in attendance. Miss Edna Shoemaker, Miss Luceile Withers and Mr. E. S. Burket, all of China, and Mr. Chas. Rutherford of India, brought enthusiastic messages and stirring appeals from their various stations. Miss Ruth Shipley, vice-president National W. A. B. H. M. S., gave an inspiring address on the subject "Land of Mine." The body assembled went on record as endorsing the Limitation of Armaments Conference held in Washington, D. C., and appreciation of the peace measures adopted there; also as being in favor of and supporting any movement or bill that looks toward the stamping out of the narcotic evil and the extreme punishment of the guilty. The following officers were elected: Pres., Mrs. Edker Burton, Centralia; ad vice-pres., Mrs. Charles Loucks, Portland; foreign vice-pres., Mrs. H. F. Compton, Seattle; home vice-pres., Mrs. George Holt, Seattle; sec., Mrs. Ernest Knight, Portland; treas., Mrs. Gustav Johnson, Portland.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

REV. B. D. PROFIO will spend the summer at the home of Rev. T. M. Hofmeister, Greenfield, Ohio, where he will be available for pulpit supply. He has served some of our best churches. Dean Vichert (Colgate) commends him highly. Upon his return from Colgate University he will rank as a senior. Pastors looking for vacation supply should write Brother Profio or Dr. Hofmeister.

EMERSON, IOWA, is a town of about 500 population and a fair sized territory surrounds the town. The physician is leaving and there is a good opening for a good live man who wants to take up a country practice. A good wide awake Baptist doctor will have support of a large part of this territory.

Obituary

FRANK MOSHER

DeKalb, Ill., was shocked May 10, 1922, to learn of the sudden passing from earth of Frank Mosher. He was sick only a few hours and died of uremic poisoning.

Mr. Mosher was born on a farm a few miles south of DeKalb in Afton township, July 4, 1865. At nineteen he came to town to take up duties in a dry goods store. Soon thereafter he bought an interest in a lumber and coal business, being at the time of his death the senior member of the firm of Mosher and Embree.

He had been a devoted member of the First Baptist Church, DeKalb, for over thirty-five years and was on May 4 of this year elected Sunday school superintendent for the thirty-second time, a work for which he was peculiarly adapted and which he particularly loved. No pastor ever had a better friend and brother than Frank Mosher.

At the time of the organization of the first B. Y. P. U. A. work Mr. Mosher was greatly interested in it and for a time was the Illinois state president of that organization, performing his work with efficiency and joy. He was also several times moderator of the Rock River Baptist Association.

The family of Frank Mosher consists of his widow, Mrs. Mary Boardman Mosher and one daughter, Mrs. Manly McKenney, of San Francisco, Cal.

He was a man of broad sympathies and was in advance of his day in the possession of a fine community spirit. The whole city and community have been greatly moved by his going.

The funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. R. Yard, Sunday, May 14, two services being held. The first one was at 2:00 and was particularly for the Sunday school and church. The house of worship was well filled at this service. The public service was held at 3:30 when the house was packed to capacity, many being turned away. The Rotarians attended in a body.

Famine Relief

Complete reports are in hand for the recent famine relief measures in China. The people of America contributed $7,500,000, which was administered largely by missionaries. The money was used in purchasing food and clothing but mostly in furnishing work. Over $1,000,000 was placed in the hands of our mission in Shansi, and this was largely expended in building roads, which will be of permanent advantage to the country and which will aid in the prosecution of mission work. Of the entire fund there was an unexpended balance of nearly $1,000,000 and this, it has been decided, will be used in establishing courses of agriculture in union mission colleges, looking to the prevention of future famines. Nothing of late has more commended Christianity in China than this generous help, honestly and wisely administered.

A New Enterprise of the S. B. C.

By E. O. SELLERS

Southern Baptists have launched upon two new enterprises, the Baptist Bible Institute and, as recently voted at the Jacksonville convention, a general and research hospital both in the city of New Orleans, the "port of the Mississippi Valley."

Through providential leadings the institute came into possession of the former buildings of Sophie Newcomb College and, by addition, now occupies seventeen buildings worth, if necessary to duplicate, certainly $750,000. There is a magnificent campus, a library of 25,000 volumes, homes for the faculty and married students and, all in all, a plant larger and more commodious than any other similar institution in the land.

Dr. George E. Horr, president of Newton Seminary, who delivered the recent historical lectures on the John T. Christian Foundation, expressed his amazement and delight over the plant, the plan of work and the faculty of eleven members that has been assembled under the leadership of President B. H. DeMent, for many years connected with the Louisville Seminary. This year's student body of 251 members represented every one of the southern states, Kansas, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, England, France, Spain and China.

The institute plan of work is novel. It is not a seminary in the accepted use of that term nor is it a Bible institute as usually conceived. The degrees of Master of Christian Training (three years) and Bachelor of Christian Training (two years) are offered and there will be offered this next year a missionary degree incorporating any one of three modern languages, French, Italian and Spanish. Also a theological degree incorporating Greek and Hebrew. A degree course in sacred music will be offered soon. The practical activities and the emphasis upon evangelism are the same as are usually offered at the Bible institutes.

On account of the war and the "flu" during the first year only three full years of work have thus far been completed. Yet at this year's commencement, May 26, eight received the degree of Master of Christian Training and fifteen that of Bachelor of Christian Training. Four received diplomas as pastors' assistants, five completed the music course, one that of director of religious work and five that of B. Y. P. U. training.

The blending of the usual seminary idea with the newer Bible institute methods is a happy combination and all of it is under the urge of denominational loyalty and zeal.

Southern Baptists are not divided whatsoever. They stand for the middle-of-the-road Baptist principles and at the same time are aggressive and progressive. They are pushing education and hospitals and at the same time remaining true to their evangelistic zeal, as evidenced by the more than 252,000 baptisms during this past year.

In spite of the economic disturbances they have paid in nearly one half of their $75,000,000 objective, and nearly 40 per rouse ourselves to realize that only the first skirmish in the war to end war has been fought, that we are entering upon a long hard campaign. We must believe that the power to put away war lives in that living faith that has destroyed slavery, and given a death blow to the liquor traffic. It lives in the Christian church be it nowhere else. Let our Baptist people make their full weight felt in the furtherance of this mighty cause.

The temperance forces of the nation need to be awake and alert as never before. The attacks of the liquor forces are becoming bolder. They are drawing to their aid many of the thoughtless and the self-indulgent. If the Volstead act is to be sustained we church people must be up and doing. Our supreme political duty lies here. We must override party lines and break political ties if need be in the defence of a sober nation. Much of our most effective work can be done in the small political units. Publicity in country weeklies, educational articles in small town dailies, interviewing of candidates and the direct religious agencies of prayer meetings and church assemblies must all be called into the field.

The most difficult questions are those that center around industrial relationships. The church of Jesus Christ, which is also the church of Jesus the Carpenter, holds in its keeping the key to unlock all difficulties. The adoption of the Golden Rule of Jesus as a working policy by employers and workers alike would replace the era of strike and lock-outs by one of peaceful progress. The duty is laid upon Christians to think clearly and act sanely and live obediently in this troubled realm of human relationship. The one thing that they cannot afford to do is to be inactive or unsympathetic spectators in the great struggle. Jesus Christ is King of Industry as well as King of Nations and King of Individuals.

Such, as I conceive it, are some of the tasks that confront us. Shall we not rise to face them with courage and enthusiasm? Shall we not bury our prejudices and bring out our convictions?

Our New World Movement was conceived in an hour of high enthusiasm, it was born in prayer. Shall we not carry through to completion the noblest, the most daring, the most generous program that our denomination has ever conceived of setting for itself?

How our success will hearten every sister Christian body! How our completion of God's great enterprise will deepen the springs of our own faith and quicken our consecration! I challenge you to find any church that has loyally cooperated in the New World Movement and done its best that has not received into its own bosom far more that it has ever given, and that is not today rejoicing in new life.

Brethren we are in a great campaign. We have a war to fight for our Lord Jesus. We must not disagree! We must not fight each other! We must unite to win.

Let this convention be founded and proceed and end in prayer. Satan is here.

He longs to divide us. He rejoices when he sees Christian brethren in dissension. Nothing but prayer can defeat him. Let us gather in little groups and in our own closets and pour our hearts before God.

"Oh, send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me;

Let them bring me unto thy holy hill, And to thy tabernacles.

Then will I go unto the altar of God, Unto God my exceeding joy;

And upon the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God.

Why art thou cast down, O my soul?

And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him.

Who is the help of my countenance and my God."

Safeguarding Teaching

some of our Baptist educational leaders that we should unite with them at that time. There seemed almost an obsession for anything union. We saved ourselves at this time by the presentation of the practical difficulties.

This seminary was 500 miles away, and the cost of sending our students with families—as must be done in the Orient—the fact that probably the students would not consent to take such a long journey, that they would be in a different language area where they could have no practice in Christian work, and, finally, that while this school representing several denominations had an enrolment of twenty-five, we had over 100 students, were sufficient to save the day.

But the strongest objection to such a union effort was that the teaching would have to be modified to suit each denomination. It is so simple and easy to teach the Bible in a Baptist foreign institution. We have no explanations or apologies. We do not appeal to any other authorities, or have to tell why changes were brought in. Our Christian leaders are notably strong in the faith. We could not think of sacrificing all this for the questionable benefits of a union effort.

Independent Missions

Because of the fear that teaching is not what it should be in all of our foreign schools, there is a tendency on the part of some to support independent societies. These usually are faith missions, so-called. This of course is much to be regretted. First, we should be faithful to our own. We have established the schools and missions, and they look to us for support. If we do not support them, no one will.

Then it is our duty to see that these institutions are loyal to the teaching of the churches which support them. If we have any doubts let us find the offending institution, and the offending individual. We can do this without great difficulty. Let us avoid general denunciations but when we do find a genuine case of unfaithfulness in the teaching it should be exposed and dealt with.

I do not approve of these independent missions on the whole. As to their teaching being more loyal to fundamental beliefs, I do not believe it. I have seen these missionaries in no small numbers, especially in the hill stations during the heated term. We do not expect them to compare favorably with our own missionaries in intellect and preparation, but I have often heard them on the same programs, and our own missionaries certainly appeared at no disadvantage as to conservative faith and spirituality.

I know that the teaching in some of their missions must be good, for I have had a hand in training their workers.

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

These missions usually have no well-organized school system, and in the same language area we have often had our workers, trained in our Baptist schools and Theological Seminary, go to them. At times they have asked us for workers and we have done our best to assist them. More commonly, I am sorry to say, if a worker was dismissed from us for cause, these people employed him and at an increased salary.

I do not approve of these missions because of their lack of results. Their workers are usually poorly trained and poorly supported. There is but little consecutiveness to their work, and even in some of the best, the long established faith missions, and those well-organized, they will not show more church members in their entire body than our Telugu mission, for instance, will baptize in a single year.

So let us not think that by deserting our own schools and helping to support independent missions we are safeguarding our own institutions. There is a better way.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that while providing all reasonable safeguards for our schools, we should stand back of our missionaries. There may be other branches of our work about the wisdom of which there may be some doubts, but we are a unit in our zeal for our foreign missionary work. The strongest and most frequent appeal which was made in the New World Movement Campaign was the foreign mission appeal, and yet the foreign work appears to have benefited the least of all the interests. Moreover most drastic retrenchments on the foreign field now seem imperative. With such a noble, trustworthy force of missionaries, whose lives and works, whose devotion to their Lord and the faith, whose sacrifices and bravery are a continual challenge to us, let us see that instead of retrenchment there shall be that support which is worthy of our denomination.

Our Book Shelf

The Red Cavalier, by Gladys Edson Locke. Boston: The Page Co. $1.90.

A mystery story with the scene laid in Yorkshire England. Just about enough excitement and uncertainty to make it interesting to the average novel-reader.

Makers of the Bible, by Hermon G. Seyern. Professor of Biblical Literature in Kalamazoo College. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1.25 net.

A manual intended for young people and others who desire some information from the modern point of view about the processes through which the Bible has come down to us today. It may be read as a narrative or used as a guide for independent study. References abound and suggestions of how to find further information are numerous. 133 pages and appendix.

Graded Bible Stories, by William James Mutch, Professor of Philosophy and Religion in Ripon College. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25 a volume.

Volume 1 is intended for children from five to seven years of age; volume 2 for ages from seven to ten. These books assemble and classify the great biblical stories so that they may be readily used by all teachers of children, whether parents or school teachers. The treatment is simple and concrete. No rigid tests of scholarship are here made; the attempt is rather to find an entrance into the child's mind through the consideration of familiar things. Volume 1 contains sheep stories, baby stories, bird stories, animal stories, tree stories, etc. Volume 2 has in it kinsman stories, stories of sacred things, brother stories, the parables of Jesus, tales of beginnings, wilderness tales, tales of the judges, etc.

The Fighting Starkeys, by Capt. Theodore G. Roberts. Boston: The Page Co. $1.65.

A war story, featuring Canadian troops and showing how men of courage and cowardice acted and reacted on each other. Interesting to the youngsters.

The Psychic Health of Jesus, by Walter E. Bundy, Ph. D., Professor of the English Bible in DePauw University. New York: The MacMillan Company. $3.00.

"Last of all, the pathographers of Jesus have toyed wantonly with the one figure in history to which are attached the sincerest sentiments and the dearest affections of the occidental religious world; and without sufficient reason or justification." So concludes a remarkable vindication of the Jesus of the New Testament against the amateurish conjectures of critics who knew no better way to account for Jesus than to suppose him a degenerate, an epileptic, a paranoiac and a fanatic. And Dr. Bundy has done his work so thoroughly as to come near creating a new department of the evidences of Christianity. But this is the work of a scholar. Those who can digest nothing but light reading may as well leave it alone.

A young American tourist stepped into a shop in a Scottish town one Sunday recently to buy some candy for a Scotch lassie of his acquaintance, and as soon as the customer ahead of him had been served he asked for chocolate creams.

"I dinna sell chocolate creams on the Sabbath," the old dame behind the counter said severely.

"But," the young man protested, "you sold candy to the woman who has just gone out."

"Aye; some ecclesiastical confectionery, but nae chocolate creams," the old dame declared.

"Some what?" gasped the tourist.

"Ecclesiastical confectionery—that is, peppermint draps, pan draps and ginger lozenges," she graciously explained, and added sternly, "but nae chocolate creams."

Praise of Baptist Schools and University Pastors

MISS FRANCES P. GREENBOUGH, student secretary of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention, who since February 1, 1921, has been visiting various types of schools in different parts of the country—state institutions, universities, normals, colleges of other denominations, as well as our own—says that Northern Baptists may well be proud of their colleges and schools. She declares:

"I have only words of praise and commendation for our own schools visited. I found in no school of any other denomination a finer religious atmosphere than that in our schools, and in each case this is coupled with a high standard of scholarship. My one desire is that the needed money may be raised to insure the splendid building programs, and thus meet the ever increasing enrolment, and the growing demands made upon our colleges.

"May I add here a word of commendation of the work of our university pastors, many of whom are reaching in a very vital and most helpful way more Baptist students than are found in many of our own colleges? I am very glad that these representatives of the board of education, for the most part, are following the policy of organizing all student work in connection with the local church, rather than as an entirely separate group. College students must be kept in as close touch as possible with all normal life, as they find it both before and after college. It is most essential that a university pastor should have a home large enough for all personal needs in his contact with students, just as essential as it is for a local pastor to have an adequate parish home."

Church singers desiring easy, melodious songs, of direct emotional appeal, songs which are most useful to give added emphasis to the point of an evangelistic sermon, or for use where an "intimate" song is the thing, should look over the above list of such lyrics. All are written with careful consideration of the problems of range and technical difficulty; none have any suggestion of trouble-spots to bother even an untrained voice or the most amateur accompanist. Each possesses an ingratiating lilt of melody, joined to earnest statement of religious expression. Such sacred repertoire is of great value to the many churches where the musical portion of the service is a problem because of limited means or personnel; simple songs such as we are here considering can be of great service to such congregations; and even the more fortunate metropolitan choirs can add to their religious inspirational power if they will occasionally give such direct messages as these listed above. Unlike too much of this type of material, these specified selections are well-written and show good care as to editing. Attention is called to the moderate charges for the numbers.

Above are listed the titles of six valuable additions to the existing stock of anthems specially suited to the use of our own services. All are valid musically, of textual fitness, and evidently written with a wary eye for the avoidance of choral pitfalls. The first named is a free version of an old Negro melody, set for six-part chorus and solo voices; it will require more elaborate voice divisions than most church choral numbers, but will amply repay the extra effort. The climax at the close is especially well managed. All in all this chorus is one of the most interesting publications for service use that has come to this office for some time. The other anthems are more of the conventional type, the Colby one calling for baritone or contralto solo and chorus; the solo in the anthem by Robyn is of such medium range as to render it available for almost any voice; the Schuler number is choral in form, calling for no solo voices; the two Calver anthems are somewhat more elaborate in design, the first calls for bass solo, followed by a suave solo for tenor or soprano; the next page would be very effective for solo quartet, as opposed to the full chorus setting on the following page—though not so indicated by the composer. The final title is a joyous anthem for Christmas-tide or general use. Directors of choirs looking for new, attractive service material will do well to look carefully over this series of new issues. All but the first-named can be easily used for solo quartet without adaptation.

MANUSCRIPT FESTIVAL A REVELATION

In the annals of the Illinois chapter of the American Guild of Organists the manuscript festival held on the evening of Feb. 23 will go down as one of the most notable events since the organization of the chapter. It was notable not only for the excellent collection of new works for the organ which it evoked from composers in all parts of the country, but for the variety of talent in composition which it revealed in its array of compositions of many moods and varied styles.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Neilson were the hosts of the occasion and placed at the disposal of the chapter their beautiful home on Grand boulevard, Chicago, with its three-manual Aeolian organ, one of the finest of residence organs in this country, as well as one of the largest.

It would be difficult to select the numbers which made the strongest appeal because of the great variance in the character of the works. Frank E. Ward's dignified sonata, played in part, and Mrs. Lily Wadhams Moline's new sonata are of one type, and illustrate well the serious trend of American writing for the organ. Gerhard T. Alexis' "Supplication" was distinctly different and made a deep impression as one of the finest light numbers recently produced—of the class of Lemare's well-known Andantino in D flat and fully up to it in merit. Walter P. Zimmerman offered a gem in the Minuet in his Suite in E minor, two movements of which were played, and if this is not published soon the publishers are overlooking something most interesting and something that we are confident will sell well. William Lester presented what one critic aptly called a "delicious" bit in his "Indian Summer."

The program of the evening was as follows:

Sonata in D flat, No. 3 (Introduction and Adagio), Frank E. Ward, A. A. G. O., New York City. Played by Lester W. Groom.

"Scena Pastorale," Dr. Roland Diggle, Los Angeles.

"Souvenir" (dedicated to Albert Cotsworth), Sumner Salter, A. A. G. O., Williamstown, Mass. Played by Miss Tina Mae Haines.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

Looking into the Future

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY labors in nearly every State in the Union, and in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica.

Its missionaries work among twenty-two foreign-speaking racial groups and eleven Indian tribes in the United States.

It has an extensive missionary educational system among the Negroes, Indians (reaching twenty-three tribes), Spanish and other foreign-speaking peoples.

In Mexico it has a well equipped hospital.

Special attention is given to Christian Community Service in urban and rural neighborhoods. Demonstration country churches are being established, equipment provided and staffs secured to spiritualize adequately all community contacts.

Through an adjustment with the Publication Society it pays for the work of the colporter-missionaries and the missionaries on chapel cars.

It stimulates Evangelism through wide areas and increases interest in this type of work among churches and pastors.

It aids, through its various departments and by the counsel of an expert architectural department, in the erection of schools, churches, parsonages, and Christian community center buildings.

This Department of Architecture is organized for service and operates without profit to itself. It seeks to assist architects, churches, and institutions to secure better results from money spent by making available the experience and study of specialists.

An International Seminary in East Orange, N. J., trains missionaries not only for the racial groups in America, but also to become leaders of their own peoples in Europe. The Mexican Department of the Seminary, located in Los Angeles, Calif., is meeting a long recognized need.

It assists through State Conventions and City Mission Societies in cooperative mission work till it can be made self-supporting. This process toward self-support it hastens by special advice and plans.

It aids in the day of storm, of stress, and of disaster.

It stabilizes work which otherwise would be sporadic and insecure.

Its work is interstate with Conventions, interracial with City Mission Societies, intertribal with Indians, and interlocking with the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society.

Its outreach is international in Cuba, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica.

Its contacts in missionary education are intercontinental.

Its plans and policies are shaped both for the present and future as a fellow-worker with God. It grows as the nation increases. Its income always has kept pace with its opportunities.

LET US PRAY AND LABOR THAT THE REACH OF THIS GREAT SOCIETY MAY BE INCREASINGLY SPIRITUAL.

I Shall Not Pass Again This Way

THE bread that giveth strength I want to give:
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer cruel doubts and fears.
Beauty for ashes may I give away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith;
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

This poem, much worn, was found in the desk of Mr. Daniel S. Ford, the proprietor and editor of the "Youth's Companion," after his death when his desk was cleared by loving hands. It explains much of Mr. Ford's wide and generous benefactions.

Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, of Indianapolis, is the new president of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Rev. S. E. Moon, one of the representatives of American Baptists on the faculty of the Congo Evangelical Training Institution, arrived in New York City, June 2, for furlough in this country. Mrs. Moon was obliged to come home several months before because of ill health and at present is in a sanatorium in St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Moon's two sons and a daughter have been in the Home for Missionaries' Children at Granville, Ohio, during the term of service of their parents. Mr. Moon has been a leading spirit in the development of the school at Kimpese where everybody on the compound is studying, even the workmen being taught reading and writing by the students.

Ministers and churchmen who expect to be in France this summer are cordially invited by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to call upon Pastor Andre Monod, of the French Protestant Federation, 8 Rue de la Victoire, Paris. Pastor Monod will be glad to give his special attention to seeing that such visitors are afforded an opportunity to become acquainted with the important Protestant institutions in France.

Mr. Adolph F. Holmer, Minneapolis, has been secured as general superintendent of the Mounds Park Sanitarium, Midway Hospital and Merriam Park Hospital, St. Paul, his services there to begin August 1. Mr. Holmer has successfully served for a number of years as executive secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Detroit and later in the Y. M. C. A. in the South Minneapolis district.

Frederic J. Gurney, of the University of Chicago, has written a little pamphlet on the subject "Evolution, the Bible and Religion," which should have a wide circulation, especially among students and young people. For those who are troubled on these subjects and as an antidote in the case of those not troubled, it is excellent. It may be had postpaid from the University of Chicago Press for 12 cents.

The first Hebrew Christian Synagogue in the United States was dedicated February 25, 1922, by Bishop Thomas J. Garland, of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The building was originally the parish house of the Church of the Advent, at 517 N. Fifth Street, Philadelphia, where Phillips Brooks was at one time rector. It has been rearranged to suit the requirements of Hebrew Christian worship and missionary service. This is said to be the fifth Hebrew Christian synagogue in the world. The only other on the American continent is at Toronto, while there are three in eastern Europe.

The general theme of the nineteenth annual session of the Conference of Religious Education at Northfield, Mass., July 21-29, is "The Remaking of Society through Religious Education." Special attention is being given to the phase of the program intended to meet the needs of ministers. Professor Norman E. Richardson, dean of the conference and a member of the faculty of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., will conduct a seminar in the psychology of evangelical religious experience. Lectures on the program of the city church will be given by Dr. Henry S. French of Philadelphia; on the social message and the program of Christianity by Dr. Arthur E. Holt; on the missionary message and the program of Christianity by Dr. Herbert W. Gates. This conference is planned primarily to meet the needs of religious educators who are facing the problems of the educational program of the local church. The policies of the newly merged International Sunday School Council of Religious Education are carefully adhered to in its program. Mr. Ivan S. Nowlan, secretary of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association, is in charge of the training of state, district, and county workers.

At First Church, Hamilton, N. Y., Rev. Franklin D. Elmer has been preaching a series of sermons on "The Religion of a Vitalist," the topics being: "The Sources of Life," "Life and Environment," "Spiritual Variations," "The Unity of Life," "The Issues of Life," "The Faith of Life."

Dr. Catharine L. Mabie of Kimpese, Belgian Congo, arrived in New York City, June 2, on her regular furlough. She is a member of the faculty of the Congo Evangelical Training Institution, a union institution with the English Baptists for the training of native preachers and teachers with their families. It is the only one of its kind in the whole Lower Congo region. Dr. Mabie, in addition to her great work of teaching, has been the doctor for the students and the secretary of the mission.

A call extended to him by the Moody Church, Chicago, to become its pastor has been accepted by the Rev. F. W. Philpott of Hamilton, Ont., Can. He will take up his duties there on Sept. 1. Mr. Philpott has given twenty-seven years of his life to his own church and the city of Hamilton and was known as the "pastor of Hamilton."

The Letts have been a deeply afflicted people suffering from German aggression and Russian Bolshevism in turn. They are now afflicted by a devastating flood. The First Lettish Church of New York joined with the Lutheran Lettish Church in holding a religious concert and service on Sunday afternoon, June 4, when appeals were made for suffering kinsmen. In addition to musical services, addresses were made by Rev. A. A. Forshee, the pastor, Rev. John Kweetin and Charles H. Sears, representing Metropolitan Baptists.

On June 9, a council of the Baptist East Association, in response to the invitation of Grace Church of Somerville, Mass., met to consider the ordination of Morton Scott Enslin. A full representation of the association organized with Rev. Harold L. Hanson, of Charlestown, as moderator and Prof. J. P. Berkeley, of Newton, as clerk. Among the delegates were two uncles of Mr. Enslin, Rev. Irving J. Enslin of Derry, N. H. and Rev. F. R. Enslin of Bristol, R. I. Prayer was offered by Rev. George A. Lawson of Union Square Church, Somerville. Mr. Enslin was presented by the pastor of Grace Church, Rev. William H. Dyas, who told of the candidate's place in the work and affections of the church. When the council entered into executive session the statements of Mr. Enslin were accepted heartily and unanimously. The service of ordination was conducted by Pastor Dyas with the sermon by Dr. G. E. Horr, and an address by Dr. F. L. Anderson. After graduating from Harvard University and serving in the Navy during the war, Mr. Enslin entered Newton Theological Institution, from which he was graduated this year with a splendid academic record. He has received one of the best fellowships in Harvard University, where he will study for his doctor's degree this coming year.

The Northfield, Mass., Summer Conferences are as follows: Young Women's Conference, June 27-July 5; Women's Interdenominational Home Mission Conference, July 5-12; Conference for Women's Foreign Missionary Societies, July 12-20; Conference of Religious Education, July 21-29; General Conference of Christian Workers, July 31-Aug. 14; Massachusetts Christian Endeavor Institute, Aug. 14-21; Mount Hermon School Commencement, July 29-Aug. 1; Bible studies and special addresses in connection with the Northfield Schools and Summer Conferences, June to October.

The following facts given below have been compiled by the Inter-Board Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention on student religious activities: Number of Baptist schools in S. B. C., 111; colleges in survey, 106, students 20,590; colleges having Y. M. C. A., 103, students 700; colleges having Y. W. C. A., 22, students 2,891; colleges having Y. W. A., 65, students 4,145; colleges having B. Y. P. U. (163 U's), 75, students 6,572; colleges having B. S. U., 12, students 2,287; colleges having Ministerial Associations, 52, students 1,607; colleges having Volunteer Bands 71, students 1,280. The 1,280 Volunteers in all the colleges are divided as follows: In boys' school, 50; in girls' schools, 286; in co-ed schools, 923.

Four leaders in the Baptist denomination, Rev. J. C. Massee, pastor Tremont Temple, Boston; Rev. Frank M. Goodchild, pastor Central Church, New York; Rev. W. B. Hinson, pastor, East Side Baptist Church, Portland, Ore., and Rev. Curtis Lee Laws, editor of the Watchman-Examiner, will hold a two-day's Baptist Fundamentals Rally, June 21-22, at The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Not only Baptists, but all others interested, are invited.

The waters of the Jordan River in Palestine are to be developed into power to turn the wheels of new industry. The British government has granted a concession for the utilization of the river for seventy years. The energy obtained will be used for house and street lighting pumping, water supply, railways and many other purposes.

Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the New Hampshire Convention, has been elected a trustee of the Newton Theological Institution to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. C. H. Spaulding, deceased.

Dr. Cutten, after serving twelve and one-half years as president of Acadia University, Maritime Provinces has accepted the presidency of Colgate University. His work at Acadia closes the last of July.

Some Speed

THE BAPTIST is proud of the men who do the mechanical work on the paper week after week. We would like to name them in this Kollum. They have never failed us. This past week, however, was a record breaker. Five minutes before President Montgomery had finished her address before the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis we released the issue containing her address in full in the regular edition. Three thousand copies were disposed of in short order and we could have used nearly as many more. This issue contained also the address of Dr. Elmore before the Conference on Fundamentals.

Killam's Kollum

A Sorrowful Greeting

"Let me congratulate you on the last number of THE BAPTIST" was the greeting of an old friend at the Indianapolis meeting. We knew that our good friends were not all of one mind about the paper but we really thought that there was to be at least one more issue. From the very beginning we have contended that THE BAPTIST belongs to the Baptists and that they have the right at any time to do with the paper as they please. Its editors do not own a majority of the stock. In fact they own very little of anything. Its editors are the servants of the denomination. The paper stands four-square for our great missionary and educational agencies. It has stood and stands back of the New World Movement. THE BAPTIST does not expect to please everybody all the time. It will be glad to know that it has served the common good.

We Appeal to the Sherman Anti-Trust Law

"Killam, you do not give us a fair deal. We are a majority of the denomination by your own admissions. You have published articles in THE BAPTIST which have made light of us." This was the substance of a conversation with an old time friend. An hour before through the mail we received a letter from another friend who said, "You should have had more courage and more plain speaking about the matters troubling our denomination." These two men belong to different schools of thought. Both of these men are, we believe, men of deep convictions and genuine Christian character. What is the matter? If THE BAPTIST were studied by any group of men it would be found that the paper has represented both groups. It has not represented either group exclusively. We cannot but feel that it is not representation but monopoly that is desired by some men of both groups.

Monuments

A great stone monument in a cemetery may conspicuously mark the last resting place of the deceased. But it is a very hard, cold and immovable affair. Living, breathing monuments, with all the possibilities for good that lies in an educated Christian man or woman are better. Such is the memorial which Rev. A. H. Rhodes, who died recently at Carlinville, Ill., left. He was instrumental in the education of twelve orphan girls, assisted in educating ten others and adopted two girls into his own family.

The Miniature Baptist

A miniature daily edition of THE BAPTIST was issued each day of the convention, except Sunday, again this year. More than 25,000 copies were required for the period of the convention.

The Pre-Convention Conference

Addresses fervent, witty and able. All resolutions referred to committee.

By THE EDITOR

THE third pre-convention conference on the fundamentals of the Christian faith on June 13, brought to the Cadle Tabernacle at Indianapolis, a large and at times, enthusiastic body of people. The men greatly outnumbered the women and the majority were obviously pastors. The addresses, as always, varied much in interest although the most of them were forceful and a number decidedly striking. There had been rumors of lively discussion to be based upon resolutions that were to be presented, but the possibility of this faded when Dr. J. C. Massee, who presided, announced that the conference was not a deliberative nor a legislative body, but rather a voice crying in the wilderness. "Make straight the way of the Lord," and appointed a committee, consisting of F. M. Goodchild, J. B. Smith, W. B. Riley, E. V. Pierce and Benj. P. Browne, to whom all resolutions must be referred, with the understanding that this committee should report to the body only such as seemed to it important.

Background of Fundamentalism

The first speaker of the morning was Dr. Curtis Lee Laws editor of the Watchman-Examiner, who delivered an able, witty and fervent address on "The Meaning of Fundamentalism." Its background, he declared, was found in the amazing growth of false teaching, or rationalism. Fundamentalists, he said, are just old-fashioned Baptists, although it happens that among the group of men responsible for the movement there is no one who repudiates the visible, personal, second coming of the Lord. The primary purpose of fundamentalism is to raise the danger signal and to plead that all stand for the old faith. Christianity is rooted and grounded in supernaturalism and when robbed of this becomes merely an exalted ethical system. Fundamentalism contends that (1) the Bible is God's word, written by men divinely inspired; (2) that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, that he bore our sins in his body on the tree, that the atonement was vicarious and substitutionary. It believes in the bodily resurrection of Jesus, the personal, visible return of our Lord, that the church is a body of baptized believers, etc. It is opposed to open church membership and to union and federated churches. It has no sympathy with "patched-up compromises intended to promote unionisms." In protesting against overlordship in denominationalism, Dr. Laws asserted that the New World Movement is based on a false premise. The command is not, "Go ye into all the world and establish a Christian civilization," but, "Go ye, and preach the gospel." He expressed the hope that the convention would eliminate the schools from a united budget and give us a united enterprise in which all Baptists may unite. "It was the uniting of all our schools, irrespective of needs, under a united budget, that wrecked the New World Movement." Our present duty is to purge the schools of every suspicion of rationalistic teaching. Foreign missions are an obligation of Fundamentalists. "We insist that our missionaries, in dealing with the demand of an indigenous church in China and elsewhere, be guilty of no compromise." "Contenders for the faith who fail to manifest the spirit of the Lord are injuring the faith."

In speaking on the subject, "The Constitution and Organization of the Churches—a New Testament Study," Dr. Oliver W. Van Osdel, of Grand Rapids, Mich., devoted his attention largely to the standard of authority accepted by the Christian man. He said, "Fundamentalists accept as orthodox only those who accept the New Testament as their fundamental law." The following sentences indicate the trend of his thought: "The distinguishing characteristic of the Baptists is an intelligent belief in the Bible and a willingness to use it"; "Unwillingness to make a confession of faith is unqualifiedly un-Baptistic"; "We must receive the Bible as infallible, inerrant and authoritative—there is no getting together otherwise"; "The genius of the New World Movement compelled the Board of Promotion to become a Board of Control. This is more evident in the state than in the national work."

THOU who art Light, shine on each soul!
Thou who art Truth, each mind control!
Open our eyes and make us see
The path which leads to heaven and thee!

—John Hay.

Dr. J. M. Gurley, of Topeka, Kans., spoke on the subject, "The Church and Entangling Alliances." On the subject of the separation of church and state the common Baptist principle was stated. But the speaker was equally emphatic as to the danger to be found in denominational alliances of all kinds and particularly condemned the Interchurch World Movement, long since deceased, and various practices of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. He was also opposed to the districting of churches as under the Montana plan. "They all hinder us," he said, "in getting the full gospel to the whole world." He opposed union schools in the Orient because "they lack Baptist personality." "The Baptist denomination is wounded in both wings. Adjustments are needed in leadership, schools and principles."

Dr. Earle V. Pierce, of Brookings, N. D., delivered one of the most popular addresses of the conference, his subject being, "The Cooperative Work of the New Testament Churches." His address had three heads: Principles, Perils, Practices. After briefly referring to the first he spoke in detail of three perils. The first is the peril of laxness—the lackadaisical, sprawling mob spirit. Some people are not willing to work with anybody or to follow leadership. But we cannot coerce cooperation, nor should we put it, as is proposed, on a cash basis. There is a peril of leadership. Monarchy is more immediately efficient. Methodist Episcopal form of modified monarchy is quickly effective but it makes it hard to get rid of bad leadership. Democracy is ultimately more efficient and safer. Dr. Pierce expressed his belief in the sincerity and devotion of the General Board of Promotion but thought that danger is found in the possession of such large powers. There is a peril of license—leadership taking us into a way which is not lawful and which is contrary to the leadership of the Holy Spirit. This takes us astray in regard both to life and truth. He charged that the present denominational leaders have kept Fundamentalists off the Boards and out of places of leadership in the denomination. There is no such thing, he said, as an untrammelled democracy. An untrammelled democracy is a mob. The dividing line among Baptists is between those who find final authority in the Bible and those who find it in human philosophy. Are we going to settle down in Plato or in Christ?

In speaking of practices, he asserted that if the middle-of-the-road men, for whom Dr. J. M. Stiffer professed to speak in THE BAPTIST a few years ago, had been really troubled by the presence of radicals in the denomination, we should not have had the present explosion. He criticised THE BAPTIST on the ground of unfairness and severely condemned our mission study books on the ground that they seem to deny the right of a small group of Baptists in a little town to stand out alone. "If it has ever been right for a single Baptist to stand out alone, it is right for small groups to do so."

The address on "The Churches and Sound Doctrines," by Dr. M. P. Boynton, of Chicago, appears elsewhere in this issue.

The session of the afternoon was devoted to the subject of education. Dr. Frank M. Goodchild, of New York, spoke on "The Churches and the Education of the Youth in Secondary Schools and Colleges." Dr. J. A. Maxwell, of Chester, Pa., had the same theme as applicable "In Seminaries." Dr. W. T. Elmore, of Lincoln, Neb., spoke on "Safeguarding Education in our Mission Fields."

Men Wise In Their Own Conceit

Dr. Goodchild's powerful address showed how our colleges had been started from Christian motives and was a plea to keep them Christian in teaching and atmosphere. A few sentences will give the tone of the address. He said: "If our sons and daughters in school and college have God's truth taught them, we need have no fear of them. Most of our troubles in the schools come from men who are wise in their own conceit—so wise that they feel no need of God. Education is not the art of swallowing pellets of information prepared by somebody else. I would not have a flippant teacher in any classroom. It is the unbeliever who is limited in his thinking and it is the Christian who thinks things through. The teacher should believe something and have a passion for teaching it. Nothing can justify the presence in a Baptist school, supported by Baptist money, of a professor who is using his influence to overthrow the Christian faith and Baptist principles of the students."

Dr. Maxwell spoke on the importance of theological education and the respect we owe our schools. In his opinion the dom-

Are We Big Enough?

THAT was a pertinent and pressing question put squarely by Mrs. Montgomery in the president's address at Indianapolis. "Brethren, are we big enough for a cooperative movement?" She believes we are, and that we can learn the art and practice of cooperation.

What will the convention say and do in answer? For it must say and do, and upon its declaration and doing hang tremendous issues, as yet apparently little appreciated by the delegates at large. If Northern Baptists are not big enough to carry on and forward successfully a cooperative movement for world evangelization, they are too small for the sacred trust committed to them.

The delegates may well be sobered by the weight of responsibility resting upon them in these days. If they have resources of spiritual power, now is the time to draw upon them. Real problems must be dealt with carefully and prayerfully. Facts must be faced. The missionary societies are loaded down with staggering deficits. Doubt and division never pay debts. Confidence is vital to credit, and on credit just now the very life of some of our national societies depends.

This truth must in some way be driven into our consciousness, that the missionary interests we hold dear are involved in the answer to this question as to the possibility of loyal cooperation, of hearty acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, of actually practicing our vaunted democracy. How many realize that if we are not big enough to carry forward our cooperative movement, and in this convention immediately and unitedly plan to secure financial relief, the very solvency of our foreign mission societies is imperiled, and bankruptcy stares our consecrated missionaries in the face. Scrapping machinery and method has cost us dear in the past, and may still seem sport to some, but it can only spell denominational disgrace and disaster now.

The seriousness of the situation can not be overstated. In the light of it, if we really believe what we say about the uplifted Christ and his claims on our love, devotion and service, we shall brush aside all lesser things and address ourselves solemnly and determinedly to two things—first, to settling decisively this question as to loyally working together, and second, to practical planning how to arrest the Gandhi movement among us, reassure and inspire our people, and make cooperation effective in all our churches.

"Brethren, are we big enough?" Or to change a word, are we Christian enough to cooperate in Christ's name in Christ's cause for Christ's sake?

Contributing Churches

OUR people are interested, said Dr. J. W. Aitchison, in a statement issued at Indianapolis, to know the facts concerning the number of churches participating in the New World Movement and we are glad to be able to furnish some authoritative figures on the subject. The General Board of Promotion some time ago sent to each state convention a questionnaire asking for a report on the extent of participation within its territory. To this questionnaire all but two of the conventions have replied. A tabulation of the answers yields some interesting results.

The total number of Baptist churches in the states which replied is reported as 9,644, with a total membership of 1,306,748. Of this total 1,260 churches, with a membership of 221,874, belong to racial groups, such as Swedish, German or Negro Conferences, which carry on their own work independently. The deduction of these leaves 7,386 churches, with a membership of 1,077,738, which would normally be expected to cooperate in the general denominational program. Of this number 6,365 churches, whose membership aggregates 1,033,760, actually did make contributions counting on the New World Movement Fund during the fiscal year 1921-22. Thus it is seen that the entire membership of the non-contributing churches is 43,978.

This means that over 86 per cent of the churches in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention, excepting those which are affiliated with racial groups of their own, contributed to the New World Movement during 1921-22, and that approximately 95.93 per cent of Northern Baptists, excepting such racial groups, are members of churches which contribute to the New World Movement.

A Rising Baptist Consciousness

FUNDAMENTALISM in the Baptist body has brought about an interesting reaction. There is a rising Baptist consciousness which is increasingly becoming manifest. And there are coming together with no external compulsion whatever and even without any invitation men and women of many varied points of view for a re-affirmation of historic Baptist principles.

The Fundamentalists are not the only and original type of Baptists; they represent only one particular type. Fundamentalism is not the only conservatism; it represents only one, and that an extreme, form of conservatism. It inevitably attracts to itself extremists in doctrine but it cannot and does not hold moderate men who try to hold the faith of Jesus in the spirit of Jesus.

Baptists all believe in the Word, but many do not receive it as a book of science and history, glad as they are when it proves that the vehicle which conveys the religious thought is itself proved sound. Baptists all hold to the unique character, the divinity of Jesus, but not all of them are willing to say that a virgin birth was absolutely necessary to this. Baptists all believe in the suffering love of God, expressed on Calvary, through which we have redemption, but many cannot hold the crassly material view of the atonement which seems to satisfy some of the brethren. Baptists all believe in a risen, a present, and a coming Christ, but not all are sure that a material manifestation is God's promise or purpose.

The rising tide of Baptist feeling of which we speak assumes that there are different kinds of Baptists but hastens to claim all of them as its own, rejoicing in their loyalty and devotion to Jesus Christ, and applauding these assertions that they propose to take the New Testament rather than any man-made creed as their platform.

Delegates who were close to things at Indianapolis will know what we mean. But the same phenomenon, thank God, is becoming manifest in all parts of the country. We rejoice in it. There is room in the Baptist body for varied types of thought and various expressions of the same Spirit. We wish no factions in the denomination, whether they are called Liberals or Fundamentalists. Let us all be Baptists! Any who feel that they cannot be Baptists in that broad spirit of love and toleration which has always marked the body are welcome to go where they will. But the old Baptist consciousness, which allows a man to stand on the New Testament and to worship God according to his own conscience is re-asserting itself and is certain once more to sweep the whole denomination.

Concerning the Conference on Fundamentals

ESTIMATING a conference is always a serious business. When one has done his best, there is yet more to be said. And yet certain definite impressions came to the writer as he sat through the Conference on Fundamentals at Indianapolis.

1. The men attending are intensely in earnest and most of them are fighting for positions which they feel are imposed upon them by conscience and loyalty to the Word of God.

2. Many among the leaders and speakers are constitutionally incapable of seeing more than one side of a question. Not all concede to those who differ from them the sincerity they claim for themselves.

3. The tests those most prominent would apply to are external rather than vital.

4. The leaders are possessed with the idea of capturing all the principle offices in the convention and are determined to continue agitation in the hope of doing this. Assuming that they are the only real Baptists, such an ambition seems to them entirely proper.

5. Whether this year or some other the creation of a visible standard of authority (and the New Testament is apparently not sufficient) is their full intention.

6. The separation of the educational from the general budget is ever before them.

7. The only allowable conception of the Bible is that of a book, "infallible, inerrant and authoritative."

There was hardly in the conference the same enthusiasm which marked the gathering at Buffalo or even at Des Moines. Yet it by no means sang its swan song. It is yet a force to be reckoned with. In our judgment, however, if this conference is an indication, Fundamentalism in our Baptist denomination has passed its zenith and will gradually disappear before that rising Baptist consciousness which in the evangelical body, allows more than one point of view to its adherents.

Saying a Good Word for the Flapper

MISS A MAUDE ROYDEN, English and a minister, was attracted during her recent visit to the United States by the flapper. How could she help being? She listened to a chorus of condemnation from the pulpit and of laughter from the press. Then she said: "Those girls dress smartly, but their secret is that they are as smart in mind as in dress. They have brains. If American girls will take up religion as seriously as they have dress and business, religion will have the greatest revival in its history."

How to bring about this new sense of values in the minds and hearts of our young people is the serious problem which both parents and pastors are facing. A frank study of the question why these young women do not now take religion seriously might possibly be of value. The fact is perfectly clear. Moreover there are many in our churches who are good workers as long as things please them, but who quit when their feelings are hurt. Does this evil condition of things have its origin in the home, is it the result of over-much consideration of the feelings of young people on the part of the churches, or is it the result of some other condition? Young people are logical; is it possible that they have seen a hiatus in the lives of older people between their profession and their practice and wish for themselves to have nothing to do with such hypocrisy?

Miss Royden's tribute to the girls is deserved. Our American girls are certainly wide awake intellectually and every other way. Why is it, however, that so many of them do not take their religion seriously?

The Karen Theological Seminary, Insein, Burma

Changing times have brought education to the villages; boys from station high schools are found all over the country. Largest class in history of seminary graduated. A proposal for Smith Memorial Building.

By HARRY I. MARSHALL

HAD a tourist driven up Seminary Hill in Insein one Saturday forenoon a few weeks ago he would have seen a Victrola standing under a mango tree and a group of theologists shoveling dirt to the liveliest tunes in the cabinet. The students wanted a tennis court on the compound and so they not only raised over $100 to provide the outfit, including backstops, but they also leveled off the sidehill to make the court itself. Morning work hours did not bring the desired result soon enough and so the Saturday was devoted to it and the speed of the digging was accelerated by Sousa's marches and other stirring music. It was not many days after this that tennis balls were merrily spinning over the net.

A Day's Routine

The daily routine begins early at the Karen Seminary. At 5:30 in the morning the bell rings and the boys get out to the tasks that have been assigned to them. One group goes to the paddy (rice) bin to husk the rice for their daily food. Another group reports to the dining hall and cook house and assists the cook in the preparation of the meal, drawing water, setting tables and cutting firewood. Another set of boys open up the chapel and recitation rooms and give them their morning sweep. Still others work in the yard, cutting trees that are no longer needed, re-metaling the roads, grading the still unimproved parts of the compound, and cleaning up things generally. One boy acts as medical assistant and deals out castor oil, salts, calomel, quinine and such things, sometimes under the missionary's eye and sometimes by himself when the cases are simple enough for him to deal with.

Out of the more than a hundred boys, there are always some who are ill. The rather crude conditions of life in the tropics, and the constant presence of contagious diseases contaminating the water, as well as the seasons when there are fruits that often have an unhappy action on the bowels, cause a great deal of sickness which has to be constantly watched lest it have serious results. This means that a larger proportion of the missionary's time has to be taken up with medical work than would be the case for a head of a school at home. This makes a correspondingly larger drain on the missionary's strength and time.

After the morning work hour the boys invade the dining hall and partake fully of the breakfast of rice and curry. We aim to give as balanced a ration as possible but with the meager funds at our disposal this is often difficult, and the principal item on the fare besides the rice and some small vegetable is "nya u" or "rotten fish" a paste made of tiny fermented fish, much relished by all the people of this country, but liked at a safe distance by the Europeans.

At 8:30 the bell rings for chapel. The Karens love their hymn book. Singing is to them a delightful part of the worship. To hear this company of young men whose strong, sweet voices rise in praise at the opening of chapel is to be lifted out of one's self into an irresistible spirit of worship. More than once have visitors been seen brushing away a tear as they have heard the old songs of the church poured forth by these men whose fathers only a short century before were absolutely ignorant of the saving grace of the Lord Jesus. The spirit of adoration is here and in the reading of the Psalm and in the prayer that follows one feels that here is a school of earnest young men preparing for the work of the kingdom.

After chapel, the class-room work. This is all in Karen, except a few English classes for the better prepared students and a class a day in the Burmese language in order that the Karen may fulfil their obligation to the more numerous race of the country in which they live. The courses pursued are not different from those of many seminaries at home. Our present aim is to make the work as practical and simple as possible so that it will be a real preparation for the village pastorates and evangelistic appointments which the men will take up on graduation. This last year community games were introduced. The Y. M. C. A. physical director from Rangoon came out and gave the instruction which the students took hold of with enthusiasm. Only a few days since have I received a letter from a this-year's graduate who says that he has been sent to a heathen village where the people have their Buddhist priests. He has been able to make no headway with the elders but by the use of these games he finds that he has already got a strong hold on the young people and is greatly encouraged. His work will tell not only for the physical improvement of the villagers but it will make a healthy recreation for them, in place of the idle gossip, and worse, that so often occupies their time.

Times Are Changing

In the early days of the mission the man who could learn to read and to sing a few hymns went out as a teacher. Many a life-long pastorate has been conducted with little more than such a preparation. But the times are changing. One of the best and most beloved of the teachers of this seminary who has just retired after thirty-one years' service here, had almost no schooling except the four years he had in the seminary. But the day of such men is past. The changing times have brought education to the villages and boys from station high schools are found all over the country. Our pastors must be as high as the better

Care and Carelessness

*I CARE not that the storm sways all the trees,
And floods the plain and blinds my trusting sight;
I only care that o'er the land and seas,
Comes sometime Love's perpetual peace and light.*

*I care not that sharp thorns grow thick below,
And wound my hands and scar my anxious feet;
I only care to know God's roses grow,
And I may somewhere find their odor sweet.*

*I care not if they be not white, but red,
Red as the blood-drops from a wounded heart,
I only care to ease my aching head,
With faith that somewhere God hath done His part.*

*I care not if, in years of such despair,
I reach in vain and seize no purpose vast;
I only care that I sometime, somewhere,
May find a meaning, shining at the last.*

men of their communities. To replace this retiring teacher we are having a man who has his B.A. from Judson College and is just now finishing his course at Newton Seminary in U. S. A. Other college graduates are in line for the strengthening of our staff in order that we may be ready to meet the new standard that we are setting for students. Well-trained teachers for well-trained students is our watchword.

Monument to Dr. and Mrs. Smith

When nearly half a century ago Dr. D. A. W. Smith took charge of this seminary it was one of the highest schools in the province. It was located in Rangoon and beside it grew up Judson College. Then in 1890 it was moved to this beautiful hilly situation in Insein. Dr. and Mrs. Smith came out and lived in a mat hut while they cleared off the jungle, built chapel, dormitories and mission houses. Here is their monument, yet not here but in the more than a thousand young men who fired by their influence have gone out to every nook and corner of Burma, and even across the borders into China and have proved themselves worthy fellow-workers of the American missionaries with whom they have labored.

But the future, we believe, holds even greater opportunities for this old seminary—for it is the oldest in the Orient, having been founded by Dr. Binney in 1845. The awakening consciousness of the people is making great demands upon us. The men who are to be the leaders of our Karen churches must be men who know more than what is going on in their own village. The greatest experiment in democracy that the world has seen hitherto is being carried on in India and Burma where the English government is taking steps to give the people "Home Rule." The opportunity before the native Christians is great. The need for leadership is still greater. Unless our leaders can inculcate Christian principles and a high degree of Christian and social morality, the experiment will be in vain.

The pastor in a Karen village occupies the position once held by the minister in the colonial New England town. He is the leader of the village in the fullest sense of the term. Now to maintain his position he must equip himself with the best education and training possible in order that in this critical time he can lead the people into right ways of thinking and acting. Unless he does this the only other leaders thus far in sight are the demagogues and grafters who are doing their utmost to teach the people their own shortsighted and unscrupulous schemes the falsity of which the people are not yet prepared to discern.

But not only for the political and social betterment of the people are we working. Religion is our chief business. The preaching of Christ is the great panacea for all ills, personal and social. Through the regeneration of the individual and his

Little Things and Big

By G. A. LEICHLITER

THE butterfly was a caterpillar first and then came the flying wings of such wondrous beauty. The caterpillar did his job of crawling before the butterfly ever went into the world of flowers and kissed each bright face that was lifted in a smile of gracious sweetness.

Men are seldom chosen to head great corporations until by a more or less laborious process they have acquired a comprehensive knowledge of the business itself. They do the little things first.

You could not imagine a college president who could not say the multiplication table. He started with the little things.

Can you then hope that the great Husbandman will thrust you out into an ever enlarging sphere of usefulness and recognition until you have proved true to the little things and obscure?

Little things may either make or mar.

"A pebble in a streamlet scant
Has changed the course of many a river;

A dew-drop on the tender plant,
Has warped a giant oak forever."

training will come the building up of the kingdom of God on the earth.

The Bible is the chief text book of the seminary and will continue to be such. The men who go out will, we trust, be taught to become effective preachers of the gospel not only in their own villages but to the uttermost parts of the country in which they live and also over in Siam and among the peoples of the Shan Land and the Chinese border.

On February 1 the largest class in the history of the seminary was graduated. Forty-two men took their diplomas. Of these four men have gone to China to assist Mr. Young in his work among the Hill tribes there. Two others have gone to a new tribe—the Palaungs—in the Shan country, and two others have gone to Siam. These men (with the exception of the last two who are working among Karens in Siam) are learning new languages, and working among peoples almost as foreign to them as the Karen are to us.

One day a few months ago one of the boys came to the missionary and said he was having a touch of what seemed to be beri-beri. The best cure for this disease is to send the boy off for a change of diet and atmosphere. So I told him he might go for a few days. On his return about a week later I asked him where he had been and how he was getting on. His face told me that he had had a good time and was all right again. He said he had been preaching and then told how he had started at a Buddhist monastery at which he had formerly been a novice, and had gone through a number of villages preaching all the time, and he ended up by saying, "Oh, I had a good time!"

Love for Seminary

The Karen churches love their seminary. If you doubt it just try to get near the chapel on the day of the graduation exercises. They carry the heavy end of its financial burden. They have raised an endowment of over Rs. 35,000 ($12,000) their annual contributions last year amounted to almost Rs. 5,000, while the appropriation from the A. B. F. M. S. last year amounted to only Rs. 2,065, for current expenses.

During the past year Dr. Smith, who for forty years (1876-1916) was the president of the seminary, passed on to his reward. The people all over the country mourn his loss. Now they are proposing to build a new quadrangle of dormitories that are badly needed and to name the buildings the Smith Memorial Buildings. They are going to raise Rs. 40,000 to pay for half the cost of these and they are asking the other half from the Baptist brethren in America. I am sure that the people at home will be willing to help those who are working so hard for themselves. One Christian woman came to Insein to see Dr. Smith, not having heard of his illness, but reaching the house the evening of the day on which he died. It was touching to watch her as she tenderly fondled the dead form of her old teacher. Then she turned to us and said that she had heard that the teacher needed some money to dig a well on the seminary compound as our supply of water was short, and she had brought two hundred rupees to make a beginning and she would give as much more as was needed to finish the job in good shape.

The fathers are passing on and are at rest. It is up to us to carry on where they have begun. The well is being dug. New and fine young men are sending in their entrance applications. Additional text books are being prepared, new methods are gradually supplanting the old, but withal a firm hold is being held onto the Christ who is the life of the whole institution. In him we shall go forward and in him we shall win the victory.

Visions and Revisions

Seizing a vision leads to revision of ways of working, giving, living.

By CHARLES L. WHITE

NO one can read our Baptist history and not be an ardent optimist.

A Look Backward

A little over a century ago, Luther Rice returned to America from India and lifted before the eyes of American Baptists the vision of what could be accomplished if they would vigorously undertake foreign mission work. In a few months that vision led to a revision of the life of American Baptists. Within twenty years, the American Baptist Missionary Union, the American Baptist Publication Society and the American Baptist Home Mission Society were organized.

If one has only a vision and becomes quiescent in sight of what he sees, he usually turns out to be visionary, and often degenerates into a spiritual vagrant. But if he is seized by his vision, that vision leads to a revision of all his ways of working and of giving and of living.

After the Mexican War our fathers had a vision of an open door in Mexico, and they were brave enough, without neglecting the frontier in the West, to push their work down over the Rio Grande.

In the year '63, in the midst of our Civil War, our society sent a minister down to Fortress Monroe to spy out the land. A few weeks later he returned with such a vision of peace in the South among those whom Abraham Lincoln had just freed by the Emancipation Proclamation, that it was unanimously voted by our board of managers to revise once more its methods of Christian missions and go down into the Southland, where during these years we have built up a great missionary educational system, investing $6,000,000, given generously for this purpose by Northern Baptists, to transform a race.

After our war with Spain, a minister from Boston was asked to go down into Cuba to see if there were opportunity there for American Baptists. And once more, a few months after he returned, the denomination decided to revise its ideas of American missionary work, and go down into the Pearl of the Antilles and into Porto Rico. And since then, at Dr. Barnes' suggestion, we have entered Central America.

After our wars with the Indians were finished, our society had another vision of what we could do for the Redmen, and once more we revised our "standards" for missionary achievement.

But in the midst of the great War in Europe we have undertaken perhaps, the most significant revision in our plans for missionary education that the society has ever made in all its history. We had a vision of what an international seminary could do and the work it could accomplish. Our earlier plan has been abandoned, of having several little seminaries for the various races, and we have combined our efforts to prepare leaders from the best and the most effective and promising of the young men among these foreign-speaking racial groups in America, organizing these smaller schools into one school which we call the "International Seminary," located in East Orange, N. J. Only a short time ago it was my pleasure, with other members of my board and a goodly company of sympathetic souls, to go to East Orange and engage in a service that will be historic, in dedicating this new school, that prepares missionary leaders for these racial groups in America and in Latin America and in Europe, concerning which none of us at this time can prophesy, except by faith.

The Indians See Clearly

A year and a half ago, we made up our minds we must rebuild Bacone College, Oklahoma, where we are training for leadership among their tribes, about two hundred young men and women and boys and girls, who represent twenty-two Indian tribes. We did not know where the money was coming from. We had asked something from the New World Movement; but the pledges for the first year did not give promise that we could have very much, at least immediately, for the reconstruction of that school. Then the Indians themselves got a vision of what they ought to do. And they revised their giving on a scale which makes one of the greatest chapters in the history of American Christianity. At the associational meeting, less than two years ago, a collection of $72,000 for their Bacone College was taken. One woman gave $30,000, and her daughter gave $20,000. A man gave $10,000. Where did they get this money? Most of the Indians are very poor. A few have a considerable income from oil. A few years ago certain of these Indians were very troublesome to the government, and the government placed them, as a reward for their trouble-making, on some of the poorest land in Oklahoma. Whether all that oil was under there originally, I cannot say, but it is there now. Perhaps God sluiced it under after it was given to the Indians. At any rate, some noble, Christian Indians have been made independently rich. They used to go to our Indian school, and others have their grandchildren there, and their boys and girls. When they found they were receiving ample incomes, they became interested in rebuilding the institution.

Gotobo

These Indians have not learned the secret of holding their wealth. Most of them live simply and are giving nobly to the mission school that has done so much for them.

Down in Oklahoma I once looked into the face of Gotobo. He exhibited one of the finest bits of sainthood on the American continent. When one of our representatives was there he preached on the subject of giving a tenth of your money. At the end of that earnest address, Gotobo came forward, as the pastor told me the story, and did the most dramatic thing possible. He stood by the communion table a moment. Then he reached down into his pocket, took out his wallet, and stretching himself to the very peak of his height, reached up as far as he could and threw it down on the communion table with a bang, saying, "You talk about my giving one-tenth of my income,—the man whom God has saved. I tell you, I call these Indians to witness, that from this time forward, I give one-half of my money to God."

The first church that went over the top in our big campaign was the Indian church among the Monos of California. They were asked for $2,000, and in a few hours they had pledged $4,000, and they are making good on their pledges, too.

In view of the conditions that we now face in the New World Movement we should have a new ideal of giving. Will you live as economically as you can, pay your taxes promptly, "lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth" during these next five years, and absolutely give all the rest to the extension of the kingdom of God?

What Some are Doing

The first young man to whom I made that suggestion was in business in New York. I said, "Would you be willing for the next five years to buy no more automobiles than are absolutely necessary, pay your taxes, and give the rest of it for the extension of God's kingdom to save this old world?" He said, "Do you mean it?" I said, "Yes." He said, "That is a pretty hard question. I tell you what, I will think it over. How would fifty-fifty do?" That was his first reaction. Do you know that there are hundreds and thousands of men and women doing what I have suggested. We must revise our standards of giving. Oh, if we could get that vision of giving and that vision of service! Such a scale of giving may well be adopted by men and women, shell-shocked by world conditions, whose souls are filled with terror as they look into the faces of their children and grandchildren, and who shudder as they think what may come in the years ahead, and who believe that the only hope of this world is Christ and his salvation.

Such is the vision that encourages us to go forward. And such a vision can only be accomplished as we dedicate our lives and our possessions to the extension of the kingdom.

Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, United States Army Sunday School

THE largest Sunday school in the United States Army is located at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. During the months of March and April, last, the various Sunday schools of the army, at the suggestion and challenge of Chaplain Frank C. Rideout, who is seen at the left of the picture, entered an all-army contest. The nearest competitor of the Fort Leavenworth School was that of Camp Lewis, Washington, but even they fell almost a third below in attendance. The average attendance of the Fort Leavenworth school during the past season has been around 250 pupils and teachers. Practically all of the children in the picture are sons and daughters of army officers who are connected with the large army college located there, and all will have the advantages of higher education later on. Outgrowing the Post chapel about a year ago the above school is now comfortably housed in the army Y. M. C. A. which was built about a score of years ago by Miss Helen Gould as a memorial to her father, Jay Gould. The school has a splendid orchestra of fifteen pieces of which Mr. Charles E. Alleman, musical director and social secretary of the Army Y. M. C. A., is the leader.

"The Churches and Sound Doctrine"

Address by Dr. M. P. Boynton, pastor of the Woodlawn Baptist Church, Chicago, at the Pre-Convention Conference on Fundamentals of the Christian Faith in Cadle Tabernacle, Indianapolis

THE purpose of this address is to discuss the relation of the Baptist churches to sound doctrine and not to issue in any sense a doctrine for the churches. The phrase "sound doctrine" is a unity and comprises all that body of truth that finds acceptance with the spiritually minded and true-hearted portion of the church membership everywhere.

It is one of the proofs of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit that the rank and file in our churches intuitively apprehend the truth. The busy man of affairs, the housekeeper and the clerk, the school boy and the hard working mechanic, have a heart-sense for the truth and rejoice in it. They likewise have a wonderful power to detect error and departure from the truth. These may not be able to explain how it is, nor be able to enter the lists in debate and defend the truth. But they know and feel. In the truth they are happy and fruitful; in error they languish and fall away. So, it is in this great body of the church that sound doctrine expresses itself and it is with and in this mass of believers that the truth reigns and achieves the purpose of God.

The Least and the Greatest

We must remember that Baptist churches are composed of average men and women. The employees and the employer are met together. The poor and rich are alike one before the altar of the church. The possibilities for conquest of the world for Christ are resident in this mighty company. No class, no portion, no mere minority can do the whole task of the kingdom. We need the entire church. The least of these is needed by the greatest of these that the church may reach into every class of society and redeem all mankind to God.

There is but one way to do this. We have no choice here. The church is the body of Christ. The church must express his mind and do his will, and there is no other function for the church. From this top spring of inspiration and power many other things will flow. A myriad of institutions and movements will grow up in the midst of men. These varied and temporary efforts in the world at large will help and hasten the coming of full knowledge of the Lord in the earth. These movements are like the changing crops on the fields that are wetted with the showers of heaven and sowed with the good seed of the kingdom by the Son of God. But the showers remain the same from age to age.

The church is the sun and the rain. The seed is the truth of God incarnated in individual members of the churches. These members are the seed constantly sown in the fields of the world. This Christian man, that Christian woman, are seeds wherever they go, in whatever they do. Their growth assures a heavy yield when the angels come to reap the golden sheaves for the Master of the harvest. The salvation of the world depends on the abundance of this seed and the faithful sowing and growing of it in human society. This must be a good seed, clean seed, and seed willing to die in the earth.

Now, this sort of church member is possible only where the Christ is known and accepted for all he is declared to be in the New Testament in fulfillment of the prophecies of the Old Testament. The only Christ this world can know or will follow is the Christ of the Bible. These brief records are all we have of message and method for taking the knowledge of our Lord Jesus to the ends of the earth. It seems to be the plan of God that the Holy Spirit shall follow and make plain this Word of God. Where in all creation has man crowned Christ King without the open and understood Bible? How far can our missionaries go without the Bible? What pulpit can hold its power and do its work without the Bible?

What school can train and send forth messengers of the Gospel without the Bible? What home can rear and equip its children for the hard and tangled ways of the world without the Bible? Where in the world today is there an ongoing civilization without the Bible? Tell me!

Our Bible is in a class by itself. It is so different from all other books that in its own merit and by its own power it is given a reverence and commands a preference given no other book. We do not worship the book any more than we worship the sun, but we acknowledge the author of the book who is the creator of the sun. In one we find the love of God made known in his only begotten Son. In the other we find the warmth and light that are the life of the earth. There is just one sun in the skies for this world and there is just one Book in the earth for the church of Christ.

You shade a flower from the light of the sun and you get a sickly growth. You shade a soul from the light of the Bible and you'll have a sickly growth ending in death.

All sound doctrine for the churches comes from the Bible. Without the Bible there is no Christian doctrine.

Yea, without the Bible as we have it today, there is no Christianity worth the name. It is impossible to discredit the Bible and at the same time save Christianity. Sound doctrine exalts the Bible. Sound doctrine is satisfied with the Bible. Sound doctrine uses the Bible. Sound doctrine is the Bible itself.

Wrongs Demand Remedy

It is a matter of record that churches which have fed upon the Bible are to that extent happy and successful in their work. Such churches are soul winners and ardent supporters of the temperance enterprises of our denomination. Social enterprises, like temperance reform, are given their due place and are recognized as a phase of Christian service though passing. Just as the abolition of Negro slavery in this country was aided by thousands of churches and has now been accomplished for all time and needs no longer the thought of the churches, so do these ever recurring needs of humanity appeal to and receive the cooperation of the churches that are true to the word of God. There are yet with us many deep wrongs demanding remedy. The wage slavery and the industrial inequalities must be ended. The churches that follow the Word of God can be trusted to do their part in this new warfare on behalf of mankind.

There has been very little sympathy for or cooperation with the Anti-Saloon League in its fight for national prohibition by the so-called liberal churches. The "people's churches" are mainly distinguished by their distance from and their lack of understanding of the people. The "liberal churches" are everything but truly liberal. A departure from the Word of God by a church or an individual makes for narrowness and illiberality. Such churches and such people become selfish and aloof in the sin and shame of a dying world. Only those believing in and following him, who said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest" are responsive to and sympathetic with the toiling masses and unredeemed tribes of men.

"Bred in the Bible"

It requires a president and a secretary of state who believe the Bible to organize the peace of the Pacific. It is a Hoover bred in the Quaker Bible who feeds the world. Whoever heard of an infidel toiling at such tasks? Where is the unbeliever to whom the world looks for salvation from its ills?

Already the Bible has achieved in our national life to such degree as that no man could be elected president who was known to be an unbeliever in the Word of God. There is much yet for America to become, but she is already a nation whose motto "In God we trust" is not a mockery, and in her high places she puts only men who are known to have their trust in God. This is not because America has become narrow and provincial, but it is because this republic has learned that righteousness alone exalteth a nation and that sin is a reproach to any people. Lincoln is reputed to have said "The voice of the people is the voice of God." If this is true, it is true for the reason that to the great mass of the people God is a reality, and when they speak there is enough of this faith made vocal to determine the issue.

Sound doctrine then must ever express the Word of God. Such doctrine makes appeal to the people in general. It is the sound doctrine of the Word that solves the problems of the evening service and the mid-week prayer meeting. It is the teaching of the Word that makes a real and winning Bible school. It is in a return to this Word that our colleges and seminaries will again flourish and bring forth a great company of youth to go into all the world for Christ.

The inertia and coldness in the churches of the present hour are due to the doubt and uncertainty that have been cast abroad by preachers and teachers who have departed from the simple, childlike trust they once had in the Word of God. It is as true now as in the days of Jesus when he said, "Except ye become converted and become as a little child ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven."

It is not childishness but childlikeness that characterizes a true disciple of our Lord. We walk by faith in the Word of God as truly as we do in our own individual Christian experience. Without faith it is as impossible to understand this Word of God as it is impossible without faith to please God. When a man has lost his childlike faith in the Bible he can no longer understand it, much less teach it to others. We have too much of the wisdom of the world and too little of the wisdom of the Word.

The church is the nearest to the truth or any group of men. To the church the Spirit makes known his will and his ways. It is this simple, free fellowship of men that constitutes the open way from the throne of God to the hearts of men. To such as gather in his name he comes as one of their midst and to them he reveals himself. It is the church and not the court that is nearer God. It is the church and not the school that most understands God. The church not the political party is the leader of men.

It is one of the mysteries of the ages that God has elected to show himself to the world in the person and work of Jesus Christ and the process is continued in the revelation Christ is making of himself in the church.

If the churches of this age fail him he will wait for a more faithful church of another and better age. He is in no hurry. The churches may come and go, but he waits in his regal might to use and bless those companies who are true believers in him and faithful users of his Word. He uses only those churches in this age who are faithful to him.

We may organize and build till the world gapes its wonder. We may spread our buildings over many beautiful acres and rear our towers into the sky with every adornment of religious art. We may mouth big swelling words and fill our libraries with uncounted books. We may conceive of political and economic schemes for the comfort of society. We may organize ourselves to preach the gospel and send forth hundreds of missionaries to foreign lands. In distant parts we may found and endow great schools to educate the people in the lore and wisdom of man. But if in it all we have not as our supreme end the program of him who said "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" and if we have not in our hand the unchallenged Word of God, he that sitteth in the heavens will laugh, he will have us in derision. And the nations will join the Almighty in his laughter and have none of us!

All Need God

God does not need the Northern Baptist Convention. Christ is in no need of the Baptist churches of this or any other city. God is not waiting for our books and journals. No. The Northern Baptist Convention needs God. The First Baptist Church and all others of us need the risen Christ. No books or journals are of use to God save as they reflect and reiterate the supreme Word of God. God needs none of us but all of us need God. Let us stop hunting for the ways of God and find God himself. Let us be done with the weary waiting for Christ to come to us and be up on our way to him.

If the church is the group nearest God and if to the church Christ is revealing himself, then as a denomination it is to the churches we must ever return for our commission to make Christ known to the world. Therefore let the churches return, if any have departed, to sound doctrine which is the Bible. Let the churches insist that the first big duty of the conventions, national and state, of associations and other local groups of churches is to enshrine the Bible as we have it in our colleges, seminaries and mission stations.

Let us have a session of the Northern Baptist Convention with the slogan "The Bible the Word of God." Let us then and there proclaim to all the world our unshaken faith in and our unchanged purpose to continue to follow that Word as our supreme standard and guide in all matters of life.

The vast majority of the Baptists of the North have not departed from that Word. The Baptist churches of the North are sound in doctrine and life, for the most part. Most of the preaching in our pulpits is derived from and expository of the Word of God. Our Sunday schools still gather around that wonderful book. It is our only way, our only guide to him whom we seek beyond the sacred page.

Then let us openly proclaim the soundness of the faith of the Baptist churches of the North. Let this uncounted multitude of humble believers be heard in the high places of our denominational life. Give ear to the faithful preachers of the Word. Let the loyal teachers be heard.

How Do We Pray?

By DONNA HALL ALINE

"O Lord, thy will be done." we say,
"We trust they loving care."
Then we presume to dictate
That all our days be fair.

But following the Master
And looking up to him,
Can we then pray that sorrow
Shall ne'er our pathway dim?

That pain should never greet us,
Nor worry fret our way?
The only things to meet us
Be the lithesome and the gay?

A true and stalwart heart,
Such a prayer will never make.
But take all, just as it comes,
For his Redeemer's sake.

Hail the missionaries returning and reporting the wonderful power of the Bible. Then we shall come with great rejoicing. We shall have a mount of transfiguration from which to go down able to fast and pray and cast the demons out of the afflicted and unhappy children of men.

But this soundness of doctrine needs careful nurture for there are enemies of the Bible in our midst. There is a good deal of nonsense current about Baptist freedom. Be it known to all men that Baptist freedom is all within and not outside of the Bible. The fences are up. The bounds are set. There is a place to which a man can come in his beliefs where he ceases to be a Baptist. One of those places is just at the point where he no longer accepts the Bible as the Word of God. Just there he steps outside our fold. We do not insist upon any one theory of the inspiration of the Scriptures. What we do demand is that every theory shall leave the Bible the unique, unchallenged Word of God.

No man is compelled to stay within the fence. That fence is mostly gates. He can go out at any place he may hit the fence. No man is forced to say anything that his heart does not dictate he shall say. But there are many things one can say, saying which he cannot remain a Baptist.

Our Baptist defense of religious liberty is unique in this, that we would go to war to keep the infidel free as surely as we would fight to keep a Baptist free.

This is a strange freedom. The world does not comprehend it yet. Even some Baptists have lessons to learn in this sort of freedom. Baptist freedom is not for Baptists alone, Baptist freedom is for all men everywhere. Baptist freedom is freedom to refuse to be a Baptist. It is freedom also to cease to be a Baptist. There are some with us who ought to avail themselves of this freedom. Baptist freedom makes it imperative that they shall do so. Baptist freedom makes appeal to a man's conscience. It says to him, "You are free to be a Baptist as long as you are a Baptist, but when in your heart you know that you are no longer a Baptist you are just as free to go and be something else." And the fine part of all this is that no Baptist will lock the gate to keep such a one in. We may weep at the gate, but we will never put a lock on the gate. Another interesting thing about this business is that every gate works both ways. There are no entrances or exits. Every entrance is an exit and every exit is an entrance. It depends upon which way a man is going as to whether the gate be an entrance or an exit.

The Other Side of the Fence

A man can come back at the very point he went out if he wants to. Then, too, there are lots of folk outside the Baptist fence. Thousands are good Christians. One will not be lonesome even if he does step to the other side of the fence.

We have no quarrel with the man who finds he must depart. We honor his honesty and courage. We may not agree with him but we do not aggravate the brother. It is always a pain to have our former comrades change their colors. But if they have already in heart done so, they ought to do so in fact. Our trouble is with the fellow who has departed but won't go; with the teacher who no longer believes as the Baptists do and still insists on staying to teach that which is not Baptistic and draw a salary all the time he is doing it from funds provided by Baptist people for Baptist work and teaching. The fact that the donors are dead and the added fact that most of the trustees and directors of these funds are "dead" too, doesn't relieve such a teacher of the necessity of finding the nearest gate. On the other side of the fence he can be honest, on the inside he cannot be honest.

If such a teacher does not see it on this wise and will not go, we Baptists should provide a means of transit. Let us make it as comfortable as possible for the patient, be it a wheelchair, an automobile, a flying machine or a stretcher. Sound doctrine for the churches demands that such "departed" depart.

We must exercise great care not to bury any Baptist still alive. But when we are persuaded he is dead there is nothing else to do but carry him out. The deader he is the more necessary it is to dispose of him for we may not expect the dead to go themselves.

Now this is a very reasonable way of putting the case. No honest man will object to it. It is the rule applied everywhere else. If a clerk in a silk store were quietly to tell the customers that the goods were not silk, that the old belief in silk had passed out and that the goods now on sale were indeed what people used to think was silk, but times had changed and it was not called silk any more, how long would that clerk be allowed to go his unsilky way? Let me be a little more

The Northern Baptist Convention

By ARTHUR W. CLEAVES

WHEN the fifteenth annual session of the Northern Baptist Convention came to order at 9:30 A.M., on Wednesday, June 14, the number of registered delegates had reached a total of 2,164. There were present in addition fully half as many visitors. Above the platform hung the convention motto—"The Uplifted Christ"—to whom the great body ascribed praise in the opening hymn, "In the cross of Christ I glory." The president, Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, received an ovation as she came to the platform, and she in turn introduced the two vice-presidents, Hon. W. A. Shank, of Washington, and Dr. J. J. Ross, of Chicago. Two past presidents, Mr. Shull and Dr. Barbour were also introduced. The opening prayer was offered by Dr. Clarence A. Barbour and the audience stood during the prayer in honor of former President Tustin who died during the year.

Dr. F. E. Taylor of the First Church, Indianapolis, brought to the assembly the greetings of the Baptists of city and state. He said that the convention is meeting in Indianapolis for the first time. Forty-one years ago the May anniversaries met in the First Church which at that time seated 800 people and amply cared for the delegates and visitors. The growth in size of the meetings has prevented another meeting until this day. The first Protestant church in Indiana, founded in 1798, was a Baptist church, known as the Silver Creek Baptist Church, Isaac McKay, the pioneer minister, with his "Bible in one hand and his rifle in the other, went everywhere, preaching the gospel, the Lord working with him." The center of Baptist population in the United States is now somewhere near Fort Wayne, Ind. The Baptists of the state have always been missionary in spirit. Dr. Taylor indulged in a delightful panegyric on the state and city, and closed by saying that the churches of Indiana have been praying daily for many weeks that the Spirit of God may rule in the convention. "God grant that in these days Jesus Christ may be lifted up until all of us shall see him."

The masterly address of the president, most cordially received by the body, delivered at this point on the program, was printed in full in last week's issue of THE BAPTIST.

Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of Philadelphia, preached the key-note sermon on the theme, "The Uplifted Christ." A digest of this splendid address will appear later.

Then followed a time of prayer as men and women offered themselves again, body and soul, to the Christ whom we all serve. Immediately upon adjournment state delegations met for the election of representatives upon the nominating and other committees, and reports of their elections were made at the opening of the afternoon session.

Wednesday Afternoon

The feature of the afternoon session was a series of three addresses on the general subject: "The Uplifted Christ—The Undiminished Attraction." The first speaker was Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, Chicago, whose subject was: "Our Authority for the Evangel." He said in part:

The message that the risen Saviour gave to the disciples is worthy of notice. There was first a claim. He said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." Then there was a commission. "Go ye therefore and evangelize all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Then following upon the claim and the commission, he issues to them a promise. "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

In particular, it is the claim of our Lord at this time about which I want to speak. The word "power" in this claim, more exactly means "dominion," "authority," "right," "privilege," and has reference to the scepter and sovereignty of him as King. The Lord Jesus means that by reason of his death upon the cross, and his resurrection from the grave, he has been appointed by the Father to administer the government, both of heaven and of the earth, until the consummation of redemption.

Four Kinds of Authority

There are four kinds of authority—personal, legislative, judicial and executive. All are embodied in Jesus. The source of authority is in the Son. There have been times when history knew paternal, prophetic, kingly and priestly authority. Here in this claim, Christ says, "All authority is given unto me." He alone is the Embodiment, the Source, the Standard, the Expression, the Executive of all authority in religion.

The source and standard of authority is not now in the father, not in the elder, not in the priest, not in the prophet, not in the king, however good and true they may be; not in tradition pure and all, as it may be, not even in a book, though the book may be divinely inspired, and though the book may be an expression of that authority, but in a Person; not in every person, but in one Person, that Person who has passed through death, who has come out again in resurrection, immortal life, and has been made the possessor of the totality of the divine attributes, and is now "uplifted," and at the right hand of the Majesty on high. He alone holds the scepter of uprightness, and wears the crown of universal dominion. He alone has the right to speak in reference to the evangel, and we must bow to what he says. He claims, all authority is his, whether it be personal, legislative, judicial, or executive, and hence he issues the royal mandate, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Rev. C. L. Trawin, of McMinnville, Oregon, spoke on the subject, "The Witnessing Power of Personal Testimony." Among other things, he said: "We are yet very religious. The distance between Athens and Boston is not measured in miles. God yet commands all men everywhere to repent. The world has yet a right to test Christianity by its cures rather than by its creeds. A dead herbium gathered by a father cannot mean to his daughter what do the living, glowing flowers of an Oregon hillside. The witnessing power of the evangel does not lie in a distant cross so much as in something that may happen now—that is, in the transfusion of the life of Christ into mine. When the church sees Christ as he is with a heart broken over the sin of the world, we shall go out to bring in the denomination as it has never been brought in in all its history."

The Price to be Paid

Dr. W. H. Geistweit, of St. Louis, had the third address under the general subject, his theme being, "The Price to be Paid." "It cost God his Son," he said, "to redeem the world. The price is not cheap. If any man would come after me, says Jesus, let him deny himself. We are heralds of a mighty passion. Fellowship in his sufferings is the price you pay in order that you may enter with him his effort to redeem the world. There must be sacrificial service if the sacrificial Christ is to be lifted so that all men may come to him. Fellowship with him in his character is another part of the price to be paid. To the question, "Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord, the answer is, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." No man can be a preacher very long and be a bad man. We want asepitized people who shall lift the Christ. Fellowship with him in his spirit is another part of the price to be paid. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his," no matter how skilful or seemingly successful he may be. If we are tempted to have differences among ourselves, let us look at the enemy, in order that in the presence of the common enemy we may uplift the Christ."

There was a ripple of excitement during the afternoon when Dr. J. C. Massee, of Boston, moved in substance that, if it were possible, the nominating committee should make its report, in printed form, at least twenty-four hours before the vote is to be taken. The motion, however, was seconded by Dr. C. Wallace Petty, of Pittsburgh, and was passed with but few dissenting votes. A motion introduced at the suggestion of convention officials, by Dr. E. A. Hanley, of Berkeley, Cal., that all speakers from the floor on all subjects, be limited to four minutes each, was lost.

The Wednesday evening session was given up to two addresses, one by Dr. J. C. Robbins, telling of recent observations in India, Burma and Assam, and the other an illustrated address by Rev. W. B. Lippard, telling the fascinating story of the ship of fellowship. Dr. Robbins' address will be published in a later issue of THE BAPTIST.

Thursday, June 15

Thursday morning dawned fair and hot, as all previous days had been. Early in the first session Mrs. M. M. Lackey, of Jackson, Miss., brought the fraternal greetings of the Woman's Missionary Union of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The report of the executive committee of the convention was presented by Dr. W. C. Bitting. It carried with it three proposed changes in the by-laws. One fixes the date of the meeting of the convention as the Wednesday before the first Sunday in June. Another provides that the report of the committee on resolutions shall be presented in written form at the morning session of the day prior to the last day of the convention. Yet another read as follows:

(1) That Article I, Section 1 (a) be amended to read as follows:
 "(a) Any Baptist church in the United States may appoint one delegate and one additional delegate for every 100 members, provided the church during the year immediately preceding the annual meeting of the convention shall have made a contribution of money for the work of at least one of the cooperating organizations of the convention, or for the work of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, or for the work of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention."

This last amendment alone excited opposition. M. P. Boynton of Chicago, urged an amendment, that all after the words, "one hundred members" be expunged. James A. Francis spoke in opposition. On a standing vote Dr. Boynton's amendment was defeated by a large majority. This was commonly regarded as a defeat for the Fundamentalists on the first test of strength in the present meeting. This section was then referred back to the executive committee to be presented again to the convention at such time as seems best. The report of the treasurer was then received, after which the report of the Executive Committee was adopted as a whole with the exception noted.

The report of the Board of Promotion was presented by Dr. Aitchison. This summed up the doings of the year already reported in THE BAPTIST and ended with a section on "Facing the Future," as follows:

It has been the desire of the General Board of Promotion from the first to be the servant of the denomination in the important trust committed to its charge. Its chief concern is not for the maintenance of any particular form of organization but for the fulfillment of the great undertaking which the denomination launched at Denver three years ago. It has been ready at any time to make such changes as will promote efficiency in the accomplishment of that purpose. In the light of three years' experience and of the facts set forth in this report, it has during recent months made provision for a restudy of its organization with a view to discovering what improvements might be made in the direction of efficiency and economy.

At the annual meeting in November a special committee was appointed to confer with a similar committee of the Executive Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention to consider a possible reduction in the size of the Board. This joint committee will present its report for the consideration of the Convention at this meeting. At the request of the officers of the Board, the Administrative Committee at its meeting on February 8 appointed a special committee to confer with the Officers' Council and the Cabinet and make recommendations concerning the organization of the Board as well as the promotional program for the year 1922-23. This committee has given prolonged and careful consideration to the questions of organization as related to the present situation and with the approval of the Administrative Committee will recommend a number of material changes.

No form of organization, however, will of itself be sufficient to insure the success of the denominational enterprise. More than anything else we need to develop the spirit of unity as we work together in the common cause. Recognizing the imperative need for cooperation on the part of all societies and boards in the conduct of all promotional programs, and, furthermore, the importance of keeping the denominational constituency informed as to the work of the various cooperating societies and boards in order that there may be a uniform presentation of the conditions upon which pledges are to be solicited and received and a clear understanding as to how payments on pledges hereafter made will be credited by the Board of Promotion, we suggest that the Northern Baptist Convention request each society and board participating in the Movement to pass a resolution directing its representatives, in presenting their work to churches, associations and conventions, to read the following uniform statement:

"Our denominational program, so far as it relates to the securing of pledges, is a unified and cooperative one and to that end the officers of this Society (or Board) and the members of the Board of Managers, urge all Baptists to make their pledges payable to the denominational work as a whole without designation."

"In making this request, however, it is recognized that the donor has every right to designate his gift, if he prefers to do so. The Board of Promotion authorizes the statement that if pledges are received designated for a particular society or board, payments when received thereon and so designated by remitting officers will be made to the particular society or board for which designated without any deduction therefrom whatsoever. Furthermore the percentage of undesignated funds due to societies and boards will not be diminished because of the receipt by such boards of designated funds."

"The purpose of this statement, therefore, is to emphasize the desirability and importance of making all pledges undesignated and at the same time to assure contributors that funds received thereon will be paid by the Board of Promotion to all participating organizations on the pro rata basis which their budgets bear to the total cooperative budget approved by the Northern Baptist Convention."

It is our conviction that the churches are in heartiest accord with the cooperative program through which the united appeal for funds for our work is made. We believe that the churches would no more think of returning to the former methods of collecting funds, with the attendant confusion and irritation incident thereto, than modern civilization would think of replacing the express train with the stage coach or the telephone with the town crier.

Reviewing the experiences of the year, realizing the splendid spirit in which reverses have been met and difficult tasks have been undertaken, we wish to voice here our confidence in the loyal devotion of the great body of our people and in their readiness to make heavy sacrifices in order to sustain our denominational enterprises and further the cause of Christ. We are passing through a crisis, but we must believe that out of this turmoil our Lord will lead us to depths of Christian experience and heights of victory hitherto unknown.

Later in the afternoon this report, with the recommendations it carried, was adopted.

James C. Colgate, treasurer of the General Board, made one of the wittiest speeches of the sessions. Some of his sentences follow:

"I am embarrassed. My business address is 36 Wall St., New York City. I am not used to talking to such good people.—I have been of use to Dr. Aitchison as an interpreter and as a safety valve. His position is like that of the Negro at Coney Island, who puts his head through a hole in a piece of canvas and at whom you can take three shots for a quarter. The only difference is that at the fair you have to pay before you shoot. Dr. Aitchison is free to all.—They don't choose treasurers for spirituality, or, when they do, they generally lose the funds.—We have been taking a census of the denomination and we find that if we are rich we are mean, while if we are generous we are poor.—We owe our Fundamentalist brethren a debt of gratitude. When I enter an automobile I have never driven before, I always look first at the brakes. These people have served as brakes when we were going too fast. But one should know also when to take off the brakes.—Our women are the ones who have shown us the way."

Afternoon Session

A joint session of the two foreign mission societies occupied the afternoon session and was made memorable by the introduction of a large group of foreign missionaries, some of whom afterwards spoke.

Mrs. N. R. Wood of Boston, spoke of the lights and shadows of the year's work in the Woman's Society. Among the shadows mentioned were (a) a debt of at least $400,000; (b) a necessary cut of 25 per cent in all budgets. But there are bright linings. The situation has forced us to give native leaders more control, has revealed the heroism and generosity of our workers on the field and has brought us to our knees. There are some shadows, however, with no light. Fourteen women, or one-half of the total number on furlough, cannot be sent back. Last year forty-two new missionaries were sent out; this year only twelve can go, although 315 new girls have this year applied to the Candidate Secretary. There must be a 25 per cent cut in all field work. Over-burdened women must bear yet greater burdens.

There followed eleven eight-minute addresses by missionaries. Rev. A. E. Bigelow, of the Philippine Islands, said that fifty boys, or one-half of the entire school above the fifth grade, were baptized last year. Rev. S. E. Moon, of the Belgian Congo, spoke for a country one-half the size of the United States, in which there are only six stations with resident missionaries. Mrs. Clara B. Tingley, a teacher for eighteen years in Bassein, Burma, spoke of the wonderful work in this self-supporting school of 800 pupils. Mr. V. G. Krause made us feel the strategic opportunity in Bengal-Orissa, one of the great industrial centers of the world, in which there are eight American missionaries for 5,000,000 people. Dr. Kirby told of his two little hospitals, twenty-eight miles apart, in Assam, where 2,000 patients are treated monthly. Mr. R. D. Stafford pictured the growing liberality in East China of rich Chinese towards Christian institutions. Mr. R. H. Fisher, a teacher in the Mabie Memorial at Yokohama, asserted that Christianity is far more influential in Japan than any statistics can show. Miss Evalyn Camp pictured the darker side of Japanese life and said that only $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent of the people are Christian. Rev. Jacob Speicher of South China, believes that, as a result of the Anti-Christian Student movement, there will be a great reaction in favor of Christianity. Rev. J. M. Baker, of South India, said that the real Indian is the Sudra and that progress is now being made among this caste. The influence of America is increasing. Rev. Joseph Taylor, of West China, said that the only educational institution in the 100,000,000 people of that section is the West China Union University, and the Baptists had been in this and "looking out through the windows" from the beginning.

The "Annual Review of the Work of the Foreign Mission Society," presented by Dr. Frederick L. Anderson, will be printed later.

The report of the Committee on Evangelism was adopted and hereafter the work of this committee will be committed to that department of the Home Mission Society of which Dr. Stilwell is head.

The report of the Committee on Chaplains, read by Dr. S. Z. Batten, was received and its recommendations adopted.

Last Days of Dr. K. O. Broady

By C. E. BENANDER

DR. FRANK PETERSON was prompt in communicating to the readers of THE BAPTIST the sad news of the death of Dr. K. O. Broady of Stockholm. To his sympathetic and appreciative sketch of the career and personality of this noble servant of God, who during his long life achieved such great things among us in Sweden, we wish to add only some information about his last days and the funeral.

Dr. Broady was desirous to be in active service as a teacher to the young men of the Bethel Seminary until he should be summoned to enter the rest of his Lord. This prayerful wish of his was practically fulfilled. Though weak physically and almost blind, he was remarkably vigorous mentally. He kept on lecturing once a week to the senior class during the fall term of 1921, and it was his earnest intention to resume his lectures on the book of Revelation during the spring term of 1922. He enjoyed greatly to have the students gathered in his room where he sat in his easy chair ready for service, prayer, testimony or departure to be with the Lord, according to the divine will. Before he had given any lecture after the opening of the spring term, he was summoned to the mansions above.

During the later years of his life Dr. Broady was necessarily dependent on the presence and care of his daughter, Miss Nellie Broady, and with tender love and self-denying devotion she cared for her father with the skill of a trained nurse and housekeeper. So the elderly man had the best and most faithful attendance imaginable.

As to the final victory of the gospel of Christ among the nations and the triumphant outcome of the struggle for the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth, Dr. Broady was consistently optimistic to the last. To everybody who visited him he spoke words of cheer and encouragement, always emphasizing the faithfulness of God and the certainty of the fulfillment of all his promises.

On Saturday, March 11, the family physician found that Dr. Broady was very weak, and symptoms of pneumonia were evident. The doctor told his patient that he would hardly recover from this illness as his heart was very weak. Sunday morning the veteran man of God was fully aware that the day was to be his last in this world. Expectant as he had been for years to hear the call from his Master to enter his rest, he now rejoiced to know that the day had come. He said to his daughter, "This is a happy Sabbath, my great day, my feast-day." Three of his children, two daughters and one son were with him. To them he spoke words of consolation and admonition repeatedly. In the afternoon he sank into unconsciousness for a few hours, but in the evening he regained consciousness. Again he spoke to his dear ones clearly and distinctly, not being troubled seemingly by any pain. He sat leaning in his easy chair all day. But about 8:30 p. m. it was suggested to him that he would be more comfortable in bed. "Oh," he said, "you know this is my Sabbath, my great day, please allow me to sit up half an hour longer." Later he was helped into his bed. Then at 2 o'clock in the morning it was evident that the end was near, and as his three children stood at the bedside, their venerable father spoke to them for the last time, bidding them farewell. Miss Nellie then leaned over her father and repeated his favorite saying: "The Lord is good." He added: "Yes, very good." These were his last words. After a little while his face became radiant with surprised joy, and he fell quietly asleep in death without any struggle. He had gone to be with his Lord whom he had served so faithfully in his eventful life of ninety years, less two months and a half.

The funeral was held in the First Baptist church. According to Swedish law a clergyman of the state church should have officiated at the funeral to make it legal. Baptist ministers are not legally acknowledged as ministers and cannot therefore act as authorized functionaries either at funerals or weddings. We have, however, taken the matter into our own hands of late as regards the burying of our dead, conducting funerals according to our own views and tastes. As a rule a clergyman of the state church has to read the Lutheran burial service at the grave afterwards to fulfil the letter of the law. There is, however, no punishment stipulated for our transgression when we venture to act independently as indicated.

A Baptist Burial

We gave Dr. Broady a Baptist burial in agreement with the bereaved family. The church was overfilled with people. The pastor, Rev. Hjalmar Danielsson, preached the sermon. Then the writer of this report stepped up to the casket, which was wrapped in the stars and stripes and the Swedish flag—Dr. Broady was a brevet colonel of the Grand Army of the Republic of the U. S. A. since his years of service in the Civil War—made a short speech and performed a simple burial ceremony. Several addresses followed. Rev. J. Bystrom spoke on behalf of the Union of the Baptist churches in Sweden and gave in fitting language expression to the general and deep feelings of appreciation and gratitude for the invaluable work Dr. Broady accomplished and the noble Christian life he lived among us in Sweden as a missionary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society for fifty-six years. Among others who spoke contributory to the worthy and honorable memory of the deceased was his Highness Prince Oscar Bernadotte, next eldest brother to King Gustaf V. Dr. Broady had been active years ago, among others, in organizing a society for mission work among the soldiers and the prince spoke as the president of this society.

The procession from the church to the cemetery was imposing. Between 2,000 and 3,000 people had gathered around the grave to do honor by their presence to the man of God whom they had learned to love and esteem for his work in the Lord.

So the good and faithful servant is at rest. He was ripe in years and we could not expect to have him much longer among us, but we feel bereaved nevertheless. He filled such a large place among us and he was so much to us in many ways that we cannot but feel as if we had suffered an irreparable loss by his departure. In Swedish Baptist history the name of Dr. Broady will ever figure among the foremost champions of our faith.

Latest Statistics

Statistics of the Swedish Baptist churches showing changes during the year 1921, have just been issued. Jan. 1, 1922 there were in Sweden 681 Baptist churches, 60,530 members, 436 ordained ministers, 721 lay preachers, 109 foreign missionaries, 73 students in two theological seminaries, 1332 Sunday schools, 5316 S. S. teachers, 65,270 S. S. scholars, 111 junior societies—3723 members in these societies, 640 young people's societies—membership in these 27,642—houses of worship 759.

During 1921 there were 2,549 baptisms and 418 persons were restored to membership. Ten new churches were organized. Deaths 982, excluded 1,283. Owing to an intense agitation on the part of the so called "pentecostals" 994 members have left our churches and joined them. So we have the sad experience of reporting a decrease in the church membership of 533. Something very unusual in our history.

The contributions for all purposes during 1921 amounted to kronor 3,710,448 ($1,002,823).

Revivals

Reports of spiritual awakenings have come from several places. In one town in the north of Sweden, Oeruskeldsvik, upwards of 200 new converts are reported. Over fifty have been baptized since January 1, and many more are expected to

Topic for July 9

GETTING THE BLESSINGS OF FREEDOM
John 8:31-36

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

A discussion of this topic comes just a few days after the festivities of the greatest national holiday in the United States. All sorts of celebrations will have been staged throughout the country. Before the days of the "safe and sane fourth," fireworks played an important part. Just what these had to do with patriotism it would be difficult to explain.

1. America, "the home of the free." A very much abused statement. There is the foreigner who comes to America with the idea that he can do as he pleases from preaching Bolshevism and anarchy to committing murder—all because he is in a land of freedom. Then, there is the native-born American, if there be such an individual. He trails the old flag in the dust; he violates the Constitution of the United States—he is free. He stages parades against the Eighteenth Amendment; he pleads for beer and light wines—he longs for the onions and garlic of Egypt. Yet, he boasts of his patriotism.

Such aliens as these do not know the first principles of freedom. The "foreigner" may be excused on the grounds of ignorance. Swift punishment should be meted out to the "native born."

2. America, the land of freedom of conscience. What a priceless heritage is this! One would gather from press reports that in some places people are forgetting. Not long ago, a communication reached the desk of the editor which in effect stated that the writer did not stand for divisive tendencies, but that all others should agree to his statement of truth and thus there would be unity; those not thus agreeing should get out. That is the sort of unity which the Roman Catholic church has been able to maintain. Especially obstreperous ones have been excommunicated, turned over to the state authorities, and out via guillotine.

We call attention to the statement appearing on the front page of THE BAPTIST, issue of June 3, with the title "The Great Fundamental."

"When we understand that the Lordship of Christ is fundamental and cannot be ignored, we find ourselves together until we talk ourselves down and out. The wonder of the world is our unity. Everybody is to strive to magnify those things that make for vital unity in the Kingdom of God. 'Stand fast, brethren, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free' is a wonderful word."—Geo. W. Truett.

What a wonderful world this would be if all of us could see and think alike! But, it is not necessary that this be in order to have a wonderful world. There can be unity in diversity; there can be cooperation even though there is difference of theological opinion, if love is the binding factor.

3. Ours a freedom for something. From the point of view of our citizenship, we have a great obligation to our country and to the outside world, for our citizenship reaches beyond our own borders. From the point of view of our citizenship in the commonwealth of God we have every reason to thank God and take courage. We must go right along exercising the larger freedom which has come to us through the truth. This exercise will lift us out of our selfishness, indifference, neglect, prejudice, controversies and non-cooperation into large achievements for Jesus Christ who hath made us free.

Young People's Reading Course

By M. M. McGOBRILL

Have your society members enrolled in the Reading Course? If you would have them improve as society members and as Christians, you will promote this good reading among them. Have a reading club. Divide the young people into groups and have the groups compete with one another in reading. Have reports on the books read at the devotional meetings. Make the promotion of the Reading Course a part of this work of your education committee. The following is the outline. Leaflets may be obtained from Young People's Division of the American Baptist Publication Society.

1. "Our B. Y. P. U.," by White, 75 cents, or "Baptist Young People at Work," by Detweiler, 75 cents, or "Expert Endeavor," by Wells.
2. "The School of the Church," by Chalmers, 25 cents.
3. "Training the Devotional Life," by Weigle, 25 cents.
4. One current mission study book, either home or foreign (title to be announced), included in plans for missionary education of Department of Missionary Education.
5. "The New Christian," by Cushman, 50 cents, or "The Withered Fig Tree," by Poteat, $1.00 (Stewardship studies).

There are ten units in the reading course. The five listed above are required. The other five may be selected from the following list of books:

- "The Meaning of Prayer," by Fosdick, $1.15.
- "You and Your Church," by Kirtley, $1.25.
- "Baptist History," by Vedder, 50 cents.

"Baptist Principles," by Jones, 70 cents.
 "The Life of Christ," by Barclay, 25 cents.
 "How to Conduct a Church Vacation School," by Gage, $1.50.
 "Recreation and the Church," by Gates, $1.25.
 "Week-day Church School," by Squires, $1.25.
 "Story-Telling Lessons," by Tralle, 75 cents.
 "Community Forces for Religious Education," by Fiske, 60 cents.
 "How We Got Our Bible," by Smith, $1.00.
 "Vocations Within the Church," by Crawford, $1.25, or "Religious Vocations," by Lowe, $1.25.
 "The Meaning of Service," by Fosdick, $1.25.
 "Dramatization of Bible Stories," by Miller, $1.25.
 One current mission study book, either home or foreign (title to be announced), included in plans for missionary education of Department of Missionary Education.
 "The Highway to Leadership," by Slatery, $1.50.
 "The Social Task of Christianity," by Batten, $1.00.
 "The Mission Study Class Leader," by Saller, 60 cents.
 "Graded Missionary Education in the Church School," by Beard, 75 cents.

Conditions

The course is aimed to cover a year of reading. It is conducted as follows: Upon enrolment with the director of young people's work, 1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, the applicant will receive a certificate of enrolment bearing the numbers 1 to 10. As each book of the ten is read the individual will report to headquarters and receive for each unit a seal to be placed on the card over the proper figure. On completion of the ten units the individual will send the enrolment certificate to headquarters and receive in return a young people's reading course certificate. No examinations are given on the units. No fees are required in this course.

Tacoma—Alive

B. Y. P. U. things are not at all dead or decadent out Puget Sound way—at least not in Tacoma! Tacoma has a live-wire district organization! Recently the following new officers took up the work and are valiantly "carrying on"—Pres., Victor Nyland; vice-pres., Maretta Cook; secy., Ruth Moore; treas., Walter Dinger.

Once a month, on the first Tuesday, fifty or sixty gather for an executive board meeting. Supper is eaten together first, the meeting follows. The program is usually in three parts—devotional, business, and discussion.

As the watchword of the district is "Help," the officers try to make the board meetings as helpful as possible, suggestive in every detail.

Ever try this plan? Try it! It works!

What Shall We Do?

The following "ice-breakers" are taken from Miss Edna Geister's "It Is to Laugh," published by Geo. W. Doran Co.

STEPPING STONES

Two couples compete against each other. The man of each couple is given two folded newspapers, one for each hand. At the signal for starting he quickly puts one of the papers down and the lady steps on it with her right foot. He then puts down the other paper a little distance ahead, and she steps on it with her left foot. He puts the first paper as far forward as he thinks she can step, and she puts her right foot on it. Then the left, the right, etc., etc., the object being to reach the goal, some thirty feet away, before the other couple can reach it, the only rule being that the lady must walk on newspapers only, which her partner places for her.

Said partners are always too ambitious in setting out the papers, and it takes considerable stepping to bridge the gaps.

CHINESE SPELLDOWN

The idea is like that of a regular spelling-match with two sides competing, except that words must be spelled backwards. The time given each person to reverse his spelling and think the word backwards is decidedly limited, according to the leader, who makes a pretense of timing each one. Instead of discarding those whose tongues and brains could not reverse, a score is kept of each error, and the score announced as each new word is given out. This will create a healthy competition, and if the leader will hint that the winning side will be favored at refreshment time, such a hint usually acts as a powerful mental stimulant.

The time limit is left to the leader who tries within a reasonable time to run up a tie score, when, of course, interest is at its highest point. Then the announcement that the next point is the deciding one naturally creates a real tension which is hardly relieved when the leader announces the word "Hippopotamus!"

Redlands

During the spring vacation of the present year the men's glee club made a tour through the San Joaquin Valley, singing at the various high schools and in churches. The women's glee club toured Southern California, going as far south as National City and San Diego. A debating team of four men went as far east as Minnesota and Iowa. They received the decisions of six of the nine judges before whom they debated, and participated in one open forum debate. One of the men took third place in the intercollegiate oratorical contest at Indianola, Iowa, with representatives from seventeen colleges competing. Redlands has a reputation for clean athletics, and has won her share of the victories in football, basketball, track and baseball in the Southern California Conference, which comprises six colleges. The Young Men's Christian Association and the Young Women's Christian Association are active organizations and minister in most helpful fashion to the college life. There are in the college sixteen young men who are studying with the ministry in view as their life's work. In addition to these, nineteen young people—men and women—are planning distinctively Christian service. Most of these are student volunteers.

A Tribal Gathering

We take great pleasure in presenting this week a cut of the Michigan S. S. and B. Y. P. U. Convention. Morgan Williams deserves great credit for this his first convention as director of religious education for the state.

The Chimney Corner

Lifting Up the Gates for Delegates

(To let the King of Glory in.)

IF there is no vision the people perish; and one of the simplest ways for any church to catch a vision is to send a delegate to a summer conference. People in a rut are the most contented of mortals—have you a woman's society in your church, unchanged from year to year? A World Wide Guild Chapter? A Children's World Crusade? Or are you without these adjuncts necessary to the vitality of a church? Have you girls and children clamoring for these delightful societies but nobody who feels adequate for leading? Or have you somebody who is trying to lead but cannot win the interest of the members? The place to train new leaders, and to keep those already in office keyed to still higher achievements, is at the nearest summer conference, the dates of which are given elsewhere on this page. There are at least six gates to be lifted.

I. DELEGATE.

A delegate is "someone chosen to be a representative." NOT, therefore, just anybody at all who might enjoy a week's outing! Once upon a time we met a small child who said: "My sister's gone to Northfield as a delegate!" And a truer word was never said, for that sister of hers was so far from strong that the ladies of the church thought it would be kindness to send her as their delegate to the missionary conference amid the beauties of Northfield. But it was a curious kindness and a perfect waste of money, for it was a foregone conclusion before she went that she would never be able to do any church work on her return, and with three or four classes a day at Northfield, and several auditorium meetings besides, their "delicate" came home more delicate than ever!

Delegates, therefore, should be the most likely material available; and if they cannot pay their own way, surely their expenses have a legitimate place in the annual budget of the church they represent, since the inspiration they will convert into action will lead to a more efficient and consecrated carrying out of the church program.

II. CONGREGATE.

Multiply the solitary delegate representing your society by a hundred other delegates equally eager to learn, and you have created an atmosphere of itself which can make the desert blossom like a rose. Nothing is so contagious as interest! There have been young girls sent to conferences who went for the fun of the outing; who vowed to themselves to cut every class; who steered clear of services for the first few days; Then somehow, somewhere, something got them! And they returned on fire with enthusiasm. Your delegate will talk things over with other delegates; they will "swap" ideas; they will study together; eat together; play together; pray together. That clever little slogan "together to-get-her," is nowhere truer than at a mission conference where all sides of life are emphasized.

III. SUBJUGATE.

"First things first" is the ideal which people bring home from conferences; "let the King of Glory in," the keynote of their entire experience. It is worth all the carfare and the registration fee to bring back to your church a woman or a girl who can see the work of the church through new eyes and with a new motive.

IV. PROPAGATE.

Sowing seeds is largely a matter of method; and a conference specializes in best methods for doing all the things that need to be done. It is in these classes that the delegates' fat notebooks get filled with new ideas: "That's the very thing for my girls!" you hear on all sides; "why did I never think of that before?" How to build a program; how to make it linger in the memory; how to make a dull meeting fascinating, how to get members to love to attend; how to get every one eager to help; how, why, and when to raise money; how to make posters; how to give notices; how this and how that! Problems are wiped away, and dozens of new ideas gained.

V. INVESTIGATE.

If the devotional side and the practical side of a summer conference were all, they would be enough to set many a society back home on its feet; but there are always the missionary speakers straight from the scenes of their labors with their stories that make the mission study books live before you.

"I shall never forget that little gray lady," a girl said to another girl as they left an auditorium meeting, "I thought I'd be bored when she stood up there, so little and frail and worn, but mercy on us, the things she's done! And the calm way she takes her work for granted, quite as if it were perfectly natural to do the jobs of four persons alone in that hot little oriental town. It makes me wish I could go right over and help!" "Let's read up those chapters she mentioned before tomorrow's class. I'm wondering if we shouldn't buy several of those books to take home, Elsie!" There you have the spirit of the conferences in a nutshell: "Let's read up," "let's follow up," the clues having been given—investigate.

VI. MITIGATE.

"I wish there was something I could do to help," is another gate opened wide at conference time. The world is sick—you learn the value of bandages, absorbent cotton, etc., sent to busy medical missionaries; the world is Christless—you learn the value of colored Sunday-school cards and scrolls to the evangelistic missionary; the world is ignorant—you learn the value of pencils, erasers, pads, needles, scissors, thimbles in the hands of the teacher-missionary; the world is toyless—you learn the value of dolls and games and little gifts when used by any of our missionaries. "White Cross Work" we Baptists call it. But there are deeper ways of mitigating, and the power of knowledge, the power of stewardship, the power of prayer are all learned at summer conferences, so that the smallest church may become a great blessing in its community and throughout the world because of one delegate whose eyes were opened to service that counts.

Missionary Conference Dates

Winona Lake, Ind., June 21-28.
Chambersburg, Pa., June 28-July 6.
Lake Geneva, Wis., July 3-10.
East Northfield, Mass., (Home) July 5-12; (Foreign) July 12-20.
Mt. Hermon, Calif., July 8-16.
Silver Bay, N. Y., July 7-17.
Asilomar, Calif., July 11-21.
Ocean Park, Me., July 19-29.
Seabeck, Wash., July 26-Aug. 4.
Lake Geneva, Wis., July 28-Aug. 7.
Chautauqua, N. Y., Aug. 12-18.

Since starting this article a letter has come from Miss Elizabeth Sargent (101 Center St., Concord, New Hampshire) who is to be leader of "Camp Salaam" for Baptist girls at the Northfield foreign conference this summer, July 12-20. Her clever tent-shape folder is so typical of the good things in store for Baptist girls at all these other conferences, that we pass on the attractions there in order that every church may arrange at once to send a delegate somewhere.

Those who have read "Under Many Flags," will recall that Miss Jennie Crawford is the heroine of one of the chapters; she is home on furlough from our Baptist hospital in Suifu, China, AND she is to be camp nurse for the Baptist girls in Camp Salaam! Both Mrs.

W. L. Elmore and Miss Alma Noble, beloved of Baptists, are to be there, also Komoriya San of Japan, now a student at Denison University. With sports, hikes, pageants, picnics and fun every afternoon, the mornings of study classes and methods will seem very short, and the wonderful evenings on Round Top and in the auditorium will complete days so inspiring that the gates of delegates will indeed be lifted up! Not a moment should be lost in registering at once.

More Crusader Games

A WEEK or so ago we promised to give some more Crusader games which would make the new mission study-books seem familiar to us next fall, provided we play these games this summer. Here are some new ones for you to try on your friends. It is too bad to have to give the answers, too; but try putting your finger over the answers so that you can guess everything first yourself!

India Riddles

(These are all names of cities in India; they may be used equally well as charades, acting out the various syllables for others to guess.)

1. My first is a nickname for Helen; my second is a word meaning mineral; my whole is a city where Baptists have a very important high school and hospital in South India. (Nellore.)

2. My first means angry; my second has the first three letters of a certain luscious red berry; my whole is a big city where the only woman's Christian college in South India is located? (Madras.)

3. My first is almost a call; my second is what a knife does; my third is a shorter way of saying "one." My whole is where William Carey spent much of his time in North India. (Calcutta.)

4. My first is thrown in war-time; my second is a body of water; my whole is an important business city of India. (Bombay.)

5. My first means "next to the first;" my second means a certain space of time; my third means wicked. My whole is a town where Baptists have a boarding-school. (Secunderabad.)

6. My first says "tinkle-tinkle;" my second is an indefinite article of speech; my third is a diseased spot on the body; my whole is a city in North India where Baptists work. (Bellalore.)

7. My first is the opposite of underneath; my second is the end of a race; my whole is the city where the Clough Memorial Hospital is located in South India. (Ongole.)

8. My first means in between; my second means a little sleep; my third means mineral; my whole is a city where Baptists work in North India. (Midnapore.)

9. My first is something people connect with a four-leaf clover; my second means this present time; my whole is the city where the Isabella Thoburn College is located in North India. (Lucknow.)

10. My first is an abbreviation of a boy's name; my second is a part of the verb "to be" in the present tense plural; my third means rest; my whole is a sacred city on the Ganges River. (Benare-ease, Benares.)

11. My first is the familiar title of the jolly old red-robed fellow who comes down the chimney Christmas night in America; my second is the minute mouth of our skin cells; my whole is a town in Bengal Orissa where Baptists work. (Santipore.)

First Aid to India

When a lot of your friends are together choose equal sides and have them sit in two rows on the floor facing one another. The two end players from each side get up and become "doctors." Each should have a good-sized pill bottle full of candy pills, also a pill-box full of gummed labels cut into small strips. Each doctor now goes down his own row giving first aid to the poor patients in turn by (1) uncorking the bottle, (2) jiggling out one candy pill on patient's palm, (3) corking bottle, (4) pasting gummed strip on patient's finger. The "doctor" who rushes through this clinic first has the right to sit down with his side, of course; but the losing "doctor" drops out of the game. Two more end players now become "doctors," etc., until one side is completely wiped out. I think this game will surely show you the endless rush, rush, rush, of our medical missionaries in India who are kept busy from morning till night healing India's sick.

A Pill in Time Saves Nine

Another game which will remind you of some of the people in India who need Baptist pills right away may be played with nine white shoe boxes in a row. Pretend these are hospital beds, of course, and fasten the lids upright for a head-board at one end of the box. On this head-board of each bed a different jingle should be written:—

1. The little brown wife can easily be won

By means of a pill—'twill count you ONE.

2. If the sad child widow appeals to you

A pill for her will count you TWO.

3. He broke his arm by climbing a tree,

A pill for this coolie will count you THREE.

4. Polluted well water granny did pour

Down her throat—a pill counts FOUR.

5. Wee new baby, barely alive—

A pill for her will count you FIVE.

6. The castes and the outcasts never mix,

So a pill for this outcast will count you SIX.

7. The little blind boy looks, unseeing, at heaven;

A pill for him will count you SEVEN.

8. Ah me, ah me, too late, too late!

A pill for this cripple will count you EIGHT.

9. This convalescent is feeling so fine;

A pill for her will count you NINE.

Each player is given nine "pills" and standing six feet away from the little box beds aims to throw these pills inside the boxes, adding up the score at the end of the nine throws, of course, since the player with the highest score wins. The "pills" may be little pebbles, or bean bags, or beans,—anything that will throw!

India Arithmetic for Baptist Children

PROBLEM I. Take the number of Christ's disciples and multiply by the number "added to the church on the day of Pentecost" (see Acts 2:3); multiply that result by the number of books in the Bible; multiply next by the number of Marys at the Savior's tomb (see Matthew 28:61); subtract 187,510; subtract the number of times Christ told us to forgive our brother who sins against us (see Matthew 18:22); multiply by the number of chapters in the first book of Timothy. The answer will be the number of Telugu people in South India whom Baptists are to convert to Christianity. (6,000,000.)

PROBLEM II. Take the number of elders mentioned in Revelation 19:4, adding the number of beasts mentioned in the same verse, multiply by the number of commandments Moses brought down from the mountain on tables of stone; multiply by the number of the Beatitudes (see Matt. 5:3-11); multiply by the number of times the children of Israel walked around the walls of Jericho (see Joshua 6:15); multiply by the number of loaves in the little boy's lunch basket (see John 6:9); subtract 13,200 and you will have as an answer the Telugus already converted in our Baptist mission in South India. (75,000.)

PROBLEM III. Take the number of stars mentioned in Revelation 1:20 and add to them the number of candlesticks mentioned also; subtract the number of the tribes of the children of Israel; add the number of lepers who came to Jesus to be healed (see Luke 17:12-17); subtract the number who did not come back to say "Thank You" (see verse 17); multiply by the number of types of diseases which Jesus cured in Matthew 16:30-31; subtract the number of bearers who carried the man sick of the palsy (see Mark 2:3-5); subtract the number of hands which Jesus cured in Mark 3:1-5. The answer will be the number of Baptist hospitals in North and South India. (7.)

Commencement Festivities in Higher Schools of Learning

Crozer Theological Seminary

By FRANK G. LEWIS

Crozer celebrated its fifty-fourth anniversary June 4-6. On Sunday morning the baccalaureate sermon was preached in the Upland Baptist Church by the Rev. C. L. Williams, of the class of 1884, Granville, Ohio, "Keeping the Faith," was his topic.

On Sunday evening Rev. P. J. McLean, of the class of 1900, pastor for eighteen years at Aiken, S. C., preached before a large congregation in the First Church, Chester, presenting the challenge placed before Christians in the words of Jesus recorded in Matt. 16:24.

The Philadelphia conference of Baptist ministers held its meeting of June 5 in Commencement Hall and listened to an address of unusual interest by Prof. J. R. Long, dean of the Law School of Washington and Lee University. His topic was "Is There Need for Baptists?" This timely question combined with the fact that Dean Long is a son of the late professor of church history in Crozer Seminary, Joseph C. Long, made the presentation of rare interest to all friends of the seminary.

On the afternoon of June 5, occurred the annual meeting of the board of trustees. In addition to the usual business they were asked to consider a communication signed by about twenty-five petitioners, their response being that of the Minute printed in THE BAPTIST of June 17.

New Officers

A large number of alumni were present for the class reunions, in the afternoon, for the business meeting at 4:00 P.M., and the banquet in the evening. The officers of the Alumni Society for the coming year are: Rev. Charles E. Goodall, pres.; Rev. George S. Swift, first vice-pres.; Rev. Paul F. Langhorne, second vice-pres.; Rev. Charles A. Walker, sec.-treas.; Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, assistant sec.-treas. The oration was delivered by Rev. Charles N. Arbuckle, whose theme was "Through Human Nature to God," with special emphasis upon the meaning of religious psychology and the importance of religious education. The orator selected for 1923 is Rev. James M. Stiffler.

On Tuesday morning a large audience assembled for the graduating exercises and to listen to Dr. William W. Keen, the distinguished Baptist and surgeon of international repute, who, though eighty-five years of age, presented with the vigor of youth an address on "Science and the Scriptures."

President Evans in behalf of the trustees conferred the degree of Bachelor of Divinity upon the following: Roland J. Benzley, Upper Zion, Va.; Albert C. Cheetam, Baltimore Md.; Raymond J. Cornish, Carbondale, Pa.; Harold D. Germer, Harrisburg, Pa.; John F. Stimson, Lenoir, N. C.; James A. Ward, Elizabeth City, N. C.; Wayland Zwyer, Ridley Park, Pa., and Marshall O. Carpenter, of Atlanta, Ga., a member of the class of 1899. Diplomas of the seminary were awarded to Joseph Bolognese, Philadelphia; George C. Cooley, Plainfield, Mass.; Hammond S. Crossan, Marshalltown, Del.; Ellwood M. Kranz, Baltimore, Md.; Darlington R.

Kulp, Lewistown, Pa.; Edro L. Larson, Richmond, Va.; John A. Rodgers, Lincoln, Neb.; Willard E. Thompson, Baltimore, Md. The degree of Master of Theology was conferred upon Rev. Arnold E. Look, of the class of 1920, pastor of Hebron Baptist Church, Philadelphia, and instructor in elementary Greek in the seminary.

The entire occasion showed that the alumni and other friends of Crozer Seminary are filled with an unusual spirit of loyalty and enthusiasm.

were started for the purpose of educating young men for the Christian ministry. As the years have gone on, their mission has expanded, so that both men and women are trained among us for various callings and pursuits. In the academy for boys, the seminary for girls, and the college for both, we now have upwards of a thousand students. When the writer graduated, forty-one years ago, the number in the college was only sixty.

The baccalaureate sermon was this year preached by Dr. C. A. Barbour, of Rochester Theological Seminary. He spoke from the words, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, to you have I given it," this theme being "The Process of Possession."

Friends of the institutions were gathered from all parts of these Provinces, so that both morning and evening the speakers had great audiences. The evening speaker was Dr. Herbert Johnson, of Boston, who a few weeks before delivered a series of addresses to our students, resulting in upward of fifty young people making public profession of faith in Christ. Dr. Johnson spoke on "The One Thing Needful," and spoke with his customary vigor and persuasiveness.

The message at the academy closing on Monday evening was delivered by a legal gentleman from Montreal, Mr. Howard Ross, K. C. To the seminary graduates on Tuesday evening the principal, Dr. De Wolfe, was the speaker. On Wednesday, when the weather was superb, as it was indeed on all the days of this commencement week, fifty-three young men and women received the B. A. degree. This was the largest class the college ever graduated. President Cutten's closing words to the graduates sounded a note which our succession of presidents has never failed to make emphatic that is, that while Acadia seeks to promote the cause of sound learning in the various departments of her instruction, she aims above all, and as the outcome of all efforts, to produce men and women of excellent Christian character, bent upon rendering highest service in their day and generation. This is her warrant for existence.

Degrees Conferred

More than the usual number of honorary degrees were conferred. Rev. S. S. Poole, of Germain Street Baptist Church, St. John, N. B., Rev. C. W. Rose, of the Baptist Church of Amherst, N. S., and Rev. E. H. Ramsay, of the First Presbyterian Church of New Glasgow, N. S. received the degree of Doctor of Divinity. To three graduates of former years, Judge Rogers, of Halifax, Hon. N. E. Rhodes, of Ottawa, and Howard Ross, of Montreal, came the degree of Doctor of Civil Laws. To a literary man well known among us was given the degree of Doctor of Letters, J. D. Logan of Halifax.

At present Acadia appears to be at a somewhat critical point in her history. Dr. Cutten, after twelve and a half years as efficient president has accepted the presidency of Colgate University, and his work here will close with the end of July. Our educational institutions have greatly advanced under his leadership, and never since he came has his continuance with us seemed more necessary than just now.

For one thing we were robbed of our main building a year and a half ago by fire, so that that needs to be made good as soon as possible to remove recent inconveniences. And more than that, the matter of university amalgamation is now having the attention of all interested in the cause of higher education in this quarter. It is proposed to have at Halifax our central university for the Maritime Provinces, instead of the separate denominational colleges as at present constituted. The Carnegie corporation is prepared to aid liberally in the carrying out of such a consolidated scheme. This is not the first time that a central university has been discussed among us. Whether the offer of the Carnegie people, at a juncture when our colleges are pretty generally feeling the need of increased funds, is this time to issue in something different remains to be seen. Some of the colleges are eager for the union, while others have not committed themselves. The question is having the best attention of Acadia's governing board, and it will be brought before the Maritime Baptist Convention in its sessions during the coming August. Because Dr. Cutten is so familiar with our past and present conditions it seems most inopportune that he is about to leave us, and that a new year must begin with such grave problems. However, those who have lived for a good while know well that many a cause whose success appeared to require the controlling hand of a particular person has gone successfully forward under new management. The Lord sees to it that a Joshua is ready to carry onward the work of a Moses. We heartily wish our honored Dr. Cutten the greatest success at Colgate while we as heartily wish his successor at Acadia, whoever he is to be, the foresight and wisdom which the educational crisis here demands.

Commencement at Newton

By WOODMAN BRADBURY

The Baccalaureate Sermon by the President on June 4 marked the opening of commencement. Dr. Horr took his text from Isa. 55:2, 3, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread..... Come unto me and your soul shall live." Monday was Alumni Day and the orator was Dr. C. L. White, class of 1890, general secretary of the Home Mission Society. The Baptist Ministers' Conference of Boston were guests. Dr. White's subject, "Forward with Christ," gave him opportunity to review the signal signs of Christ present in the last century and to express faith in the future.

Dr. Arthur E. Harriman, '95, presided at the alumni luncheon, with dignity and modesty. President Horr received a spontaneous ovation. His ideal for Newton is to send out men fully equipped for the complex, arduous and delicate tasks of the day. Sylvester Burnham, spoke of fifty years of a satisfying life in pastorate and professorship. Dr. Henry B. Williams, '97 made a witty speech and was followed by A. T. Kempton, '95, who spoke of the contribution of Acadia. The program closed with two pungent addresses by younger alumni, F. M. Swaffield, '12, and T. S. Roy, '15, whose loyalty to Newton and faith in Christ were inspiring.

At the Social Union, Mr. Morton Scott Enslin, speaking for the graduating class, told of the confidence in the work and love for it that had been gained on "the hill." Everett A. Greene, treasurer of the seminary, voiced the loyalty of the trustees and called for vision, enthusiasm and co-operation. President Faunce, of Brown, and President Murlin, of Boston, brought words of fraternal faith.

The chief speaker of the occasion was Dr. H. E. Fosdick, who spoke eloquently on "The Necessity of Educating the Church."

Tuesday, June 6, was Commencement Day, marked by the commencement oration by Dr. Willard L. Sperry, Professor of Homiletics at Andover, the business meetings of the trustees and the Alumni Association, the graduation exercises, and the trustees' dinner.

Dr. Sperry gave a noble address on "The Mind of Christ and the Tempers of Science." The alumni elected Prof. Sylvester Burnham '72, president and N. A. Merritt, Jr., 1900, vice-president, retaining Drs. Donovan and Merriam as secretary and treasurer. The orator next year is to be Dr. Joseph C. Robbins, '02, with Pres. Clifton D. Gray, as alternate. The necrologist, M. F. Johnson, '79, gave one of his characteristic reports, a rare blend of calm judgment, admiration and fraternal affection. Fourteen men have passed to their reward, among them D. A. W. Smith, the distinguished missionary.

*If only myself could talk to myself
As I knew him a year ago,
I could tell him a lot
That would save him a lot,
Of things he ought to know.*

—Kipling.

son of the author of "America." Their average age was over seventy-seven years.

The commencement speakers were Morton Scott Enslin, Edward Andrew Estaver, San Ba, Leopold R. Hass, and Herbert Lee Newman. Professor Woodman Bradbury gave the address to the graduates. Eleven men were graduated.

The trustees dinner was the usual festive close of the series of meetings. Albert L. Scott, chairman of the trustees, introduced the speakers with appropriate wit. Pres. Horr said that the graduating class had made a present of a valuable photograph to the seminary. The alumni have contributed over $17,000 in the last few years. The department for women opens auspiciously. S. M. Lindsay, '13, predicts a revival of religion, and Geo. F. Finnie, '16, commends the liberalism of the British Baptists. Dr. Hugh A. Heath, warmly welcomed as again at work in Massachusetts, asked, "How can a church progress without trained leadership?" Dr. Charles L. White closed the speaking with earnest words.

Those who led in prayer or otherwise assisted in creating a spiritual atmosphere were President Lent, J. C. Robbins, J. C. Massee, F. L. Anderson, T. D. Anderson, F. M. Holt, J. M. English and James A. Norcross. The John M. English Lectureship is now a fact, for the alumni have raised their gift of ten thousand dollars. The news brought great joy to all. The lectureship will be administered by the president, the professor of homiletics, and one of the alumni; and the first incumbent will be the distinguished preacher and educator whose name it bears.

Franklin College

By R. H. KENT

The commencement at Franklin College was a series of events of more than usual interest. On Sunday morning, June 4, the missionary sermon was delivered by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, of Rochester, N. Y. With quiet, intelligent, sympathetic manner she brought the challenge of the missionary ideal to our student generation. In the evening the baccalaureate sermon was preached by Rev. Bernard C. Clausen of Syracuse, N. Y. The subject was "Religion at Twenty-One." The commencement address was made by Raymond Robbins, of Chicago, who spoke on "The Outlawry of War." The college dinner in the gymnasium at one o'clock was followed by a series of addresses by Raymond Robbins, Dr. George W. Coleman, Mrs. Montgomery and Rev. H. N. Spears of Bluffton.

During his annual address President C. E. Goodell remarked, "It is time for us to realize that the Greater Franklin is not something in the distant future that we can hardly yet discern. It is already here." This statement is well borne out by the statistics set forth in the address. During the past five years numbers of students and teaching staff have been doubled. The yearly income has been increased from $63,000 to more than $120,000, the permanent endowment has been increased from $364,000 to more than $668,000. The salaries of teachers in the same time have been raised 100 per cent.

Degrees were conferred upon forty-one graduates. The honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters was conferred upon Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, President of the Northern Baptist Convention; Doctor of Laws upon George William Coleman, President of Babson Institute, Wellesley Hall, Mass.; Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. Horace N. Spear, President of the Indiana Baptist Convention.

Mount Hermon Federate School of Missions

The Federate School of Missions, in which the Baptists are affiliated, will meet at Mount Hermon, in the Santa Cruz mountains, California, July 8-15. Text-books used will be Fleming's "Building with India," and Haynes, "The Trend of the Races." The former will be taught by Prof. C. C. McCown, of the Pacific School of Religion, who spent fourteen years in India. The home book concerning the Negroes will be taught by Mrs. Moffett Rhodes, who was sixteen years in the south, having been an educator there. Daily morning Bible period by Rev. C. O. Kimball.

On Sunday afternoon, July 9, Dr. McCown will lecture on his recent visit to Jerusalem.

On Thursday evening, July 13, Dr. John Snape, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Oakland, Cal., will give an address.

On other evenings the speakers will be Rev. Clarence O. Kimball, Dr. Herman F. Swartz, president of the Pacific School of Religion; Tully C. Knowles, president of the College of the Pacific, who was at Washington during the peace conference and will lecture on "World Peace and the Washington Conference"; Rev. H. H. Guy, formerly of Japan. The separate "Rallies" of the different denominations will be held on Thursday afternoon, July 13. Daily afternoon young people's and children's hours. The "Wright Bill" will be discussed Monday at 10 A.M. This bill is of importance toward helping California get right on the liquor question. Baptist women on the International Committee of the Mt. Hermon Federate School are Mrs. R. E. Beach, Mrs. J. M. Davis, Mrs. M. E. Fox, Mrs. H. A. Johnson, Mrs. John Snape.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE TRUE BAPTISTS

Here is a little yellow pamphlet with a long name: "The Age of Inquiry; or Reason and Revelation in Harmony with Each Other; operating against all Tyranny and Infidelity; intended as a clue to the present political controversy in the United States. By a True Baptist."

Printed in Hartford. Ah! Lots of "true Baptists" in Hartford. Which one? But wait! Let us see the date. 1804! Does that alter the complexion? Are reason and revelation operating in this year of grace, 118 years since that pamphlet came from the press? How about tyranny and infidelity? We have all those things in evidence still, and so, as likely as not, we may get from the pamphlet some points that will be instructive just now. Let us see how it reads. Here, for instance, this "true Baptist" tells us what the "constitution" of the "true Baptists" was in his day (and is now?):

"The source of religious liberty—the real friend of religious liberty—approves the first principles of the American revolution, constitution, and government—and all measures of administration that are founded on them; and earnestly prays for the bestowment of these blessings on all mankind—makes allowance, however, for common mistakes—is highly suspicious of federalism—having stood in front of the battle against enemies of civil and religious liberty for ages, is enabled by experience to penetrate into its dark designs—to detect its duplicity—to determine on which side of the question it stands—has on account of such things been persecuted, more than any other system of religion whatever—but never been a persecutor, notwithstanding all the endeavors of its enemies to prove it."

How is that for the categorical?

"To most of you who live in New England I know what your difficulties are," proceeds the pamphlet. "The fetters of the state religion were put upon you in your infancy, when you could not help yourselves by word or deed; and during your minority you were partly holden to it in your father's names. And lest, after all, you should hobble away, political fetters were clapt on at twenty-one. Thus fettered on both sides, you can go neither backwards or forwards from that religion, but must support it according to law, unless you have a grant from the law makers. And now your priests and politicians complain bitterly of us, for attempting to break these fetters; they are afraid if you get them off of one side, you will soon get them on the other."

That was in 1804, when Thomas Robbins said, "Baptists do considerable damage," and William Bentley wrote, "It is their rite that does it." "Yes," returned Elias

Smith, a Baptist leader, "those who are not Baptists are enemies of President Jefferson." "Let the Baptists adhere to the President," said the New Hampshire Gazette of August 24, 1804, answering an article in the Connecticut Courant, which had urged the Baptists to repent of their political errors. At that time, in New England at least, the vast majority of the ministers who were not Baptists or Methodists were federalists, and stout in denouncing the president and his alleged atheistic views. The Baptist ministers were just as heartfelt in this denunciation, but at the same time they were staunch republicans, and true Baptists, and as such opposed to that which was in discord with their "constitution," as given in the pamphlet.

In this later day there have not been wanting Baptists who could not see eye to eye with President Wilson or President Harding. But were the president to pronounce in favor of the continued exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, or to openly favor Mormonism, would the same attitude be observed? In 1804 all "true Baptists" were in favor of all that was agreeable to the constitution of the United States, political or religious, and made that their own "constitution." In 1922 are all Baptists intent to find out all that is discordant to the same fundamentals, and to testify thereto by word and deed?

DETROIT AS HEADQUARTERS

Speaking of "west of Buffalo" for our national headquarters, why not pick Detroit: straight "west of Buffalo" as the aeroplane flies, one of the most American cities in all America, where the cooperation of Protestant churches is on such a high level of effectiveness that even New York cannot get our federation secretary away from us, and where Baptists, with about seventy-five churches of all kinds, are going up into the promised land under the leadership of the greatest Baptist general now operating in any American city, Dr. H. C. Gleiss?

Yes, I might add: where the people are neither liberal nor pre-millennial, but Scriptural, spiritual, evangelistic, missionary, and work hard for the Kingdom in all the earth. Count on Detroit Baptists to support the big state, national, and world programs of God's people, without frills or useless language, but with deed.

Oh, by the way, we have just passed the million mark in population, having annexed a suburb after Uncle Sam told us we had about 996,000. But the real thing is that we always put plenty of ciphers after the figures when we are talking Baptist affairs.

THE TEST OF PROTESTANTISM

"This then is the true test of Protestantism; not adherence to a creed, which necessarily shares the imperfection of all human things, but possession of a spirit; and in the possession of this spirit lies the hope of the Protestant churches in every field of their activity, whether it be criticism, preaching, evangelism, home or foreign missionary enterprise. Indeed in the possession of this spirit lies the hope of the world.

"A church which is not willing to welcome new facts, if they be facts; a church which is not able to respond to new truth, from whatever quarter it comes; a church which binds old forms of truth upon the consciences of men, or refuses to accommodate the truth which they embodied to contemporary modes of thought—such a church cannot call herself a Protestant church.

Every church, like every age, has to readjust itself to the truth. The truth itself does not change; but the form of it does. And if the form does not keep pace with the changing perception, due, among other things, to truer methods and advancing knowledge, then it becomes a form through which the spirit breathes no more. The form is stiff and the spirit is gone."

I came upon this fine piece of truly Christian teaching as far back as 1905—long before the discussion as to "Fundamentals" or "Evangelicals" arose in the Baptist fold.

Another writer of considerable repute states the case in equally trenchant form: "But our sufficiency is from God; who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant; not of the letter, but of the Spirit; for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

Rev. W. J. Sparks, who has been giving the last year to the special financing campaign of Brandon College, Canada, has met with unusual success, when the trying business conditions of the year are taken into consideration. A little more than a year ago the late William Davies of Toronto bequeathed the sum of $100,000 to Brandon College on condition that the friends of the college in Western Canada subscribe a similar amount within two years from the date of his death. A little more than a year has passed, and at the time of writing Mr. Sparks has secured over $80,000 of the $100,000 required to meet the conditions of Mr. Davies' will. The prospects are good that the whole sum will be secured within a few weeks.

Religious Education

An Egyptian Sunday School

At two o'clock the beating of the bell has the desired effect, and presently there rises up from the edge of the Nile a crowd of the dirtiest and yet the prettiest little boys and girls you ever saw. Nearly every little girl carries, perched on her shoulder, a baby brother or sister. They rush without ceremony into the compound, but there they are made to walk quietly and orderly into the classes provided for them.

A kind Syrian nurse from the hospital takes her place in a class of some thirty or forty girls, and, if only you could peep behind the scenes, you would hear such sad stories connected with the lives of several of her girls. Some have been married and cast aside by their husbands for some trivial fault, and then how glad they are once more to find their way back to school, where they know they are loved and cared for.

A blind girl sits among a class of the very naughtiest but sweetest little folk, who try her patience to the utmost. A kind missionary takes another class, and I am sure that, although she is accustomed to teaching all through the week, she has never taught such pieces of humanity as those before her. Still another class of mischievous little boys is taught by one of the day-school boys, who sometimes has to appeal to the superintendent to restore order.... Now the bell has to be beaten, gently too, and, after much noise, all shaggy heads are bent in prayer, then sentence by sentence, the Lord's Prayer is said, and a very elongated "Amen" comes in at the end. Now three rooms are occupied instead of one, for if all the classes were kept in one room the noise would be deafening. What are all those dirty little bags hung around the children's necks? Ah! those bags contain the most precious thing the children have, namely, an old Christmas card which serves as a register. If by some unfortunate chance that ticket gets lost, genuine tears form a streamlet down the troubled little face of the owner, for he or she knows it is just a mere chance if the superintendent will relent so far as to provide another.

These registers are marked and a tiny box handed around to receive many little widow's mites, for although the children are of the poorest, we try to teach them that it is more blessed to give than to receive. And now we are all in the room again, and a time is spent in catechising the whole school so as to make sure they have been listening to their lesson. The story had been told of the ten lepers, and the ingratitude of the nine, who went away without saying "thank you." Z, a very regular member, looked up with glowing eyes, and said, "I would very much like to say thank you to Jesus for all he has done for me, but I am afraid he would not care to bend his hand from heaven to let a little girl like me kiss it." Another little girl is all eagerness to speak. Her name means "Cast Out," and when her turn comes she says, "I love pickles, oh! so much, and when my mother said, 'Go to the market and bring back pickles in vinegar,' I used to dip my fingers into the vinegar all the way home,—they would creep into the basin in spite of myself,—but now since my teacher has told me it is like stealing, I try not even to look at the basin, but run all the way home with it to my mother."—From "Children of Egypt" by L. Crowther.

The Teacher as a Leader

The usual complaint of Sunday-school superintendents is that there is a shortage of teachers. Many consecrated Christian men and women and young people shrink from taking a class in the Sunday school regularly or as substitute teacher. The reason for this is seldom unwillingness to work—as is shown by the fact that they will engage in other lines of endeavor without a murmur. It is more often than not a sense of inability to teach others—a sense of humility, a feeling that it would be a presumption to set one's self above others, some of whom have no doubt been close students of the Bible.

The teacher who does not so much consider himself an expounder of truth as a leader who will get others to think and "speak up" in class will not feel this diffidence, for the reason that there is no possibility of any one feeling that he has "set himself up as knowing more than the others." No teacher should go before a class without having done his best to prepare his lesson, both in justice to himself, to the class and to the Word. But the idea of the teacher as an expounder has been largely replaced by the teacher as a leader in thought—he directs by skillful questioning and the members of the class talk. Once the members get into the habit of discussing questions in class, there is no likelihood of their coming unprepared. Watch any class that is an unusual success, both in the number attending and in the interest manifested. Is the teacher doing all the talking, or is he directing by possibly the merest word now and then, the discussion? And the teacher who is going to have a live class will also see to it that no one member of the class takes it upon himself to do most of the talking, even though it is necessary to limit the time which any one member shall speak upon any one question.

The teacher as a director of discussion rather than an expounder of the lesson does not mean that preparation is not needed—the closest preparation is necessary.

International Uniform Lesson for July 9

DANIEL INTERPRETING NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM
Lesson: Daniel 2. Golden Text: Revelation 11:15

Setting

It was in the reign of Jehoiakim, 606 B. C., during Nebuchadnezzar's first siege of Jerusalem, that the boy Daniel, with other Jewish captives, was taken to Babylon. Here he was educated, gained favor with Nebuchadnezzar, and was appointed governor of the province of Babylon. He prophesied during the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Darius the Mede, and Cyrus the Persian, under whose rule he died. The scene of today's lesson is the king's palace at Babylon on the banks of Euphrates at a time when the city was at the height of its glory. It is interesting to know that the foundations of the palace of Nebuchadnezzar have been unearthed, each brick being stamped with the king's name and title in cuneiform script.

Lesson

The state of Nebuchadnezzar's mind is one not unfamiliar to most people—he had waked depressed because of a bad dream, but was unable to remember the dream. So he called the wise men of his kingdom to tell him what he had dreamed, and they declared that he demanded the impossible. But, possible or impossible, he was king and if they could not meet his demand, they should be torn to pieces—a not uncommon Oriental barbarism at that period. Daniel and his three companions ranked with these disfavored wise men, but he secured a respite from the king, sought his companions and told them to pray that God would reveal the dream. In a vision that night the dream came to Daniel and he related it the next day before the king as a giant with head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, feet of iron and clay. Then a stone smote the feet of the image, breaking them to pieces, the shattered ruins becoming like chaff carried away before the wind, while the destructive stone became a mountain that filled the earth. The king recognized it as his dream and Daniel interpreted it as given in the special lesson text, verses 36 to 37. The stone filling the earth represents the Messianic kingdom, the first announcement of a "kingdom of heaven." "Then the king fell upon his face and worshipped Daniel, acknowledging that his God was in truth God of Gods.

Lesson Thoughts

1. The faith that does not fear to put God to the test never goes unrewarded.
2. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God"—James.
3. The strongest man becomes weak when he tries to work in his own strength alone; the weakest man strong when his sufficiency is of God.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

High Lights at Newton

One of the happy features of commencement time is the evident loyalty of Newton men. They believe in her and are grateful and delighted champions. Newton has no sons who, in a time of suspicion and attack, are using the strength that she and their position give them to strike their Alma Mater in the face. Some other seminaries have to confess their present stings from such blows. All through the anniversary, going along with the varied impressions received at public exercises and banquets, was the manifest delight in the seminary and pride to be counted among her sons.

Another high light was the remarkable address of Professor W. L. Sperry of Andover Theological Seminary on "The Mind of Christ and the Tempers of Science." Not often do we have an address that so completely meets the scholarly and spiritual expectation, and that so nobly maintains itself on highest levels. One full hour in which the great, deep things of God are being clarified and made gratefully inclusive, is more than welcome to thoughtful minds. Dr. Sperry gave us that hour.

Ocean Park and Newton

The Newton Seminary, the state director of religious education, and the First Church at Newton Center are in close and practical affiliation and cooperation in what must be called advanced Bible instruction. It is hazardous to use that word "advanced" nowadays, for some excitable guardian of the "holy" futile methods of Bible education which have turned out so much Bible ignorance, have all sorts of suspicious names for those who are insisting upon a sound pedagogy in teaching the best text-book. What Director Peterson, Doctor Arbuckle, Professor Berkeley and Superintendent Everett A. Greene are doing is simply advancing intelligently into the Bible with the children and young folks. Already the results are so tangible, and the eagerness of the young people is so encouraging, that a broadening and strengthening of the whole scheme is justified.

Ocean Park

The happy thought now is to harness the Newton end of the enterprise to the Ocean Park summer Conference of Methods which Dr. Peterson has developed so remarkably, and which has become so popular with our earnest Christian workers. The modern idea of saving the summer vacation from utter demoralization by boys' camps, and girls' "campfires," and Christian workers' conference, is the most unheretical "advance" that we know about. The old-fashioned vacation of unorganized, unbroken, and unredeemed loafing, caused most of us to lose respect for ourselves while it proceeded. Only the early homecoming, and the old tasks saved us.

Rest by entire change of tasks—new tasks that we all respect, not banishing the necessary summer frolic, but so mingled with them that both religion and relaxation find new knowledge, freshened social delight, and heightened pastime that carries the vacation into the new ennobled year-round obligation—that is the new program; and we could hardly have a better one.

The Newton Summer School

It is to be at Ocean Park from August 23 to September 1, and all the professors are on the large staff of teachers and lecturers. This itself shows how the Ocean Park conference has grown in the mind of Dean Peterson, and prompted the incorporation of a scholarly and authoritative element into the executive staff of the conference. Hundreds have already registered, giving promise of the biggest year in the history of the gathering.

A delightful feature at the Newton anniversary was the exhibit of the Newton Center Sunday School in the Library Building. Here the results of the now long-time clinical opportunities in Bible study under the direction of Pastor Arbuckle, Professor Berkeley and Superintendent Greene, were exhibited. The eager interest and painstaking of the pupils' work, showed keenly intelligent appreciation of methods of study that make the Bible so realistic. "The Church School Bulletin" just issued and the "Prospectus" of the Ocean Park Conference are both very informing. Write to Everett A. Greene, Newton Center, for the first, and to Dr. F. F. Peterson, Ford Building, for the second.

Indianapolis

At this writing the interest of big Boston dailies in Baptist doings is noteworthy. We are on the "first page" in scare headlines. Not, however, because of our really great achievements in the direction of a World Movement in missions and education. That should have brought fame to us from modern journalism, but it was too big for that, and too important. What is it then, that puts us on the first page under staring headlights? Simply this: the prospect of furnishing sensational journalism with a dramatic story of violent internal rupture. What seems unthinkable to the average Baptist, is to the big dailies a prospective "thriller." Already have they sent on their star correspondents to Indianapolis to "Write 'er up." May the Lord spare us the folly of delivering ourselves into their hands! Surely the denomination of our love, and of our fathers, is worthy of better things from us than that would be.

Summer Toggery

Boston already is arrayed in her vacation habiliments. Her old "points of interest" change not with the seasons, though some of the newer ones do. Standing in "The Cradle of Liberty" you can almost imagine Wendell Phillips rocking it. The little old State House huddled among the sky-scrapers brings back Sam Adams. He was the loftiest structure in liberty that had then been built. When you stand where the "Indians" threw overboard the tea, you are on pretty solid pavement now. The only vessels that get up that far are the vessels of wrath that venture in State Street once too often. The "Old South" in her almost lonely grandeur holds her own. Neither "movies" nor bulletin boards can stare her out of countenance. George W. Coleman's Old South Forum sometimes brings back her "war look," and again Joseph Warren is stepping through the window back of the platform to harangue the revolutionists packing the church to the walls. Boston's old things are doing pretty well, thank you. Her newer public garden and parkways have a sparkling prettiness; but for steady beauty that does not come off, try "Old Boston Common."

Abortive Diplomacy

One of the richest humors of the fundamental storm now passing over us, is the failure of the Southern Baptist Convention to key itself down to the action prepared for it by the busy North-by-South agitators. Their egg had been too confidently nested for hatching; but the convention, like the sympathetic elephant in the fable, fearing a fatal coolness might overtake it, just sat on it! Could there have been a more comical ending to a supposedly influential propaganda?

There was true Southern chivalry in thus ignoring the expectant propagandists, and making glad their brethren up here by a real and generous Baptist action. Of course under such bitter disappointment, it was not easy for the North-by-South agitators to keep their temper, but temper always is an undiplomatic confession. Too bad that the wastebasket failed to function on that rather tart editorial attacking the "Newton Protest and Appeal." But such lamentable lapses will happen even in the most "fundamental" sanctums.

Vermont Convention

By ELBERT J. SMITH

"Achieving the Impossible" was the rally-cry which brought together over 300 delegates to the ninety-eighth annual session of the Vermont State Convention, which met at Ludlow May 22-24. Every great department of denominational activities and the New World Program was represented by leaders and experts who filled the two and a half days' crowded program with encouragement, inspiration and cemented the conviction that as co-laborers with God the word "impossible" has no place either in the program or vocabulary of our great denomination.

The convention was honored in hearing Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Pres. of the N. B. C. Rev. W. H. Main brought two masterly addresses fraught with inspiration and imparted a new and stimulating vision of opportunity and responsibility. In his first address on "Our Great Inheritance" he visualized the richness of our heritage accumulated through the centuries. His second address, on "Stewardship," stressed life as "The trusteeship of all that God owns." Rev. Rolvix Harlan in both his addresses impressed his hearers as a man of vision and statesmanship. Miss Nan F. Weeks, set forth the essentials in a "Teacher's Preparedness." Robust and gripping, best describe the unique address given by Rev. H. E. Tralle as he spoke on the subject "Whence Geniuses." Miss Clara Converse, one of Vermont's daughters, missionary for more than thirty years in Japan, spoke with much encouragement of the Christian work in the Sun-rise Kingdom. Dr. Clara C. Leach brought a most vivid description of the manner in which the medical missionary is transforming the lives and hearts of our yellow brothers across the seas. Rev. C. T. Brownell of Brattleboro, sketched the achievements of the Baptists of the Green Mountain State during its history of more than a hundred years. Prof. Raymond McFarland, principal of Vermont Academy, brought a message in which he stressed LEADERSHIP as the primal need of a new world, indefinite, grouping and uncertain of the future.

Rev. W. A. Davison, for the twenty-third time submitted the report of the board of trustees. In many ways it was a remarkable report, full of achievement and hopeful forecasts. Among other facts the following were brought out. The permanent fund of the convention now stands at $457,120.23. The sum of $95,841.11 have been raised the past year for missionary and charitable objects. Vermont has paid 82 per cent of its New World Pledges in the face of industrial and economic depression. Baptisms have more than doubled over the previous year. Vermont Academy has had a most successful year after being closed for six years, showing enrolment of 132 with a teaching staff of fourteen headed by Prin. Raymond McFarland.

Two resolutions, among others, passed by the convention speak for themselves. Resolved, That we individually and as a convention express to our beloved leader and superintendent, Dr. W. A. Davison, our very deep gratitude and joy that in the face of tempting offers and much pressure to go to larger fields and at greatly increased remuneration, he has elected to remain with the Baptist work of the Green Mountain State, to which work he has contributed these many years, the zeal of his Christain manhood and the vision of constructive statesmanship. Appreciating as we do the spirit of sacrificial loyalty which prompted the decision we in our turn again pledge to him our fealty and whole hearted support.

Resolved, That we hereby heartily commend the board of trustees for their action in increasing by $1,000 the salary of our noble superintendent, not however that such increase discharges our debt to him, but gives further token of the esteem in which we hold him as friend and leader.

The officers elected are as follows: Pres., Wallace W. Nichols, Rutland; 1st vice-pres., Mrs. Nellie Fay Gould, Lyndon Centre; 2nd vice-pres., Arthur G. Crane, Burlington; clerk, Rev. E. J. Smith, Fair Haven; trustees with term expiring, 1925, Rev. J. S. Brown, Manchester; Mrs. Benj. Hinman, Newport; Hon. Henry Bond, Brattleboro; Arthur G. Crane, Burlington; Rev. J. G. Towart, Bennington; A. L. Maynard, Brattleboro; Rev. H. B. Rankin, Newport; Mrs. J. A. Greenwood, Chester; Mrs. Annie I. Batchelder, Barre. To fill the vacancy caused by the removal from the state by Rev. W. F. Wilson, Rev. W. J. Ford, Burlington.

At the closing session Wednesday evening, Dr. Lerrigo thrilled his audience with accounts of the marvelous achievement recorded during the past year. While he described the "veritable new Pentecost" which has swept over the lower Congo; many must have wondered if it might not happen that "the men of Ethiopia shall stand up in the judgment with this generation and condemn it."

Dr. Emory W. Hunt occupied the place of climax on the program. Speaking on the subject "Our Appraisal of the Kingdom" he gave to religion a place of unrivaled importance in the world, and spoke of it as the essential industry which must never be relinquished underwritten by the unlimited resources of the Divine.

During the closing moments Dr. Davison led the convention again over the spiritual mountain peaks and pleaded that what had been the slogan of the convention might be the aim of the Baptists of the state "achieving the impossible."

Dr. and Mrs. Fowler and their son Donald. Dr. Lawson is a member of the Hanson Place Church, and received the congratulations and greetings of many friends during his anniversary week. Dr. and Mrs. Fowler sail on the Aquitania, July 4, for Southampton. They will spend the summer in Great Britain. During July and August Dr. Fowler will preach in the Bloomsbury Church, London, and will also visit Cambridge, Oxford, Chelton, the Lake District and the Western Highlands of Scotland.

THE PRAYER MEETINGS since the coming to the Tabernacle Church, Utica, of the new pastor, Mr. Edward Bleakney, show growth. From the Junior room they moved to the Baraca rooms then it was necessary to go into the Sunday-school auditorium.

A JUNIOR AUXILIARY to the Baptist Home of Brooklyn has been organized. Although it is only three months old the young women are hard at work and most enthusiastic. As a beginning one representative from each Baptist Church of Brooklyn and Long Island was asked for and the response was gratifying. The representative of the board of directors and general advisor is Mrs. John L. Swan, one full of fun and enthusiasm and always ready to tackle the "big things." The aim of this organization is to bring joy and sunshine into the hearts of every member of the Baptist home family and to give an atmosphere of home. For instance at Easter each one received a hyacinth. For June 7 an automobile party was planned; about twenty cars were provided for the afternoon and the Junior Auxiliary girls divided themselves among the cars acting as hostesses. A favor and candy table is to be presided over by the Junior Auxiliary at the Wonderland Fair to be held at the 13th Regiment Armory in November. The girls are already making great preparations.

NEW JERSEY

THE HUDSON ASSOCIATIONAL COUNCIL met in the Summit Ave. Church, Jersey City, at 8:30 p.m., June 5, 1922, in response to a request of the New Durham Church for the purpose of considering the question of recognizing its pastor, Rev. W. C. Christie as an ordained Baptist minister. Rev. R. H. Rollins was president of the council, fifteen churches were represented by thirty-one delegates. The Rev. W. C. Christie presented his credentials from the Methodist Episcopal church recording his ordination as a deacon and later as a fully ordained elder, which credentials were properly endorsed, and also noted his withdrawal from that denomination to accept the pastorate of the New Durham Baptist Church. After full and free discussion it was unanimously voted, that the ordination certificates of the Methodist Episcopal Church be recognized, and that, as Brother W. C. Christie is the pastor of a regular Baptist Church, will be recognized as a fully ordained Baptist minister, in view of the further facts that he has been regularly baptized by a Baptist minister.

CONNECTICUT

SOUTH NORWALK, Rev. L. J. Schoeppler, pastor. The church closed its fiscal year with all bills paid and a slight balance in the treasury, something that has not occurred before in years. All the church organizations showed a healthy growth. One of the worthy things done by the young people's society was the carrying out a campaign of daily Bible reading in which 20 members of the church were

NEW YORK

THE BAPTISTS of the Oswego Association have just closed their ninetyeth annual gathering. The entertaining church was Phoenix, which provided generous entertainment. The sessions were marked by deep spirituality, earnestness of spirit and inspiring addresses by Doctors H. Wyse Jones, James E. Norcross, Clarence A. Barbour, H. Clarke Colebrook, and Rev. J. E. Miles. Many were deeply impressed with the glad consecration of Miss Clara Tingley of Burma. Officers elected for the new year: Moderator, Rev. W. S. Warren, Pulaski; clerk-treas., Rev. R. S. Chalmers, Phoenix; corres. sec., Rev. C. C. Hutchins, Pulaski. Delegates to the state convention are: Rev. J. P. Green, S. W. Oswego and Rev. S. A. Marks, Scriba. The church at Mexico has extended the invitation to meet there next year.

ON MAY 22, Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn, honored its new pastor, Rev. A. T. Fowler, and his wife by interesting recognition services in the auditorium, followed by a largely attended reception in Dixon Hall. A spirit of joy and good fellowship, heightened by a deep spiritual interest, characterized the exercises. Dr. C. L. White presided, while the list of speakers included Rev. John M. Moore, Rev. F. W. O'Brien, Rev. David Miller, Rev. Frank A. Smith, and Mr. George W. Bovenizer, president of the board of trustees. One of the features of the reception was the presentation of a bouquet of roses in honor of the thirty-second anniversary of the wedding of Dr. and Mrs. Fowler, and of a birthday cake to Mrs. Fowler, birthday and wedding anniversary falling on the date mentioned.

REV. ALBERT G. LAWSON, preached at Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday morning, June 4, on the occasion of his eightieth anniversary. He also assisted in the Communion Service and gave the hand of welcome and fellowship to enlisted. The W. W. G. is becoming known for its splendid missionary spirit and the pageants and plays it has given during the year have done much for missionary education. The church has sent $2,250 to the N. W. Movement and is in sympathetic cooperation with all the denominational interests.

THE STONINGTON UNION BAPTIST Association observed its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary, June 7-8. The meetings were held in the Groton Heights Church, Rev. George A. Atha, pastor. At 9 a. m. on Wednesday the sessions opened with a devotional service led by the moderator, Mr. Atha, and closed Thursday afternoon with an address on "Our Commander-in-chief" by Dr. H. J. White, of Hartford. Rev. C. A. Merrill preached the annual sermon.

THE FIRST ANNUAL MEETING of the Women's Mission Society for the Hartford Association was held in the Blue Hills Church, June 8. Officers for the ensuing year: Pres., Mrs. Allen W. Brown, West Hartford; first vice-pres., Mrs. E. R. Hitchcock, New Britain; second vice-pres., Mrs. E. E. Gates, Hartford; secy., Mrs. Arthur Tyrrill, Hartford; treas., Mrs. G. E. Kimball, Hartford. The speaker for the occasion was Miss Clara Converse of Japan.

FIRST CHURCH, NORWICH, has recently called Rev. E. G. Dunbar to the pastorate. Mr. Dunbar, who is a member of the present graduating class at Newton Center, expects to settle in his new charge July 1.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SUNDAY, JUNE 4, marked the thirteenth anniversary of Dr. John E. Briggs as Pastor of the Fifth Baptist Church of Washington. During these years more than 1900 persons have united with the church, 1100 of whom came by baptism. Nearly $250,000 has been raised for all purposes, half of which was given for missions, Christian education, and benevolence. During this time four ministers and one woman missionary have gone forth into the harvest fields. The church now supports eight workers on home and foreign fields. It is a "Twenty-four-hour-a-day-church" as the sun never sets upon its work and workers. The average attendance of the Sunday school was 750 last year. It is second in size in the District of Columbia, being surpassed only by Calvary School.

MASSACHUSETTS

BETH EDEN CHURCH, WALTHAM, Rev. H. E. Levey, pastor, has had a remarkable year. Over seventy came into the membership, fifty by baptism. The prayer meetings have been a source of spiritual blessing and power. The Bible School has kept up a splendid average, and every department of the church life is thriving. The Boy Crusaders and the Girl Crusaders have accomplished much real service. The present membership of Beth Eden is 650. The church property is one of the best in the city. The chimes and clock are attractive and add to the beauty of the structure.

OVER FORTY RECEIVED THE HAND of fellowship on a recent Sunday at Dudley St. Church, Boston, and seventeen more recently; 220 having been received into the church during the past sixteen months. The great evening congregations continue, despite hot weather and daylight-saving time. All departments of church work will be kept going during the summer. The Bible school will keep active in all departments. A daily vacation Bible school will do a flourishing work; and the pulpit will be supplied by "men with a message." The summer supplies are as follows: July 2-9—Rev. J. Stanley Durkee, president Howard University, Washington, D. C.; July 16—Rev. Herbert Johnson, noted preacher and pastor at large, Boston; July 23—Rev. Charles H. Rust, Immanuel Baptist Church, Scranton, Pa., formerly of Boston; July 30—Rev. W. J. Swaffield, Park Ave. Church, Plainfield, N. J., formerly of Boston Baptist Bethel; August 6-13—Rev. George Lombard, minister and lecturer, Lawrence, Mass.; August 20—Rev. W. W. Bustard, Euclid Ave. Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio; August 27—Rev. Austen Kempton, Broadway Church, Cambridge, Mass.; Sept. 3—Rev. Arthur T. Fowler, Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

CLAREMONT CHURCH closed its fiscal year with a balance on current expenses and paid its pledges on the New World Movement with more than $200 to spare. At Easter the pastor, Rev. Wesley A. Paige baptized eight candidates, two pairs of brothers, two sisters and a husband and wife. Since Easter three new members have come by letter. The Women's Missionary Society recently gave the pageant, "Others" taken from Missions, and repeated it by request. Both the Senior Christian Endeavor and the newly organized Junior Society are showing fine efficiency. The community is planning through its Sunday-school forces to put on a daily vacation Bible school during July and August.

EVANGELIST EARLE FAVRO has been working with the Baptist churches of Laconia and Belmont recently. As a result of these meetings at Laconia thirteen were baptized, June 4. There are fifteen or eighteen more waiting baptism in the Laconia church as a result of these meetings. A number of decisions for the Christian life were also made in the meetings at Belmont Church. It is expected that Mr. Favro will also labor with the East Tilton church.

BAPTISMS are reported by the pastor of the North Woodstock church. Ten were welcomed into the membership of this church June 4, five by baptism. These additions are the result of recent meetings held when the pastor was assisted by Rev. C. P. MacGregor, pastor of First church, Manchester.

ALTERATIONS AND ENLARGEMENT OF THE CHURCH BUILDING are under way at the Newport Church. The vestry is being raised in order that a suitable basement may be provided for the Boy Scouts and other church work. The vestry will also be enlarged for the accommodation of the growing Sunday school. Rev. J. W. Rafter is pastor.

VERMONT

REV. ELISHA SANDERSON will close his work at Fairfax the last of June, in order to take up the work at Sutton, July 1.

MAY 28, REV. JOSEPH S. BROWN preached his last sermon as pastor of First Church, Manchester Center, thus closing, at the end of nine and one-half years, his second pastorate with this church. In his pastorate at St. Albans and in his two pastorates at Manchester Center, Mr. Brown has gained the friendship and appreciation of his parishioners, while his service on the board of trustees of Vermont State Convention for the past nine years has won for him the esteem of the Baptists of Vermont. His many friends are glad that he will remain in Manchester Center and so be able to help in the state work.

REV. KENDRICK HACKETT has presented his resignation to the churches at South Newfane and West Dummerston and has accepted a call to the Elmwood Avenue Church of Providence, R. I., where he will begin his pastorate July 1.

JUNE 11, REV. C. E. GOULD closed his pastorate of eight years with the Lyndon Center Church, and on June 18 began his work at North Troy.

THE CHURCH at Ira recently extended a call to Rev. W. G. Cooper, formerly pastor at Webstersville, who is already on his new field.

REV. A. S. PUTNAM of Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C., who supplied the Andover Church last summer, returned this year. He began his work there June 11.

JUNE 1, REV. J. J. BERGER of Coassayuna, N. Y., began his work as pastor of the churches at Mount Holly and Belmont.

REV. R. G. GREENGRASS, who has been pastor of the Community Church at West Charleston for the past year, has presented his resignation to take effect July 1, when he will become pastor of the Randolph Church.

MISS RUTH C. BROWN, who has charge of the work at the Italian Mission in Barre, is preparing for the daily vacation Bible school which will be held during the month of August. She will be assisted again this year by Miss Katherine Aldrich of Essex Junction, a student in Gordon Bible College.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE was that of the ordination of Harold C. Phillips in the First Church at Hillsboro, on June 2. Several years past the candidate had preached in many of the churches in Clinton Association so that the interest in him was the impetus together with the hearty invitation from the Hillsboro church that caused a large delegation from the various churches to be present. The moderator of the association, Howard McCune, was made the moderator of the Council and after a very satisfactory examination Mr. Phillips was ordained. At the evening service the pastor of the entertaining church, F. Hubbard Morten, presided. Dr. Chamberlain, president of Denison University, preached the ordination sermon. Rev. John Wilson, of New Vienna gave the ordination prayer, Pastor A. W. West, of Washington C. H., gave the welcome address into the ministry. Brother Phillips is a graduate of Denison University, attended Columbia for a while and has just finished the course in Union Theological Seminary. He is a brother of Rev. George Phillips known so well in the state. Immediately after the evening service he left for New York and will sail next week for Jamaica. After his return in the fall he becomes pastor of the church at Mt. Vernon.

ILLINOIS

ORDINATION SERVICE of father and son, recently took place at Momence. In accordance with the findings of the Permanent Council of the Chicago Association, at its meeting at Baptist headquarters on Monday, June 5, at which twenty-seven churches were represented by forty-one delegates, the new moderator of the Association, Mr. Edwin Phelps, presiding, and the secretary of the Council, Rev. A. C. Hodgson, serving as clerk, Mr. W. G. Crook, pastor of First Church of Mombence, and his father, Evangelist George Crook, were on the following Thursday evening set apart to the gospel ministry. Rev. A. C. Hodgson presided at the ordination service, and Mr. Oscar Johnson, church clerk, acted as clerk. Dr. J. J. Ross preached the sermon, and Rev. J. G. Grace offered the ordaining prayer. The charge to the candidates was given by Rev. W. H. Peebles, and that to the church by Dr. J. W. Hoyt. Other parts were taken by Dr. Herbert Hines and the presiding officer.

THE CHURCH AT CLINTON, under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. O. P. Miles, is building a brick parsonage. This will probably be ready for occupancy about the middle of August. About fifty have been received into the church since the beginning of the year, with baptism taking place frequently Sunday evenings.

ON JUNE 11, thirty-five candidates were baptized in the new First Church at Oak Park. Though the roof was not on and the audience had to stand on the auditorium floor, the service was impressive and solemn.

MICHIGAN

BROADWAY CHURCH, BAY CITY, Rev. E. R. Allen, pastor. The annual meeting held May 31, disclosed a satisfactory condition in all branches of the church. The books were closed with all obligations for current expenses met. Several new members have been received during the year. The property has been improved and beautified. Most of the work was done by the members of the church. Complete harmony exists and the outlook is most encouraging. The young people's work has been reorganized and a flourishing B. Y. P. U. carries on the work. The pastor is conducting a study class which is taking up the Baptist Trained Leaders' Course. The church carries on a mission Bible school in the South Church under the leadership of Mr. Frank Merritt, with an attendance of about fifty-five each Sunday. Rev. B. H. Thomas, pastor of this church for many years was present at the annual meeting and gave a short address in which he reviewed the history of the church stating that it was formerly the Fremont Ave. Church which was the first Baptist church organized in the Saginaw Valley as well as the mother of the Baptist churches in Bay City. Mr. Allen assumed the pastorate last October after serving the church for two months as convention pastor.

AT THE COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES, June 15, at Hillsdale College, twenty-eight received the degree of Bachelor of Arts; two, the diploma in piano; six, the certificate in public school music; and seven, the Bachelor of Accounts degree. Among the total number of graduates, twenty-one have accepted attractive teaching positions for the coming year. The following honors were also conferred at the commencement exercises: Doctor of Music, Francis L. York, Detroit; Doctor of Divinity, Rev. C. C. Mitchell, Orland, Ind.; Diploma Extraordinary, John Charles Vaughan, Chicago; Special Diploma, Hon. Grant M. Hudson, Lansing, Mich.

INDIANA

SUNDAY, JUNE 4, was a great day for the Negro people of Garrett. Rev. Silas G. Huntington, Indianapolis, came onto the job May 30. No solicitation before Sunday was allowed and not a person was allowed to solicit in the church. The call was for $3,768 and $4,000 was raised. After the morning sermon and offertory a repast was served in the basement. The afternoon services opened at 2:30 with a fine spirit and crowd. It was full of inspiration and at 4:30 the offertory was finished and most of the crowd marched to Macedonian Church for the dedication service. Dr. Huntington was master of ceremonies. The service opened by singing, "Blessed be the tie that binds." Rev. J. B. Smith of Fort Wayne who started the church offered prayer. The thirteen pastors present from various parts of the state gave two minute talks and Rev. G. Jordan of Fort Wayne delivered the dedicatory sermon. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Dr. William Z. Thomas, Indianapolis, superintendent of the 135 colored Baptist churches of Indiana. At 7:30, after an inspiring and interesting address by Dr. Huntington the people were again given the opportunity of making an offering. With a hearty response they went "over the top." One of the pleasant features of the afternoon was when Rev. G. Jordan and about forty members of his church in Fort Wayne came in to add their offerings. The First Baptist Church had to be used for the three sermons and offertory in order to accommodate the crowds.

KANSAS

REV. J. M. TINNELL has been called from Dexter to Glendale Church, Bazine, as full time pastor. This is a rural church but progressive.

NEBRASKA

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, Fairbury, the report of the treasurer showed over $10,000 received during the year, and there was a good balance on hand. The church is buying the pastor a new automobile. The Service Circle, a group of personal workers of about thirty-five members, keep in constant touch with all members who tend to become inactive and also do much work in personal soul winning. The mid-week Bible study is encouraging. The church is one of the nine in Nebraska that subscribed its New World Movement quota.

IOWA

IN RESPONSE TO A CALL of Bethany Church, Des Moines, a council of the delegates and six visitors met with the Hamburg Church June 9 to consider the ordination of Brother John Shade Franklin, a member of the Hamburg Baptist Church. Nine churches responded to the call. Pres. John W. Million, of Des Moines University, was made moderator, and Rev. L. R. Bobbitt of Glenwood, clerk. The council was unanimous in its recommendation for the ordination, also in its faith in the splendid ability of the candidate. Brother Franklin is in his last year in William Jewel College, Mo., but will continue his school work in Des Moines University. During the year he will have charge of mission work in Mason City, Ia. He is a volunteer for the mission field and intends to complete a seminary course and special work if possible. The ordination was held at eight o'clock, the ordaining sermon being preached by Rev. A. W. Tandy, of Mason City.

IN RESPONSE TO THE CALL, thirty-one churches of the Central Association convened June 8 for the purpose of recognizing Bethany Church as a regular Baptist church. It was found that the New Hampshire Confession of Faith had been adopted; that the church had a large opportunity for service in its territory without trespassing upon other churches; that there was a membership of 130, with a Sunday school of 160; that the church had a neat house of worship and no debt, and that it was self-supporting. Accordingly it was voted that it be recognized as a regular Baptist church, and proceed to ordain its pastor, Mrs. Mary Woodward-Witter, to the ministry. Rev. R. B. Davidson of Ames was elected moderator; Rev. H. E. Norton, executive secretary of the Des Moines City Union, clerk. Mrs. Woodward-Witter gave a clear statement of her Christian experience, her call to the ministry (she was a missionary in India for over ten years and served the Bethany Church, prior to its affiliation with the Baptist denomination, for twelve years) and her Christian belief. The council voted unanimously to proceed with her ordination. The sermon was preached by Dr. G. W. Cassidy, executive secretary of the Iowa Convention.

An Adventure in Friendship

(With apologies to David Grayson)
"Vitama Vas" were the words which fell from the lips of the wife of the pastor of the First Bohemian Baptist Church, Chicago, as she welcomed the guests from the American Baptist churches, who had gone adventuring among their Czecho-Slovak fellow citizens. Treasures gathered from the homes were on display in the auditorium. There were laces, embroideries, pictures, vases and two shawls, the envy of every woman. There were rare old histories of Bohemia, whose yellowed leaves told a tale of appreciative care.

Nearly 100 guests sat down to the delicious supper served by the women of the church, and "Vitama Vas" greeted the eye from each hand painted place card on the table. Some of the viands were familiar, but each housewife took at least three guesses as to how the dressing for the veal was made, as it was cut in slices, and was of the texture of fine grained bread; there were many kinds of tarts, and something that looked like strips of pie crust dipped in powdered sugar, but without the slightest hint of any grease.

When the company returned to the auditorium they found two young ladies and two little girls in the costumes of Bohemia. The beautiful colored embroideries on blouse and cap with the gay streamers down the back gave a lovely touch of color to the scene.

The Czecho-Slovak friends presented a most inspiring program. All the music was from their own great composers. A trio of young people played the piano, violin and cello, while young men and maidens sang their own folk songs, and two little girls sang their song in both English and Bohemian.

"Annie into the garden went
To get a cabbage her intent."

The speakers of the evening told of their love and appreciation of America, in proof of which they recalled the fact that out of 1,000,000 of their people in this country 60,000 volunteered during the war. These people bring to America a passion for freedom, for music and art and deep religious convictions.

The choir sang the Bohemian National anthem, "Where Is My Home?" and the pastor pronounced the benediction.

It was an evening of deep significance, as each group came to realize the other was "just folks." Every heart, without regard to nationality, beat in quick sympathy and admiration for those two Bohemian boys who were the first to enter the University of Illinois. In their eagerness for an education they undertook to live on black coffee until their teacher in physiology discovered their circumstances. Then because of the friendly hands stretched out to help them, they testified they learned this lesson, "There surely is a God, and he certainly does direct help to those in need." One of these boys today is district superintendent of schools in Chicago, and a leader in the Bohemian Baptist church.

If during next winter you are invited to spend an evening with the Italians, Russians, Lithuanians or any other group from overseas, put aside all ordinary engagements and improve the splendid opportunity of making friends with these people who are bringing their contribution to enrich America.

Woman's American Baptist Home Missionary Society

All first-class business houses gather the heads of departments together for conference. The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, a branch of the King's business, looks forward each year to the days when from Atlantic to Pacific the national, district and state officers with the secretaries from headquarters may together face their task, study the difficulties and gain fresh inspiration for the year to come.

At ten o'clock Friday morning, June 9, Mrs. George W. Coleman called the meeting to order. Mrs. George Caleb Moor voiced the devotional thought of the session by the prayer from Isaiah, "Be thou our arm every morning." Missionary work being the real reason for the existence of the society the fields, their missionaries, the new calls for help and the lack of money to send new workers all passed in review. In spite of fewer missionaries last year, conversions are reported from every field, not just a few but in large numbers, as many as seventy from a field. One supervisor reported that the new appointees from the Baptist Missionary Training School had given splendid service during their first year.

The Christian Americanization department declared that Baptist women are willing to be missionaries as well as to give for their support as is evidenced by the 1,260 volunteers who are making friends with the new Americans. That this is real Christian service is indicated by the Roumanian woman who said, "My man he bring Bible. I read, course I Baptist."

The financial situation was faced in the figures of an indebtedness of $335,000 for three years and the reduction of the budget twenty-five per cent, which means concretely that seventy missionaries and teachers must be withdrawn.

Announcement was made of the new temporary location of the Baptist Missionary Training School at 4948 Indiana Ave.

Two special features mark this conference—the very evident atmosphere of prayer and the enthusiastic determination to continue the campaign until the New World Movement is an assured success.

Mrs. Coleman gave a message on "Woman's Responsibility to the Denominational Plan." She urged the women to remember they had assumed this responsibility for five years, could be released only by common consent of all concerned for the good of all. She called attention to the closer cooperation of men and women in local and state work. She admitted there were serious obstacles which must be accepted as the natural thing in a great movement and called on this group of leaders to lead the women to assume their share of woman's responsibility until altogether the denomination shall work its way through. inant note for the young minister is sacrifice, and the faculties of the seminaries must provide for him. Scholarship is important, but spirit and life lead. No doctrinal conclusion is final until tested by experience. Our churches are theological laboratories. The greatest interpretative power of Scripture is with the Holy Spirit. Dr. Elmore's address appeared in last week's issue of THE BAPTIST.

The evening was given up to the Hon. Wm. Jennings Bryan who spoke on the theme, "Tampering with the Mainspring." The address was in Mr. Bryan's usual vein and heard with great delight by a vast audience. So entirely, however, was it in accord with recent published addresses of the speaker that it need not be reproduced here.

Among the resolutions adopted were the following:

"Inasmuch as we, the Baptist Fundamentalists in conference assembled, believe ourselves to be in views of doctrine and policies of service and in spiritual intention the true successors of the Baptist forefathers, we hereby affirm our intention not only to countenance no division in the ranks of the Baptists of the Northern Convention fold, but also our determination to continue the work of the Northern Baptist Convention along the lines of a true loyalty to Christ and his word, to work together for the correction of such errors in doctrine and practice as now are obviously injuring the organized work of the convention. We intend to work to conserve all such spiritual and material forces as are essential to the welfare of the work and the blessing of the world.

"Secondly: We call attention to the fact that there are still notorious instances of false and subversive teaching in certain of our schools and seminaries and our work will not cease until these men are removed or the schools tolerating them stricken from the approved roll of Baptist schools in this convention field."

specific in this matter. If we Baptists have on our faculties in colleges and seminaries men who no longer hold the Baptist position toward the Bible, is it unchristian and unkind to make the going of these men easy and immediate?

Ought a man to remain an official in the denomination or a teacher in a Baptist seminary who holds the view that the New Testament is not history in the strict sense of that word? Who explains that doubtless the writers were honest in what they wrote inasmuch as they thought things happened just as they are recorded? Who affirms that the events did not happen in the way stated and perhaps did not occur at all, and that what the writers of the New Testament saw and heard was only what they thought they saw and heard?

Shall we continue men as teachers of the future preachers who state it is their belief that no dead man ever rose from the dead; that there is no credible evidence anywhere that a dead man ever came to life again, including Jesus Christ? Who make bold to say that Paul in his strong arguments for the resurrection of Christ was mistaken? That even in the matter of human immortality they are not ready to affirm it and it does not make any difference anyhow?

Ought a man to remain a teacher in a Baptist seminary who in conference with a body of students upon being told by them that they could not use his stuff and hold their jobs in Baptist pulpits urged the young men not to put it on too thick and fast, but to be careful; and when reminded that preachers had to use something which often put them in a position where they had to lie, replied, "Lie then"? This was not said in a corner. Some two dozen men or more heard it.

Think of It!

One of our pastors received a letter from his son who reported that his teacher had said, "The traditional content of the word Christianity has gone. We will retain the word, however, to denote those spiritual values still remaining." Another young man reports that he was told by one of his teachers that the Gospel of John was not written by the Apostle John but probably by some Greek in the second century. Think of it!

A Baptist pastor goes to see a woman who is dying of cancer of the liver. She is in mortal pain. The pastor says, "What shall I read for you?" She replies, "Read from John." Read from John. But how can he read from John to a woman about to die, if Jesus did not say those rich full words of love; if there is no Christ with outstretched hands saying, "Let not your heart be troubled"; if there is no voice whispering, "Believe in me"; if there is no divine promise, "I will come again and receive you unto myself that where I am there ye may be also"; if there was no prayer, no upper room, no supper talk of wondrous beauty and lasting power; how can an honest man read to the dying woman from the Gospel by John if he doubts that the Gospel is a true record of what Jesus said? NO! he will not read, he will retire from that dread presence defeated and dethroned from his pulpit. He may hire out as a teacher in some seminary, but he will not again subject himself to such tragic embarrassment. Calling upon the sick and conducting funerals is not a congenial task for a man who has such doubts in his mind.

Shall we continue to accept leadership in men who teach that Christ has already come and there is no reason to believe he will ever come again in the dramatic manner promised in the New Testament? A Baptist is free to be a "pre" or a "post" but in any event a real Baptist must be a "pro." The true blue Baptist is satisfied with the teachings of his New Testament in all of these matters.

Are we to be forever burdened by men who deny the plain teachings of the New Testament and compelled to accept them as leaders of our Baptist hosts to be represented by them in the world at large as true exemplars of what the Baptists are and believe? How can we preserve sound doctrine in the churches under such conditions?

Baptists have been able to defend themselves from enemies outside the fold and have won a mighty freedom for men of all religious belief. It remains to be seen whether we can defend ourselves from enemies within the fold and secure to our children and their children the priceless heritage of our fathers. It may be that we cannot clean house and that the house thus divided against itself will fall. If the house falls the blame for this disaster will lie at the doors of the teachers and preachers who have betrayed the faith of our fathers and have persisted in their positions of power and influence till they have wrecked the noble and historic fellowship of Northern Baptists. The only remedy for the present hour is sound doctrine in the churches and the recognition of the authority of the churches over all institutions and movements that claim to represent the Baptist denomination.

It is this support in Baptist schools of the sort of teaching and teachers I have described that I characterized at Des Moines Convention last June as a base betrayal of Baptist funds given for Baptist work in Baptist institutions. I here and now reaffirm this position. I stand ready to vindicate it. If the Northern Baptist Convention will create an able, fair-minded committee or a board to take up these matters and is disposed to turn the light on conditions as they now exist in some of our schools, I will tell that body fully all I know of these matters, giving names and dates, in full support of what I have here stated.

In the Open

But why wait for any such committee? Why be forced into such disagreeable situations? The men who are under fire know whom we mean. Why do they not do the manly thing and come into the open declaring their views and defending them in pulpit and press? Then let the great body of the Baptists of the North decide whether these men shall longer continue in their positions. We have means of knowing the sentiments of the majority of our churches when the matters are in the open seen and heard of all men. In some such manner we must meet the challenge of certain of our midst widely published in our denominational press. For one, I say, "Here am I, call me!"

In the membership of a local Baptist church there is largest liberty for the holding and expressing of individual views. Such matters are up to that local church. But when one becomes a representative of our denomination in a school, on a journal, or in a mission station, he is no longer a mere individual; he has engaged to speak for the major mind and the majority opinion of the denomination he serves. His liberty is as full as his loyalty to the risen Christ and as far as the bounds of the Word of God. That is a wonderful liberty, for he whom the Son makes free is free indeed.

Now, when such a representative in any capacity in our denominational service knows in his heart that he has departed from the major mind, and no longer holds with the Baptists what they believe and teach as fundamentals to sound doctrine, there is but one course open to him. Let him go where he will have the largest freedom to teach and practice his new ways. These principles apply to the pastors of our churches as well.

Every intelligent man knows what the bulk of Baptist belief is. No man should hide like a coward behind the statement that no one knows what Baptists believe. Any one can know what the Bible teaches. The whole world should know by now that Baptists draw their doctrines from the Bible. We are a Baptist people. We are nothing else.

What we are we are because of the teachings of the Word of God, in the leading of the Holy Spirit. This may mean our prosperity and health, or it may mean our adversity and suffering. It does not matter what it means to us. This is the historic Baptist position from the first Baptist in Jerusalem till the last Baptist shall be crowned in glory.

I have tried to speak kindly, fully and freely my thought concerning this theme assigned me. I profoundly believe what I have written. If any have found it hard to follow me, if others disagree, let us still be honest and true to our conceptions of the truth as found in the Bible. Let us wait humbly at the feet of our Lord and Master. If we are all drawn to him we shall not be far from one another.

This is one of the books which every lover of missions will wish to possess. Placed in the hands of those who have never felt the romance of service in foreign lands, it will make a powerful appeal. Mrs. Mason has gathered into this volume the outstanding events in the progress of Christian missions in foreign lands. By using episodes which are typical she makes a most readable story of a mighty movement. If one is looking for chivalry and the spirit of adventure in modern life, it may be found, this volume shows, in missions.

The Drama League Series. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co.

Shortly after the close of the World War, as a part of the wave of idealism which was characteristic of that period, a religious drama committee was appointed by the Drama League of America. This committee was charged with the duty of developing good religious plays and of promoting their use. A religious drama prize competition was held. The three plays listed below were among the few recommended by the committee for publication. Religious drama had its birth in the church, and the churches and various church boards have eagerly adopted the league's idea of utilizing drama in church work.

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

AN UNUSUAL MUSICAL SERVICE

A few weeks ago, when Dr. Stifler, my minister, came to me with the announcement that we would have a musical service early in June, to fill up one Sunday evening, and that the program was to be entirely musical—we both sighed inwardly and synchronized the exclamation, "Can't we do something a little different from the usual cantata, or program of solos and anthems; something with more point and reason!" After many false leads we finally struck on the idea of compiling a program from the ritual music of three of the great ritualistic denominations—the Jewish, the Roman Catholic, and the Greek Orthodox (or Russian) church.

Echoes from Solomon's Temple

The examples of the Jewish music were not difficult to find. As a matter of fact, since my wife (the soprano of my quartet) and the tenor, Mr. Dykema, are both regular soloists at two of the large Jewish temples in Chicago, and I have played many of the services when time permitted, we had plenty of appropriate material at hand. Since we were limited for time, both as to material and rehearsal periods, we chose only two of the traditional chants—the setting of the Borechu and the version of Sh-ma Jisroel arranged by Rogers. It is claimed that these two old melodies are survivals of the ritual music extant in the day of Solomon's Temple, with its magnificent ceremonials and musical investiture. The quartet sang the Spicker version of another old melody, "The Sun Goes Down," used toward the close of the severe Yom Kippur service—the Day of Atonement, when all orthodox Jews spend the entire day from dawn to sundown in the confines of the temple; no food may pass their lips from the previous sundown to the evening of Yom Kippur Day. I should have liked to include the famous dirge—Kol Nidre—which also belongs in that service; but time did not allow. The other Jewish music used was two solos—"Eili, eili," a dramatic rhapsody based on traditional synagogical melodies, arranged by Schindler, and sung by Mrs. Lester, and "Rachem" (Mercy) by Manna-Zucca, sung by my contralto, Miss Ethel Heide.

As representative of the Catholic mode of musical service-expression we presented an old medieval "Ave Maria" by Arcadeldt, and a fifteenth-century "Regina Coeli Laetare," both four-part choruses using the antique color of the modal scales. The quartet also sang the "Ave Verum" by Gillette, a modern setting of this old hymn, but quite properly written in keeping with the strict provisions as to musical standards laid down in the noted order of a recent pope as to the musical standards to be observed in accepted music for the Roman Catholic church. This Gillette number is also issued with an optional English text, suitable for any communion; it is a lovely anthem, quite easy to do, and sincerely reverential. It is published by the Summy Co., of Chicago. In addition to these anthems, Mr. Fiske, the bass, sang the dramatic "Pro Pecatis" from Rossini's Stabat Mater, and the tenor gave the long, fluent melody of the Sanctus from Gounod's St. Cecilia Mass, and joined with the other voices in the choral culmination of this well-known number.

When we came to outline the selections from the Russian music, our real troubles began. Most of the Russian church music is cast for large choral units—almost all of it is written for six and eight-part chorus and to find representative selections that would be effective when done by a mixed quartet was somewhat of a problem. Of all the great church divisions, the Greek Orthodox is perhaps pre-eminent when we take stock of its religious music. Some might question this statement, in view of the fact that the Roman Catholic Church possesses such golden glories as the Palestrina masterpieces, the great choral contributions of such men as de Lassus, Pergolese, Gounod, Cesar Franck, Cherubini, Verdi, Mozart, Beethoven—in fact almost every musical name of importance for the past 500 years in the continental countries! But, even allowing for this objection, I still maintain that the music of the Russian church, taken as a whole, is the most distinctive, as well as cohesive and individual body of music brought into being by the demands of religious worship. In many ways it partakes of the type of music that we class as belonging to the Golden Age of the Catholic music. Just as the sixteenth century Italians worked in the medium of multi-numbered parts for voices alone, to be sung without the admixture of instrumental color, so the composers of the Russian School, having to cope with the fact that no instruments, not even organs, are allowed in the great Russian fanes, only male choirs are used, and all service material must be choral in form, the composers have evolved a type of church music much like the older Italian, but of course strongly tinged with the distinctive Slavonic color and spirit. In addition to being written in six or more parts, there is called for an extra bass part.

The Russian Voice

For some unknown reason, Russia produces a species of bass voice with a range one octave lower than such voices in this country. Naturally, the composers have made wide use of such material. The profound impression made by the finely trained choirs may well be imagined; the organ pedal tone effect produced by the sub-bass voices once heard is never forgotten. Of course, with only four voices to deal with, we could not reproduce the authentic choral songs. After long search two possible numbers were found—a beautiful "Prayer" by Droszof, and the stunning "Glorious Forever" by Rachmaninoff. These we did. Then, to illustrate further the Slavonic genius for spiritual expression, Mrs. Lester sang the tender "Legend" of Tchaikowsky, and Mr. Fiske did valiant service with the same composer's great setting of Tolstoi's poem of brotherhood, "The Pilgrim's Song."

As a final group on the program we did four of the authentic Negro spirituals, the much-loved "Deep River" in the Burleigh version, sung by my contralto; the typical "Peter, go ring a dem bells," also arranged by Burleigh, sung by Mr. Fiske; that song of heart-hope, "Swing low, sweet chariot," arranged by Rogers, sung by Mrs. Lester; and lastly, a quartet version of "Didn't my Lord deliver Daniel?" in the Burleigh setting.

N. B. C. Annual Meeting

Thursday Evening

One of the most powerful sessions of the convention was that of Thursday evening when addresses were given by Dr. David J. Evans on "The Place of the Christian College in the System of American Education," and by Dr. Frank W. Padelford on "Education in the Foreign Field." These gripping addresses were given before an audience of some 9000 people and are of such importance that they will be printed together in some future number of THE BAPTIST.

Friday Morning

This session opened with business. Dr. Joseph Hazen, of Peoria, Ill., presented the report of the committee on reducing the size of the Board of Promotion recommending, in view of the elimination of the mid-year meeting, that no change in size be made at the present time, as doing so would disturb the balance of the Board. The report was adopted.

Dr. Barbour presented the report of the committee on organization and program for the coming year, a report which in some future issue will be published in full—This report was adopted as a whole. It carries with it not only an outline of the makeup and activities of the churches for the year but also suggests a program of activities for the churches.

Pres. E. Y. Mullins, fraternal delegate from the Southern Baptist Convention was presented and spoke for himself and for the other delegates. He said that during its special campaign the Southern Convention has raised $35,000,000. The campaign is just half through and the people are confident of victory. Almost 250,000 new members were added to the churches last year. At the same time an effort to enlist half a million titheers has gone well towards its goal. Southern Baptists believe in the mission of the Baptists. They think we still have a great work to do in the world. Evangelism and education go together. Evangelism is the priestly element in religion, while education is the kingly element. When we try to evangelize we are always thrown back on education as the way to do it. The Columbia Conference report was rejected because the delegates believed that the great duty of Southern Baptists is to keep step in the great forward movement now under way.

Dr. J. C. Massee moved that the Board of Promotion be authorized to sell THE BAPTIST and all its assets, for such a sum as may seem reasonable, to an individual or group of individuals—his motion was opposed and by a two to one vote it was voted to refer the matter to the Executive Committee with instructions that this committee report before Tuesday night. This action was regarded as another sharp defeat for the organized Fundamentalists.

The morning program was a session of the Publication Society and Dr. W. H. Main gave an able address on the subject, "The Challenge of the World's Greatest Day."

The report of the Nominating Committee was presented by Dr. A. M. Bailey, of Seattle, Wash., and it was voted to have the election at 11 a. m. on Saturday.

A Confession of Faith Rejected

The most exciting event to this point on the program occurred in the afternoon when Dr. W. B. Riley presented for recommendation by the convention to such churches as feel the need of a confession what was practically the New Hampshire Confession.

Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin offered as a substitute motion "that the Northern Baptist Convention affirm that the New Testament is our all-sufficient rule of faith and practice and that we have need of no other statement."

There followed one of the finest debates which has ever taken place in one of our convention sessions. For Dr. Riley's motion, speeches were made by J. M. Dean, M. P. Boynton, E. V. Pierce, Chas. R. Brock, J. C. Massee and W. B. Riley. For the substitute, in addition to Dr. Woelfkin, speeches were made by Carter Helm Jones, A. G. Lagerquist, A. W. Beaven, James C. Colgate and Joseph Taylor. The speeches were dignified, courteous, yet incisive and powerful and at times impassioned. Such a worthy argument reflects honor on any body. The substitute motion was carried by a vote of 1264 to 637, which reflects well the figures on each of the divisions precipitated by the Fundamentalists. Thus an ancient Baptist position was confirmed and the question of a confession of faith disposed of for the present.

The evening session was in charge of the Woman's Home Society and made of intense interest owing to the presentation of new appointees of the Board. Addresses were made by Miss Alice W. S. Brimson and by Mrs. Geo. W. Coleman.

"One Sows, Another Reaps"

By DOUGLAS G. HARING

IN an obscure country village of Japan, twelve years or so ago, a missionary used to conduct a little Sunday school. Evidently the work was not fruitful, for the project was abandoned. Or maybe it was fruitful and had to be closed because the home supporters of that mission forgot to pay back pledges or to make new ones. Experience in Japan would show that either alternative is perfectly possible.

Perhaps the missionary was discouraged and shook the dust off his feet preparatory to trying another town. No one seemed interested—the few "believers" turned out failures, and the missionary's world took on an indigo hue. Or if success had blessed his efforts and one of those pink slips bringing a cable message from home had spoiled it all, his world was nevertheless blue.

This is pure speculation—we shall never know. Who the missionary was and what his Society, we cannot find out. The town we know, but his name has been forgotten there.

I wish I could find that missionary. I would cheer him up.

For a year ago a bright boy entered our Night School here in Yokohama and soon won the confidence of his teachers by his faithful work. In one short year he learned more English than some boys learn in three. Not long ago he began to select the front seat in chapel and showed considerable interest in the Bible talks given every evening. During Easter vacation some of the older Christian boys conducted a class every night for the younger boys who had no decent place to spend their evenings except the school. They taught some English and much Bible. This teaching somehow found the heart that had begun to open to the Gospel.

A few evenings ago this boy came to see me before school, to inquire about the way of life. He wants to be a Christian. He says the chapel service of the school is the bright spot in his life. He never used to like his job, but somehow everything seems interesting since he has been trying to do the things that Jesus taught. He wanted to know all about the meaning of baptism and church membership.

Then I began to dig into his history. He told me that he never thought about religion till he entered the Night School. Then he came because the English teaching was said to be good and thought that he could put up with the Christianity. Lately he has found that the Christianity is the big thing, and his whole day is happy with the thought of the little hour of worship that is coming in the midst of the school periods in the evening.

But was this the first time he had heard about Jesus? Oh, no: when he was a little boy he used to go to a Sunday school in the little country village in a far corner of Japan where he had been born. How long did he go? Not very long—he soon got too big and stopped when the other boys did. A foreigner was the teacher. What was the foreigner's name? That had been forgotten, but perhaps it might have been a missionary. Did the foreigner still come there to run the little Sunday school? No, it had been closed and he didn't know where the foreigner was now. But when he came to Night School it brought back all the memories of the Sunday school, so long submerged by other interests.

No, he didn't understand what the Sunday school was about. He liked the singing. But since he had heard more about Jesus in the Night School he could see what the Sunday school had been trying to teach him. He wished he could find that Sunday-school teacher and tell him about his new experience. Yes, probably the Sunday school had helped him to understand the teachings of Jesus so soon after he entered the Night School.

Oh, by the way, could he bring his friend to Bible Class? He is interested in the Christ-teaching, too.

So it goes. The boys who are baptized are all too few, but experiences like this encourage one to keep on.

I wish I could find that missionary and tell him about the fruit of his little village Sunday school!

The Forward Look

WE have great reason to thank God for the success granted us during the past year in the foreign mission field. Our heavenly Father has kept his covenant with us. The divine Spirit is moving on the face of the waters, stirring the hearts of the nations with his creative breath. Great movements Christ-ward seem imminent.

In many lands, multitudes are taking the kingdom of heaven by force. Native churches are making progress in the propagation of Christianity and in leading their own peoples. It is the best year in baptisms for a long time. A revival of evangelism, largely under native auspices, begins to manifest itself.

Wonderful opportunities open before us all over the world. There is no doubt about it—the standards of the King march on. The only question is: Shall the Baptist regiment lag behind?

Fresh from the Field

President Milton G. Evans of Crozer Theological Seminary was recently honored by the John B. Stetson University of DeLand, Fla., conferring on him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

The five courses which are to be given this summer in the Department of Missions of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago should offer very valuable and stimulating opportunities for study to those ministers who wish to give to their ministry during the coming year a broader outlook and a deeper insight into the application of Christian principles to world problems which are daily becoming more urgent. During the first term, beginning June 19, the subjects offered will be: (1) The Missionary Education of the Church, by Dr. Frank G. Ward, of the Chicago Theological Seminary; (2) Christianity in China, by Dr. Archibald G. Baker, of the Divinity School; and (3) Christianity and other Agencies of World Civilization, (first part) by Dr. Baker. The courses of the second term, beginning July 27, will be: (1) Christianity in Japan and Korea, by Dr. Baker; (2) Christianity and other Agencies of World Civilization, (second part) by Dr. Baker; and (3) Missions and the Eastern Churches, by A. A. Beddikian, of New York City. Over sixty other courses of special interest to the ministry will also be given during the Summer Quarter. Students may register for either term of the quarter.

The office of the Chief of Chaplains, in association with the General Staff in Washington, has appointed a board of administration composed of Reserve Chaplains for the purpose of developing the Reserve Corps and of maintaining close relations between the army chaplains and the churches. The Corps numbers about 600.

Oscar R. Gunnerfeldt, graduated from Bethel Seminary, St. Paul, this spring, was publicly set apart for the gospel ministry in the First Swedish Baptist Church of Minneapolis, June 15. Mr. Gunnerfeldt has been appointed by the Southern Baptists as missionary to southern China, and will sail some time next fall. Seventeen messengers from six churches constituted the ordination council. R. Arlander served as moderator and Adolf Olson as clerk. The ordination sermon was preached by Adolf Olson.

Ministers in Spanish-speaking churches of all denominations are hereby invited to write to Layman No. 2, 25 N. Dearborn Street, Chicago, for as many of the pamphlets "How to Tithe and Why" and "That Tithing Sermon" in Spanish as they can wisely use in their congregations. They will be sent free, postage paid. Readers of THE BAPTIST are invited to call the attention of pastors in Spanish-speaking churches to the above offer.

The Committee on Negro Americans of the Home Missions Council, Dr. George R. Hovey, chairman, under the direction of Rev. Rodney W. Roundy, associate secretary, has issued an illuminating report which covers such subjects as, "The Negro Mind," "Negro Population," "The Northern Migration," "Conditions in Industry," "Interracial Cooperation," "Higher Education," etc. Closely allied to Christian work for Negroes in cities is the social service work of the National Urban League, with headquarters at 127 East 23rd Street, New York City. The executive secretary of this organization is Mr. Eugene Kinkle Jones, a graduate of Virginia Union University, our Baptist school for Negroes in Richmond, Va. The League's department of research and investigation, Mr. Charles L. Johnson, formerly associated with Mr. Graham Romeyn Taylor of the Chicago Race Commission, in charge, is making available for those interested, studies of Negro families in certain industrial centers, including religious as well as industrial and social conditions.

The Council was called by First Church of Cherokee, Ia., for the purpose of ordaining its pastor, Mr. Carl Lundholm, with Rev. E. H. Gillette of Mt. Olive as moderator and Rev. J. L. Pickett of Sioux City as clerk. After examination of candidate and due discussion, it was unanimously voted to recommend that the First Baptist Church of Cherokee proceed with the arrangements for ordination. Mr. Gillette, of Mt. Olive, preached the ordination sermon; prayer and laying on of hands, by Rev. J. P. Thomas; charge to the candidate, Rev. J. L. Pickett; charge to the church, Rev. J. Arthur Hurley.

Mr. Harry S. Myers, head of the Stereopticon Department of the General Board of Promotion, will attend four summer assemblies during July and August. The first will be the New Jersey Baptist Assembly in Peddie Institute, Hightstown. He will give two courses there, one on the Missionary Organization of the Local Church and the other on the new Home Mission Book, "The Trend of the Races." The second assembly, July 9-16, will be held at Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., an Interdenominational Missionary Education Movement Conference. The Michigan Baptist Assembly, July 21-28, will be held in Kalamazoo College with the same courses as at the New Jersey Baptist Assembly. The fourth of these assemblies, July 28-August 5, will be held in Lake Geneva, Wis., at College Camp, an Interdenominational Missionary Movement Conference.

Rev. A. L. Bain, missionary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in the Belgian Congo for many years, died at Valley, Nebr., June 9, after an illness of several weeks. He is survived by Mrs. Bain and one son who is studying at Lincoln University. Mr. Bain first sailed for the Congo in 1893 and during all these years has rendered incalculable service to the people there. His death will be a great loss to the society and to the Congo Mission.

When Miss Mary Maxwell, recently on the field, announced that she would open a kindergarten for the little Chinese children in Locke, Cal., she forgot, for the moment, that she had nothing whatever in the way of equipment—no chairs, no tables, no music! Armed with a lead pencil and a Bible and fortified by faith, she dared to go ahead, however, and the mothers were told through an interpreter to send the children equipped with a small stool or box. Since the Chinese are late risers and never have their breakfast before eleven o'clock, the babies had been instructed to come from one to three. Fifteen minutes before the appointed hour six tots arrived dragging such a collection of articles as you never did see before! Three little stools, two soap boxes and a dry goods box! The audience outnumbered the performers, for three mothers and a number of older brothers and sisters came, beguiled by their curiosity in this utterly unheard of institution—a kindergarten! A music book which contained several children's songs was unearthed at the mission and with the aid of older sisters and the wife of the Chinese pastor who spoke English, the new kindergarten made famous progress on its very first day.

G. A. Gustafson, who entered upon his pastorate at St. Cloud, Minn., in April, was ordained to the gospel ministry May 26. He gave a clear and very satisfactory statement of his conversion, call to the ministry and firm faith in all the fundamentals of the Christian religion. Brother Gustafson was graduated from Bethel Seminary two years ago. Eric Carlson, of Minneapolis, served as moderator of the ordination council, and Adolf Olson as clerk.

The Baptist Church at Caguas, Porto Rico recently took advantage of a campaign being made by progressive parents and long-suffering day school teachers for a better remuneration for the teachers by having in the church building an important conference on education at which subjects relating to the general theme were discussed. This church has won a large place in the life of the community because of its quickness in seizing every opportunity to back such causes as make for general betterment of the people.

The United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau, in co-operation with two National Education Associations, is calling a Conference on Standards and Problems of Employment-Certificate Issuance, to be held in Boston on the afternoons of July 5-6, at the time of the annual meeting of the National Education Association. City and state school and labor officials will discuss phases of employment-certificate issuance with which they have had practical experience. The second session of the conference will be devoted to a discussion of methods of enforcing the various standards of employment certificate issuance. The speakers include Dr. Josephine Baker, director Bureau of Child Hygiene, City Department of Health, New York City; Mrs. L. B. Bush, director State Child Welfare Department, Alabama; Mr. Taylor Frye, Deputy for Woman and Child Labor, Industrial Commission of Wisconsin; Dr. E. J. Lickley, assistant superintendent of schools and director of Compulsory Attendance and Child Welfare Department, Los Angeles; and Miss Jennie V. Miner, acting secretary, New York Child Labor Committee.

Rev. John Henry Day, pastor of Calvary Church, Yonkers, N. Y., has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of Memorial Church, Philadelphia, whose former pastor, Dr. Wm. H. Main, has been appointed associate secretary of the Publication Society. Mr. Day has been pastor of the Yonkers Church for six and one-half years. More than one-half of the present membership of the church has been received during his pastorate, and the church has prospered remarkably under his guidance. Mr. Day studied for the ministry at Crozer Theological Seminary, receiving the Bachelor of Divinity degree. After a two-years' pastorate in Ridley Park, Pa., Mr. Day took a one year's post-graduate course at Crozer, earning the degree of Master of Theology, after which he accepted the call to the Calvary Baptist Church of Yonkers.

Hot Weather Specials

We are admonished by a subscriber to be careful in the use of the publisher's page during hot weather. We are asked not to place too much of a strain on the mental machinery of our readers. We have had the suggestion under consideration. It seems a wise precaution and we will act upon it. On our part we suggest a wider reading of other departments of the paper.

Great Agents

We sometimes make the statement that we have no field agents for THE BAPTIST. This statement is inaccurate. We have no paid field agents for THE BAPTIST. We have hundreds of young people whose enthusiasm and desire to serve leads them to make a most careful canvass of the church officers and members. On our desk at this minute we find two good illustrations. John Singleton, president of the Chicago B. Y. P. U., tells us of a Chicago church where the young people's society subscribed for its own officers and then began a canvass of the church officers with good success. It is hard for a deacon to withhold his subscription when approached by a bright young man or woman. What reason can he give for refusing to subscribe for his denominational newspaper? You should help these young folks. They know that THE BAPTIST is their friend and servant.

Shows Their Faith

It was generally understood that THE BAPTIST was to be sold at Indianapolis. The editors were warned that it would be wise to seek new jobs, or be prepared to purchase the paper. How little we know of one another's finances. During the period of the convention 294 new subscriptions came to the office. Either these good folks have lots of money or great faith.

EXTRA SPECIAL!

You may take new subscriptions to THE BAPTIST running until Jan. 1923 for $1.00. We will include the issues with the reports of the Northern Baptist Convention and the Young People's Convention. This offer is for new subscriptions.

Laymen's Association Organized

The organization of a national laymen's association of the Baptist church to be a separate institution from the Northern Baptist Conference was put under way at a meeting of laymen Monday afternoon, June 19, in the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis. The session was representative of all parts of the country. The organization of laymen is to include all men's organizations of the church. While the organization is to be conducted strictly by laymen the movement has the whole-hearted support of the clergy. A three-years' program is provided for in the movement which is now temporary. It is the purpose to have this temporary movement lead to a permanent institution among laymen. Plans were made to finance the movement by underwriting it for $15,000 each year for three years. H. M. Fillabrown, of Pawtucket, R. I., was chosen to lead the movement.

The movement was started Sunday at a meeting of laymen when a committee of five, consisting of Mr. Fillabrown; N. T. Bryant, of New York; F. H. Robinson, of Pittsburgh; Albert L. Scott, of Boston, and R. W. Swetland, of Hightstown, N. J., was appointed to draft plans for the organization.

This committee reported at the laymen's meeting Monday. Mr. Swetland presided and F. L. Carr, of Pittsburgh, was chosen secretary. The report of the committee of five was presented by Mr. Swetland. It was recommended that a laymen's organization to embrace all men's organizations of the church should be formed and it was specifically recommended by the committee that Mr. Fillabrown be named national chairman of the organization with authority to employ a paid executive secretary. The plans provided that the organization shall be financed by the laymen and that it shall not draw from other church funds.

The details of organization were left to a committee of fifteen which is to be composed of the original committee of five, before named, and D. C. Schull, Sioux City, Ia.; E. H. Rhodes, Toledo, O.; W. C. Coleman, Wichita, Kas.; James C. Colgate, New York; W. R. Conklin, New York; F. H. Freeman, Denver; E. H. Merriman, Los Angeles, and Smith Young, Lansing, Mich. Two members of the committee remain to be selected by the executive committeemen.

Mr. Fillabrown will call conferences of the committee from time to time. An executive secretary will be employed from among the laymen. Mr. Fillabrown said that the movement will not swallow up any other organizations of the church, but that its purpose will be the affiliation of all organizations among men in the church. It was the sentiment of the conference that the best results could not be reached by starting with a hurrah movement, but by steady effort, it was said, the plans will be worked out. The selection of headquarters will be made by the executive committee. It is proposed later to organize the movement by districts. It was said three years would be required to perfect the plans of the organization.

"Yes, But Evangelistic"

People sometimes forget for a moment that all our mission work, whether evangelistic, educational or medical, leads but to one great end—salvation in Christ. This fact is emphasized in the following letter from Miss L. M. Holbrook, in Tura, Assam, India:

"Our mission work has many phases, and each phase has for its ultimate object the bringing of man into vital, living relations with his Maker. In this letter I should like to take you back over our whole year's work, and show you how it all converges toward that one thing.

"Kindergarten: I sat on the floor with the children the last day of the school year. We could stick our fingers through the walls of the house anywhere, and the sticks and stones we used for counting fell through the floor. But conditions did not matter with them. They were eager to show me all they knew. What amazed me was the amount of Bible knowledge they

Impressions

By W. T. ELMORE

I BELIEVE that the Indianapolis Convention marked an epoch in the opportunity of the Northern Baptists. We now go before the world with the greatest slogan that any denomination ever could have. Notwithstanding changing conditions and beliefs we reaffirm that the New Testament is our absolute rule of faith and practice. We should use this to the utmost, while living in a day when this will appeal to the people.

This decision should give great joy to those of conservative belief. The New Testament is an absolutely conservative document. It does not present two sides on any one of the great fundamental doctrines. To find any liberal theology one must go outside the New Testament. Had we recommended any confession whatever we could not have had the strength of this position, for the confession would simply be a recommendation to the churches, while the very essence of our belief is that we accept the New Testament, and do not recommend it. If as a denomination we can unite upon this, and make the New Testament our rule, absolutely, of faith and practice, we shall find great unity coming among us, and we shall also find all the disciplinary force which we shall need in this connection. Any of our people of conservative views who were disappointed at the outcome of the action, should on second thought, feel profoundly grateful that the strongest possible position from the point of view of the conservative has been taken. It is greatly to be desired that we shall all unite upon this unshakable foundation.

The heartbreaking feature of the convention to me was to meet some of our best missionaries who are longing to go back to their field of labor and cannot be sent out for lack of means. It is costing as much to maintain these missionaries in America as it would on the foreign field; it is simply their passage money which is required. Some, if not all of these missionaries, hold conservative and fundamental beliefs, such as never could be questioned. If there are those among us who are giving specifics, outside of Baptist channels, why should not this money be transferred at once to such a worthy purpose as sending out these missionaries? Again I want to reiterate that my observation shows that the faith missions are wasteful and unsuccessful, as compared with our regular work. Let us support our own. Somewhere in our great missionary fields is a missionary or an object which will be agreeable to any Baptist. Every cent of our money should go to some one or more of our own causes.

possessed. They answered Bible questions from Genesis to Revelation as readily as they gave the sound of the letters from a to z. Bible characters were as real to them as people of their own flesh and blood. Only a kindergarten? Yes, but evangelistic.

"Mission Girls' School. Every teacher is a Christian, and during the year all the girls who were not Christians when they entered have been baptized. They have a prayer meeting by themselves each evening, before the study period. These girls are from all over the hills, and will be the wives and mothers of the next generation. Only a girls' school? Yes, but evangelistic.

"Hostel. There are fifty-three boys in the hostel. They attend all our church services, are members of our Sunday school, have a young men's meeting in our chapel every week, and go out in little bands to preach to the heathen who come to the Tura market. A Christian man told me that the first time he heard of Christ was at the market place where these boys were preaching. Only a hostel? Yes, but evangelistic.

"Village Schools. There are seventy-seven mission schools in the district, mostly lower primary schools, some of them five and six days' journey from Tura. Every teacher is a Christian man, and sends the results of his work, Christian boys and girls, to Tura for higher education. Only little village schools? Yes, but evangelistic.

Neither Disheartened Nor Dismayed

The Continuation Campaign Committee and the women of the country who have worked so loyally to secure $2,000,000 for the whole task of the denomination are neither disheartened nor dismayed by the fact that we did not reach the goal. We do not know how much we received and we may never know. Conditions which were beyond our control contributed largely to our seeming failure, and of necessity we felt the pressure of the financial situation throughout the country.

But there are times and circumstances when money is the smallest factor in an undertaking. The women of the country have "undertaken great things for God" and have been greatly blessed in the results which have been reached.

We have a complete organization from the district to the key woman in the local church, ready for our use in the campaign of the present year.

The women are strengthened, encouraged and inspired by their united effort of the past year, and are eager and enthusiastic for the coming campaign. No word of reluctance, no intimation of holding back, has come from any part of the country.

But better still, the victory through faith and prayer has given us a new hold upon God, a deeper realization of "the abundance of God," and an increased reliance upon his power. The prayer groups are still praying, more women will serve as intercessors this year than in the past year, and a closer fellowship with our Lord will be the foundation and inspiration of our work.

Stewardship will be stressed throughout the year in every church, and in thus building for the future as well as in working for the present needs, we go forward in the name of the Lord our God.

Continuation Campaign Committee

The Baptist

Christ Was Lifted Up

THE meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis was something more than one of the annual sessions of that body. In Denver we were a mile above the sea level—on a kind of mountain of vision. We saw visions and we dreamed dreams—dreams that were worthy of us as servants of Christ. Somehow we always feel ashamed of ourselves when we are tempted to speak of mistakes being made at Denver. Buffalo was different. Perhaps the less said about that meeting the better. At Des Moines we began to realize the meaning of a failure to attain the goals of our New World Movement program and there were many evidences of exposed nerves. It was hard to be good at Des Moines. The Indianapolis meeting was different in spite of our differences. It would be hard to find any body of men and women anywhere in all our history more courteous and considerate than those who had part in the deliberations in the Hoosier state.

Hundreds of delegates came to the Indiana capital filled with uncertainty. Rumors of attacks of one kind and another were rife. The Board of Promotion was to be scrapped. THE BAPTIST was to be sold. The offices of the convention were to be captured by some group. And what happened? The Board of Promotion was continued, along more simple lines it is true but the changes were recommended by its own committee. The debts, heavy as they are, were faced with courage, and provision made to liquidate them. The budget and program for the year were adopted without serious debate. Our leaders were given a vote of confidence. THE BAPTIST was not sold but on the other hand was pledged fuller cooperation. Divisive questions were frankly faced and votes taken showed such majorities that there can be no question as to the will of the convention. The denomination is, as far as one can see, more of a unit than it has been since the meeting in Denver. Verily, unseen spiritual powers were at work, for in no other way can the achievements of this meeting be accounted for.

Many felt that the convention should put itself on record by the adoption of some statement of belief. It was proposed that the body adopt the New Hampshire Confession and recommend it to the churches feeling the need of articles of faith. A substitute motion to the effect that "The Northern Baptist Convention affirm that the New Testament is the all sufficient ground of our faith and practice, and we need no other statement" was passed by a vote of two to one. Of course this is not what the mover of the original motion had in mind. As it is, what a magnified statement is that which Northern Baptists have put out to the world! We affirm again that we take the New Testament as our sufficient rule of faith and practice. It is true that the New Testament must be interpreted by each man for himself. Creeds also need interpretation. We may recite the same words and not mean the same thing.

A spirit of prayer and missionary enthusiasm characterized the program from beginning to end. At times this rose to the heights, and there was never a session from which it was absent. Characteristically, one of the objections made to the New Hampshire Confession was that no reference is made to the Great Commission of our Lord which indicates our chief business. May we not believe that this contribution of prayer with zeal to promote the Lord's work in all the world is responsible in part at least for the happy outcome of the convention?

Great and difficult is the task which this year confronts Northern Baptists. Many of the conditions which have depressed giving during the past twelve months are not yet past. Only the most faithful and heroic work and giving will bring us to Washington in 1923 with a satisfactory record. Our motives must reach as deep as the heart of God and our purposes as high as the purposes of God if we are to succeed. Back to the churches from the convention goes the call to go forward with Christ, to uplift him in all the world and we believe our churches will hear and heed. We are now on the second half of the New World Movement. May it prove that at Indianapolis we got our second wind, and that the events of the convention week brought to us the pledge of the divine Spirit during the year and of ultimate victory.

Reaffirmation of Our Editorial Policy

IN all actions at Indianapolis in which THE BAPTIST was concerned, it was made clear that the denomination wants its own newspaper directly related and responsible to itself.

THE BAPTIST came into being with the New World Movement. A survey of the periodical field made clear the inadequacy of the privately owned journals, the circulation of which was sectional. The launching of THE BAPTIST was a denominational experiment. It was necessary for its editors to feel their way. Mistakes have been made. At times it has doubtless been "colorless" and at other times too "colorful." It has, however, become an essential instrument in the pushing forward of our Baptist work.

Many questions were asked at Indianapolis bearing upon the editorial policy. The interest thus shown leads us to believe that there are many of our readers who would be glad to have a restatement of our editorial policies. THE BAPTIST is not the "private pulpit" of its editors. It is not for the propagation of their personal views. THE BAPTIST does not claim to represent the theological opinion of individuals or of groups as such. It is not a fundamentalist organ. It is not a modernist organ. It is a Baptist organ. In the words of John Marvin Dean, "To properly complete the New World Movement the denomination must have an organ. It must not be either a liberal or a radical fundamentalist organ, but an organ for all the genuine Baptist elements of the convention. There are enough important matters outside the controverted areas that can fill and engage the attention of the paper." We are in hearty accord with this statement. The major task of THE BAPTIST is not that of a theological journal or of a doctrinal debating society. THE BAPTIST cannot represent all of our Baptist people in their theological thinking. It can represent them in their practical work.

In the annual meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention our programs are launched, our missionary and educational tasks defined, and ways and means considered for making them effective. Thus, in the most representative and most democratic body among Northern Baptists, we find our task outlined for us. It is the mission of THE BAPTIST to make this program vital and effective in the local church where all denominational undertakings either succeed or fail. We stand committed to the missionary and educational enterprises of the denomination and to the attainment of our financial and spiritual goals.

THE BAPTIST does not go out of its way either to attack its enemies or to praise its friends. We hold that it is the business of THE BAPTIST to carry out the expressed will of the denomination as its mind is made known in the programs, policies and goals determined upon by the majority of our representatives. When that program is attacked and its policies endangered, THE BAPTIST feels called upon to declare the will of our Baptist people and defend their program. When programs are to be modified and policies changed as is often necessary, the changes should be brought about in an orderly way.

At Indianapolis it was proposed to sell THE BAPTIST. This proposal was referred to the Executive Committee of the convention. This committee after a thorough consideration of the problems, recommended that the paper should be retained and its circulation greatly increased. This recommendation was adopted by a large majority. We believe that the result at Indianapolis represents fairly our whole constituency.

Let us reiterate a statement which has been made hundreds of times in correspondence and in print. THE BAPTIST intends to treat fairly all types of Baptists among us. We cannot become the advocate of all shades of opinion. The Open Forum is open. This does not mean that everything submitted to us will be printed. There are times when discussions cease to be helpful. This is one of them. We hope that we may be permitted to give our readers a rest on the subjects of creeds and fundamentalism and modernism. We have hard work ahead of us and should conserve the strength of mind and heart for the task at hand. Indianapolis is now history. Washington is prophecy. Let us look forward to a year of brotherly cooperation and spiritual achievement, and to the best convention since Washington in 1907.

A Restatement of Financial Conditions

THE Finance Committee, the General Board of Promotion and the boards of the several affiliated organizations grappled almost day and night with the problems growing out of our denominational indebtedness. That so large a part of this indebtedness is owed to members of the denominational family has some advantages, although it does in no measure lessen our moral and legal obligations. For the benefit of those who are interested in the plans for the liquidation of our financial obligations, we are printing in full the restatement of financial conditions as adopted by the convention at Indianapolis.

1. That the books of the General Board of Promotion be closed as of April 30, 1922, on the basis of the Indianapolis revision (November 1921) and carry into the new accounts then to be opened the items representing the amount of the underdrawings of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board and schools and colleges.

2. That we regard these underdrawings as a general obligation of the denomination only to be liquidated in the manner hereinafter set forth.

3. That the denomination shall accept as its goal for the coming year $10,000,000, of distributable receipts and that this be apportioned among the various states in that proportion which their contributions during the last three years bear to the total contributions of the Convention.

4. That the first $7,000,000 received from the distributable receipts (being the average that has been received for each of the last two years) be distributed, thus assuring in each participating organization its full prorata share of all receipts, as and when received as follows:

Name of Organization	Proposed Percentage	Estimated Amt. of Distributable Rec. on basis of $7,000,000
1. A. B. F. M. S.16405	$1,148,350
2. W. A. B. F. M. S.05838	408,660
3. A. B. H. M. S.07263	508,410
4. W. A. B. H. M. S.04430	310,100
5. A. B. P. S.02677	187,390
6. M. & M. B. B.07835	548,450
7. Bd. of Ed.01715	120,050
8. Sch. & Colleges26571	1,859,970
9. N. B. Conv.00550	38,500
10. B. Y. P. U. A.00265	18,550
11. State Conv.13306	931,420
12. St. C. M. S.05601	392,070
13. Gen. Bd. of Pro.04249	297,430
14. Misc. & Contingent03295	230,650
	1.00000	$7,000,000

5. That of the next receipts received from distributable funds there be paid to the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board and the schools and colleges in proportion to their underdrawings until they shall have received 50 per cent of their total underdrawings.

6. That the distributable receipts beyond $7,000,000 and one-half of the underdrawings described in Paragraph 5 shall be distributed each year as on the percentage basis of the askings as set forth in column 6 of the "Comparative Statement of Distribution as of April 30, 1922" published by the Board of Promotion.

NOTE: This process to be repeated for two years with the understanding that should the full 50 per cent not be available the first year the balance of the amount shall be distributed the second year.

We shall have more to say concerning this matter in a later issue.

Dr. Cleaves Returns to Private Life

THE BAPTIST is called upon to announce the resignation of Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves as editor. He has had this matter under consideration for several months. A little less than three years ago when the special newspaper committee was in search for an editor they turned to a New England pastor. Dr. Cleaves began his work with the first issue of the paper in January, 1920. He has from the first been untiring in his efforts to make a paper which would serve the denomination in one of the most trying periods in its history. Only those who have been engaged in general denominational work during these years can fully understand the meaning of this statement. There has been perpetual uncertainty. No less than a full dozen committees have had to do with THE BAPTIST. Sometimes before the plans of one committee would appear above the denominational horizon. With patience becoming a saint the editor would reshape his plans and go on without complaint. He has at all times proved a true yoke-fellow and has the love and respect of all associated with him. Thousands will miss the editor and we hope that although he may return to the more peaceful work of the pastorate he may occasionally look back to the time when he had his full part in helping the denomination keep its bearings. Dr. Cleaves' last work on THE BAPTIST was to report the Indianapolis Convention. He will, with his family, spend the summer in the Maine woods. Those who desire to communicate with him may address him at South Casco, Maine.

Baptist Decorum

IF any man has doubts whether the seemingly light bonds of Baptist democracy can stand the strain of controversy under the most trying conditions, he should have witnessed the debate on the question of a creed on Friday afternoon, June 16, at Indianapolis.

The question at issue was believed to be of the most fundamental importance to the cause of Christianity the world around. The assembled thousands were moved by emotions and loyalties of the most intense and sacred kind. A nation-wide agitation had disturbed the denomination for years. Notice had been given to the world that the essential question at issue would be appealed for decision to the assembled delegates from all other Baptist churches of the North in this meeting. The Baptists of the world, the Christians of the world, were looking to this hour.

The tabernacle was filled, although the air was stiflingly hot. The people were tired. In spite of the good acoustics of the building, hearing was difficult for many.

The speakers had to strain their voices. A woman, Mrs. Montgomery, was presiding. Vast consequences to the denomination and the future leadership of high-minded and worthily ambitious men would depend on the vote to be taken at the close of the debate.

Under such circumstances, how did the convention behave?

The first striking feature was the rare self-possession, crowd control and mastery of parliamentary technique of President Montgomery and her subordination of the whole proceeding to the proprieties of Christian and fraternal good will.

The second was the conduct of the debaters. Every speaker had the task of condensing into an address of a few minutes an argument intellectually worthy of such an hour, having the utmost power of popular appeal combined with full parliamentary and Christian dignity. They met the test. Rarely has the highest standard of American church forums been more worthily sustained.

Nor did the audience fail to respond to the spirit of the occasion. Applause was proper and frequent. Occasional inadvertence of a speaker evoked a collective, but not boisterous, "No!" But there was no unusual interruption or disorder. The vote was taken in silence; and when the result was announced the triumphant party restrained any expression of triumph.

All joined in singing, "On Christ, the Solid Rock, I Stand," and in earnest prayer.

Northern Baptists have met a great crisis and need not be ashamed of the way they met it.

Dry Law a Boon to Labor

LABOR men are not clamoring for beer nor are they in favor of a change in the Volstead Law, according to many answers to a questionnaire now being received by the Union Signal, the official publication of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Taking issue with Samuel Gompers on labor's attitude towards prohibition, John G. Cooper, United States representative, Ohio, for nineteen years employed by the Pennsylvania railroad, and today a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers says, "It is not the working people of our country who are clamoring for the return of the liquor traffic. It is far from the facts when any one makes the statement that organized labor as a whole favors the return of wine and beer * * I do not challenge the right of Mr. Gompers, or any other leader, to express his own views and sentiments in favor of the repeal of the prohibition laws, but I do challenge the right of any one to speak for the thousands of law-abiding working men and women of our country who joined hands with others and banished this un-American institution from the land."

Warren S. Stone, Grand Chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, expressed it as his opinion that drunkenness has decreased at least 75 per cent among the workers. "In my study of the labor problems," says Mr. Stone, "I find a marked improvement in the number of men who are saving their money and who own their homes or are buying them. And I find a decided improvement in the home life of workers due to the fact that the women and children have more food, more clothing and better care in every way."

The Negro in America

Extracts from an address before the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis on June 20, 1922.

By ROBERT R. MOTON

I HAVE been asked to speak to you tonight about the Negro in America. I am sure that this great audience is already familiar with the story of how the Negro came to America: how against their will, some three hundred years ago, a small band of twenty weak and defenseless Negroes were brought to Jamestown, Va., on a little Dutch vessel and sold in slavery. Year by year the numbers increased. Others were brought here from Africa with all the horrors of the Middle passage. Generation after generation was born into bondage, until at the end of 250 years there were some 4,000,000 of these new Americans, differing from their fellows in race and color, but in many ways identified just as intimately with the history and development of their new country.

Black Labor an Asset

From the day that little Dutch ship left its cargo of slaves on the shores of America, the Negro has most profoundly affected the destiny of the American people. At the first the labor of the black man was the great asset in developing the material resources of the nation. It did not take long for the founders of the republic to discover that the ultimate progress of the nation depended upon its ability to take advantage of the vast stores of natural wealth with which this country was blessed. And it was soon found that the black man was the best and cheapest laborer that could be found anywhere. Indentured white labor rebelled and declared a strike. The red man could not be subdued. Only the black man was patient, willing, uncomplaining and diligent enough to bring returns on the investment and slavery was the simplest means of guaranteeing these returns.

Confidence and Affection

At the same time, the Negro became most intimately identified with home life in America. From the very beginning, there was some strange seductive influence about this simple black man that won both the confidence and affection of his master's household. Nothing in the history of America is more touching than the care, devotion and loyalty manifested by hundreds, even thousands of black men and women toward the families and especially the children of their masters. In one section of our country particularly is it true that the fondest memories and the proudest associations are those which cling about the noble souls who under black skins gave the best of which the human heart is capable toward others in all their own race and asked for nothing in return. Amid all the misery and misunderstanding of slavery, this one bright picture stands forth, the most touching and most pitiful in all the relations of white and black people in America. And these same relations constitute in large measure the foundation for all that we hope for of future peace and good will between these two races in our country.

And I scarcely need mention in this gathering the great part the black man has played in shaping both the history and political institutions of America. No war in which America has been engaged but found the black man bearing arms and bearing burdens as a valiant soldier of his country. And it made no difference whether he was bond or free, he was equally ready and eager to serve his country's need. Crispus Attucks on Boston Commons, Sergeant Carney at Fort Wagner, Peter Bigstaff at Carrizal, and Needham Roberts and Henry Johnson in the trenches of France typify alike the Negro's unwavering loyalty to the American flag.

A Creditable Record

And the record of the Negro is no less creditable in his contribution to

I Walk with Bare, Hushed Feet

I WALK with bare, hushed feet the ground
Ye tread with boldness shod;
I dare not fix with mete and bound
The love and power of God.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

No offering of my own I have,
Nor works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gifts He gave
And plead His love for love.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

America's achievements in art, in music, in letters, in science, invention and discovery. If time permitted, I would mention instance after instance and name after name indicating the Negro's part in developing these other phases of American life.

It is a fair question, however, whether America has benefited most from the presence of the Negro or the Negro has benefited most by coming to America. It is certainly true that in spite of all the disadvantages of slavery, the Negro has benefited immensely, in the last analysis, by his contact with the white man in America. One way of measuring the advantage to the Negro of his contact with American civilization is to be seen in the progress made since his emancipation. In sixty years, Negroes have acquired 22,000,000 acres of land, 600,000 homes and 45,000 churches. After less than sixty years of freedom, Negroes are now operating 78 banks, 100 insurance companies and 50,000 business enterprises with a combined capital of $150,000,000. In addition to this, there are within the race 60,000 professional men, 44,000 school teachers and more than 400 newspapers and magazines. At the same time, the general illiteracy of the race has been reduced to 26 per cent, due in large measure to the 400 normal schools and colleges established for Negroes.

Something of Value

And aside from economic and educational advantages, the Negro has gotten something of even greater value than these. The first is his knowledge of the English language which identifies him with the interests and sympathies of the two foremost nations upon the face of the earth, admitting him to a free intercourse which places at the disposal of the race all the advantages accumulated through the centuries of Anglo-Saxon civilization. And this same English language was the medium through which he has come into possession of the Bible and the Christian religion. When we come to sum it all up there is nothing that the Negro has gotten from America that can approach in value that which has come to him through the English Bible and the Christian religion. To these he owes the fortitude that enabled him to endure with infinite patience 250 years in bondage. And whatever of permanent value that may come to him in the future will depend for its permanency upon its infusion with the principles and teachings of the religion and teachings of Jesus Christ.

This statement of the progress of the Negro is not to assume that his success has been achieved without aid from others. Indeed, the very progress of the Negro in these sixty years is itself an eloquent testimonial to the strength and sincerity of the interest and sympathy which have come to the race from men and women of the white race, both North and South. This is especially true of the help that has come to the Negro from the churches of America and when that story is told in its fullness, large credit must be given to the American Baptist Home Missionary Society for its work in behalf of the Negro. Wherever the work of education is under discussion in its relation to Negro progress, the names of such institutions as Virginia Union University, Shaw University, Morehouse College, Roger Williams University and Spelman Seminary occupy a conspicuous place as among the leading institutions of learning for the Negro. At Tuskegee Institute we have especial reason to be grateful to two schools fostered by the American Baptist Home Missionary Society. I refer to Shaw University and the old Wayland Seminary. From Shaw University there came to Tuskegee Institute Dr. J. A. Kenney, medical director of the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital at Tuskegee Institute, one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the Negro race. And after graduating from Hampton, Booker Washington spent one year of study at Wayland Seminary.

Noble Spirits

Through these schools and other activities of this society, the Negro race was brought into contact with some of the finest and noblest spirits in all the history of America. I refer to such men as Dr. King and Dr. Crorey, to Dr. Morehouse, to Mr. McArthur and Dr. Sayles. In like manner, two generations of Negro womanhood bless the names of Miss Packard, Miss Giles and Miss Tapley, than whom no finer spirits have ever walked on earth. It is such men as these who have communicated their spirit and nobility of character to the men and women of our own race, such men as Professor Vassar, of Lynchburg, Va.; Professor Jones, of Richmond, Va.; Dr. Credit, of Philadelphia, Pa.; and Dr. Vass, of Raleigh, N. C., who for a long time was officially connected with this Missionary Society. Now of a younger generation, we have Dr. John Hope, president of Morehouse College, and Prof. Benjamin Hubert, whom we are proud to have at Tuskegee Institute. Thus the progress of the Negro in the sixty years since his emancipation reflects not only his own industry and thrift, his character and moral advancement, but, as well, the service and sacrifice, the devotion and self-surrender of a host of friends without whom this record would not have been possible.

Obedience to Law

GOV. J. W. Folk, who compelled St. Louis, St. Joseph and Kansas City to obey state Sunday laws and anti-gambling laws, said:

"We hear a good deal about what is commonly called the 'lid.' When they talk about taking off the 'lid' on Sunday, what do they mean? They mean to let the law be broken with impunity. If we take the 'lid' off on the Sunday law, can we not with equal propriety take the 'lid' off the larceny statute and the murder statute? Then we would have anarchy and no government at all. Let me tell you the greatest breach of good government lies in the fact that the laws are not enforced. * *

* The business man who fears to give his support to any movement towards law enforcement lest it should injure his business, is just as much a coward as the soldier on the battlefield who turns his back to the enemy and flees for safety."

The Negro race is proud of the record achieved in so short a space of time. But more important than the material progress of the race, or even its educational progress is the matter of how these two races, the white and black, get on together in America. And today the most important question that faces the two races is that of understanding each other and cooperating for their mutual welfare and progress. It is necessary in these days, especially in view of the large numbers of my race, that are coming out of the South and locating in various parts of the North, East and West, that the Negro be properly understood by those among whom he has gone to make his home. First of all, it should be understood that the Negro is not lacking in pride in his own race.

As Negro children learn more and more of the history of the race in this and other lands, they are becoming more and more proud of the record which that race has made. Surely no man need be ashamed of a race that is identified by such names as Pushkin, Dumas, Phylis Wheatley, Frederick Douglass and Booker Washington. And just because he is proud of his race, the Negro wants the full chance to make that peculiar contribution toward the progress of mankind that his race is fitted to make. The Negro wants to be free to serve and to help in every legitimate cause that concerns the welfare of this country and to identify himself with the interests and activities of whatever section in which he makes his home. In a word, the Negro is proud of his American citizenship and he asks nothing more than that which belongs by virtue of that claim to every other American citizen. Because he is an American citizen, he wants protection in life and property for himself and for his family. He wants comfort and convenience in travel. He wants sanitary surroundings for his home and a chance to educate his children according to the highest ideals of American citizenship.

Differing but Cooperating

My friends, here in America we have a great opportunity to serve the world; to show the rest of the world how two races may differ most widely in color and in social inheritance, and at the same time not only live together in peace, but cooperate with each other in bringing about a better civilization than has ever been achieved before. The world is watching us to see just how we solve this problem. I cannot tell you how it can be done, but I do know this much: that it can never be solved by mobs, by violence, by hatred or by ignorance. If there is any solution at all, and I think there is, it must lie in this: the patient, persistent approach in every day relations of the teachings of Jesus Christ "to do unto others as you would that they should do unto you; to love your enemies and to do good unto them that spitefully use you."

The Solution

When we in America, both black and white, have gotten enough self-control; have gotten enough of the grace of God in our hearts to practice these simple teachings of the lowly Nazarene toward one another not only will the race problem be solved, but all the problems that vex and harass a sick and erring humanity.

Annual Review of the Work of the Foreign Mission Society

As presented at the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis, June 15

By FREDERICK L. ANDERSON

WE have great reason to thank God (1) for the success granted us during the past year in the foreign mission fields. Our heavenly Father has kept his covenant with us. The divine spirit is moving on the face of the waters, stirring the hearts of the nations with his creative breath. Great movements Christward seem imminent. In many lands, multitudes are taking the kingdom of heaven by force. Native churches are making progress in the propagation of Christianity and in leading their own people. It is the best year in baptisms for a long time. A revival of evangelism, largely under native auspices, begins to manifest itself. Wonderful opportunities open before us all over the world. There is no doubt about it—the standards of the King march on. The only question is, Shall the Baptist regiment lag behind?

Our main business is to create and build up, so far as it depends on human power, a self-supporting, self-propagating and self-directing native church, a church endowed with such spiritual resources, such educated leadership and such heavenly wisdom that it will be able, under God, to pull down all the strongholds of Satan in those lands where he has had his seat for centuries, and to set up in their place the kingdom of God. Only when these native churches are able to walk alone and do their task and win their victory without our further help, will our business in these lands be at an end. Every step toward that goal is progress and nothing else is.

Contributions Increase Threefold

The most important item here is that our missionaries everywhere are beginning to see this clearly and definitely and to press forward toward this objective courageously. In the field on the Congo, native Christians have contributed three times as much as four years ago, and enable us notably to reduce our appropriations for that sector of our line. Our Japanese Baptists in five years have increased their gifts more than threefold and the number of self-supporting churches is constantly growing. In East China, a great middle school has been founded at Dinghae, built and endowed almost entirely by Christian and non-Christian Chinese, who have already contributed more than $100,000 for the erection of building and $200,000 for endowment. These are only a few outstanding illustrations. About one-half our native churches are wholly self-supporting.

Not many years ago, our missionaries had to push our native Christians forward into leadership, when they had any capable of leading. Now, as a consequence of our policy of education and the rising tide of nationality, we are beginning to see capable native Christians in large numbers, and, thanks be to God, they are demanding the direction of the Christian enterprise in their lands, rather than being begged to undertake it. This involves some difficulties and dangers to be sure, but it is a definite advance of the utmost value. China, Japan and India desire an indigenous Christian movement in native hands, and are bound to take the curse of "foreignism" off the universal Christian faith. It is not the white man's religion, but belongs equally to all, yellow, black, brown, white or red. In Jesus, men see God, whatever their race may be. The religion of the West can never conquer China, but Chinese Christianity, professed, lived, moulded, expressed and managed by Chinese Christians can. So we rejoice in Dr. Chiba, president of our Theological Seminary, Japan, and Principal Sakota, the talented head of our great Mabie Memorial School in Yokohama, in Dr. Chen, just elected vice-principal of Shanghai College, in the appointment of Mr. Mohapatra, a leading Christian lawyer, to take charge of the Santipore field in Bengal Orissa, and in the increasing admission of native Christians into the faculties of our schools and into the boards, conventions, and counsels of the missions.

The Naked, Homeless, Starving

As our Savior healed the bodies of men as well as their souls, and never forgot their need for clothes and shelter and daily bread, the law which knits us to him in indissoluble bonds has not allowed us to forget the naked, the homeless and the starving. During the past year, we have helped the war-stricken in Belgium, France, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Russia and the Baltic states. Baptists, and many others, some in cold and churchless lands in Europe, will remember even longer than our own people the $1,000,000 cargo of the ship that was filled in fellowship, and bless us for our mercy and loving kindness to them in Jesus Christ, our Lord. The good we did by that act of love will never cease to spread in ever-widening circles.

Best of all, is the news of great revivals in the Congo, in Assam, in the far-off borderland of Burma and China, where, as in the case of the Karens nearly a century ago, a nation is being born in a day and by the quickening of the Spirit Japan and China, Czechoslovakia and the Baltic states are proving fallow Baptist ground, and, most wonderful of all, when the curtain at last goes up and we see our Russian brethren, we find that since the great war began they have increased by leaps and bounds (the most rapid increase known in Baptist history) till now they constitute one of the greatest Baptist bodies in the world comparable in membership with this convention. Yet sadness mingles with our joy, for who will care for all these thousands of new disciples and teach them all things which Jesus has commanded? Most of them are very ignorant, have no Christian background, do not know even how to read or write. Who will enlighten, guide and father them? Shall we reap the whitening field and then let the reaped grain rot on the ground? This is the poignant anxiety of those who know what it all means and yet are unable to send the necessary missionaries.

While in general things are exceptionally hopeful in our work beyond the sea, at home, if debt is bad, we have had the worst year in a lifetime. While we would not exaggerate it, we would not conceal it.

This is not the time for soft words or nicely balanced phrases. Our situation is more than serious, it is more than dangerous. We have already suffered the greatest defeat of a generation and are at this moment retiring in the presence of an enemy. Heathenism and infidelity rejoice and our Baptist saints are sad at heart. But, as we said, we must not exaggerate. If it is a defeat, it is not a disaster. It may be a retreat, but it is not a rout. Some very precious things must be abandoned, but all is not lost. There is no reason for panic or lowering of morale. If we must retire, let us retire in good order, giving up no foot of ground that we can retain, choosing still, so far as may be, what we shall surrender, keeping all the strongest points in the line if possible, giving way with a grim determination to take it all again and soon, for our King.

I address the men and the women who have wrestled in prayer for the cause, who have made the greatest and most blessed sacrifices of time and life and money that this retirement should not occur. If all had prayed and given and worked as you have we would have a different tale to tell. Pluck up courage, brave hearts. We have great resources still. We have the gospel and prayer and God. We have hundreds of thousands devoted to this business of the Master. We have hundreds of missionaries. We have thousands of native Christians. We have a campaign of labor and victory behind with its innumerable precious lessons and memories. Though we should retire yet we are still far ahead of where we were twenty years ago. We are only giving up our latest conquests.

Not One Inch More!

But it is not in the Christian blood to retreat. For a century Baptists have had the habit of victory. It hurts us terribly to give up and to abandon. We cannot have it and we ought not to have it. We must not retreat one single inch more. Let us highly resolve here at Indianapolis: Not one inch more! Let us stand like the French at Verdun and cry: "They shall not pass!" Our backs are to the wall, but, in God's name, let the next move be forward and forward all together along the line!

And now, dear comrades, in calmer mood, let us review our situation and see just where we are and what we are to do. In that first year after Denver, when we supposed that we could make no canvass lest it hurt the Great Drive that was coming, we rolled up a debt of $808,000. That is the nub of the whole business. The next year, the year after the Great Drive, when the Baptists so gloriously paid 92 per cent of their pledges, we reduced the debt $119,000 and it stood at $689,000. Then came this last year when, on account of financial depression, we paid much less than we paid last year and the result is that we must report a debt of $914,000 today, an increase of $225,000 over what we reported last year. That debt is not what is vulgarly called a dead horse. That money was all spent for the preaching of the gospel, the education of our native

Christians and their leaders, for hospitals for the sick, the passage and salaries of missionaries and for the administration of our work. Let us not forget and remember too, that since November in no uncertain words we have told our people again and again that we should land just where we are, if receipts did not increase in proportion to those of last year. Yet some thought we would somehow muddle through, but we cannot do that with a debt of $914,000.

Cutting According to Our Cloth

Now what was your Board to do when it learned the outcome of the year? First of all, we felt compelled to accept the decision of the denomination. It either could not, or at least did not, pay the money needed to maintain our present line. Carefully scrutinizing the financial and denominational situation, we did not feel justified in supposing that we should receive more this coming year than we did in the year just closed. We hope for more, we really expect it but we cannot bank on it. Consequently we cut our garment according to our cloth and on the advice of the finance committee of the convention adopted for the coming year a budget 25 per cent less than that of last year. But what should we do about the debt? We cannot ignore it. To allow it to increase is to imperil the whole enterprise. We therefore determined to begin to pay it, cost what it might. So we put in our 75 per cent budget a $100,000 payment on our debt. This reduces the budget even below a 75 per cent basis. And if we continue on this plan, it will be nine years before the debt is paid. I have been urged to say specifically just what such a reduction would mean to our work, but that is impossible to say. We do not yet have all the data necessary, but hope to work the problem out before summer and will let the denomination know everything just as soon as we can. Of course it means the closing of some hospitals and schools, the temporary abandonment of some stations, the cutting down of our evangelistic force, the keeping at home of other missionaries now on furlough, a great reduction in the number of new missionaries sent out. In fact, reductions in all these items have been made in the past years to the amount of nearly $100,000 under pressure of an impending lack of funds. To sum it all up, this is the most extensive retrenchment ever made in the history of the society in one year.

As I have just said, we cannot specify the items of the cut we shall have to make as yet, but we have a policy. If we are to retreat we shall retreat in good order with as little damage as possible to our work. We shall not lose our heads, but use them as never before as the situation grows more difficult.

In this unprecedented emergency I am happy to say that the missions and the Board have taken hold of the situation with firmness and courage, and that they see eye to eye on the policies to be preserved. We have no idea of making a horizontal cut of 25 per cent, that is, cutting off 25 per cent of the hospitals, 25 per cent of the schools, 25 per cent of the native workers, or of reducing appropriations to the several units 25 per cent all around. That would be unintelligent and barbarous butchery of our work, childish and panic-born. Better give up some units of our work entirely than half starve it all. Our great central strongholds we shall maintain and sustain at any cost: fruitful fields will have the preference over those which have stubbornly rejected the gospel. Where great doors of opportunity are swinging widely open we shall enter in. Where thousands of new converts await our care, we shall even increase appropriations at the expense of less hopeful stations. Above all, we shall be careful to impair as little as possible our native organization, the goal of all our work, the product of decades of saintly labor, the hope of the future. Moreover, we have decided to continue to send out some new missionaries to peculiarly needy points. With all this there has been and will be a rigid review of every item of expenditure at home and abroad with a view to every reasonable economy.

Finally we are determined to spend the large, though reduced, sum which you have given us, in the way which will be most productive. You must leave the details of that to the wisdom of the men whom you select to manage the business. We have heard occasional criticisms of the fact that we have sent Secretary Lerrigo to Africa, Secretary Robbins to India and Secretary Franklin to China and Japan in this year of financial distress. It was just because we were facing crises that we sent our secretaries to these fields. We must set our house in order. We must have the latest and most reliable information of the exact status of affairs in the field before we adopt reduced budgets. We must see the whole thing through the eyes of our experts who have lately been overseas. This would have been reason enough to justify these laborious journeys, but special emergencies also demanded them. The Congo mission had not had a secretarial visit since its foundation in 1881 and things were in such a state there that the Congo missionaries demanded the calm and unbiased judgment of the secretary. As the result of this visit, problems of the most serious nature were settled and settled right. The great non-cooperative movement in India under Ghandi and the new nationalistic hopes and aspirations had so utterly unsettled all the ordinary life of India and had originated so many new questions of attitude and relationship that the visit of a secretary was absolutely necessary, for a secretary is able to be independent and to look on problems as a whole as the ordinary station missionary or teacher is not. The Chinese Christian Conference at Shanghai in May was of such epoch-making importance to our whole future in China that we did not dare to let it pass without the pressure and the guiding and steadying hand of our secretary.

These journeys cost money, of course. Not so much as some think, but their price is more than paid for in the savings which result and the interest in our missions which they excite. Within two weeks after his return, Secretary Lerrigo received, almost unsolicited, more money for Africa than his trip cost, and money that could not have come to us except for that journey. My own trip to Japan in 1919 paid for itself many times over and so it is with them all. Money so spent is good investment. What business firm, having factories in every part of the United States, Canada and Mexico, would think of allowing them to go for years unvisited by a member of the firm or would dream that the expenses of such a journey were a waste of money? The Methodists and Episcopalians are wiser than we. They keep bishops in all those Asiatic lands—four Methodist bishops in China and four more in India, seventeen in all in foreign work, and they are steadily advancing at a pace faster than ours in consequence.

An Open Door

Now our Board sees that one of our greatest opportunities to advance the cause of Christ and your beloved Baptist brotherhood lies in Central Europe and Russia. Do you realize that a new Protestant Reformation has burst into flame in Czecho-Slovakia, Hungary, Roumania, the Baltic states and Russia? Do you realize that Russian Baptists have increased five and eightfold since 1914? Do you realize that Baptists in Europe are often despised and persecuted and that they need nothing so much as the appearance of powerful friends in their behalf to give them standing and opportunity? We have no real missionaries in Europe, but we are sending this summer to Europe three of our foremost preachers to aid, encourage and stimulate our Baptist brethren there, to form ties of fellowship and association and to help them in their fight for religious liberty and for popular recognition. They need to know that our Northern Baptists are their friends, will stand by them, and that, perchance, they may bring them some spiritual gift and guidance. There has been some criticism of this mission, but our Board after three times reviewing the question is now unanimous that this is one of our great opportunities. The need and the crises are now. Next year is too late. Even in the reduced budget, you give us $75,000 for Europe. We are sure that $2,500 of it could be spent in no more fruitful way than this. We are convinced, too, that if our Czecho-Slovak, or Polish, and our Baltic brethren could vote, they would unanimously decide as we have. Letters already received prove that beyond a doubt. Let us not send Drs. Abernethy, Jones and Taylor grudgingly, but with a cheer. It will be a long, hard and somewhat dangerous journey, especially for those who go farther East, but these brethren are convinced as the Board is that it is a task of the utmost value for the future of our Baptist work in Europe.

Russia is opening its doors. We have already sent in 60,000 Bibles and 40,000 Testaments. Next year, when we better know conditions and personnel, we must send our emissary to that vast land, and must be represented in the great councils of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm. We may have suffered a reverse, but we refuse to act as if we were moribund. With eyes open and heads erect, we propose yet to seize supreme opportunities, which all the world can see and for which our Baptist offspring would never cease to blame us, if we let them slip. We must still take long and broad views and the denomination must trust the wisdom and integrity of the Board to which they have given over the administration of their foreign mission funds.

And this leads me to say in conclusion that in this most difficult and trying year, with a Board representing every type of Northern Baptists, we have been blessed with an unbroken spirit of the loveliest friendship and harmony. Our staff likewise is a true band of brothers, noble and able men, Christian statesmen, true to Christ and our Baptist heritage, with definite policies which they are carrying out with firmness and wisdom. Board and staff work together for the spread of the Savior's Kingdom like true yoke-fellows.

We wish also to assure the society of the abiding loyalty of our Board and staff and of our missionaries, to the gospel and the Savior, to the Bible and the Cross, to the great, vital, conquering evangelical faith. It hurts us to think that any of our brethren have ever doubted us, or that it seems necessary to make such a statement.

And now what can each one of us do in the coming year to retrieve our defeat of 1921-22? We can, every one of us, take all this to heart, we can make this sorrow of our great Captain our own sorrow, and we can each of us resolve that we will not lose our faith or courage, nor let any one else lose his. Are we down-hearted? NO. Our troubles are only temporary. We shall advance again, and, please God, we shall retrieve ourselves this year. We may begin with the cry, "Not one inch more! Retreat ends here!" But we must go on to sing in mighty chorus, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Ours is a cause which cannot long know defeat. Too many prayers and tears, too much sacrifice of love and life have hallowed it, it lies too deep in our hearts, and is too firmly founded in the plan and promises of God for us to suppose that our victorious march is really checked. The lives of women and little children, the fate of millions of men, the story of generations yet unborn, the future of the world and the victory of the living and reigning Christ are all involved in your faith and faithfulness, and mine. Let every one resolve that with this spirit of courage and hope in God, we shall begin in June and not in February to press the battle all along the line.

Second, "the hastily convened" meeting of the church was attended by nearly 200 members of the church, especial and successful effort having been made to secure the attendance of any who might object to Mrs. McPherson's joining the church, or to the call of the council; and the election to membership and call of the council was by unanimous vote. The "telegraphic communication" was an expected message to the church stating the only date that she had open for the occasion. The church proceeded with scrupulous regard for its constitution and by-laws. The procedure was hasty, but in no wise irregular, nor unprecedented. The circumstances called for haste.

Further, there was time for the pastor and three deacons to visit headquarters, and receive positive and definite assurance that there could be no possible objection from the "denominational representatives" to Mrs. McPherson's ordination, which assurance was betrayed at the council.

It is also true—and no "misapprehension" of the truth—that Mrs. McPherson is an "ordained minister of the Baptist denomination, qualified to fill a pulpit of the church whether in San Jose, or Bangkok, Siam." She is a member of a Baptist church, ordained by that church, in spite of unwarranted invasion of its councils by a preconcerted arrangement of self-appointed "denominational representatives" who occupied 90 per cent of the time of the council in its public examination, and especially in its executive session.

Familiarity with Bible

Mr. Coats says that the candidate had the most meagre acquaintance with the "historic faith of the Baptists," and gave "no evidence of any doctrinal change of views to warrant her affiliation with the Baptist denomination." However meagre her knowledge of historic Baptist faith may have been she demonstrated a confusing familiarity with the fountain head of Christian faith, for one of the liberal graduates of the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School remarked with emphatic disapproval that "she did not do a thing but throw the Bible at us." Her answer as to her reason for desire to affiliate with the Baptist denomination (asked four times by the brethren who were so intent on pillorying that they could not hear her replies to their questions) was that her fourteen years of intense Bible study, and her acquaintance with churches had led her to the conviction that the Baptist churches were nearer the New Testament type, and truer to New Testament teaching, than those of any other denomination. She stated explicitly her belief that baptism is the immersion in water of persons who have previously been regenerated by the Spirit of God through faith in the gospel. That in itself might appear to be a doctrinal view sufficient to warrant her desire to affiliate with the denomination. In fact she gave a clear, explicit and easily understood statement of her faith in the fundamentals of revealed truth. Only once did she waver, and that was when a pitiable attempt was made to involve her in the theological niceties of definitions of the difference between grace and faith, etc.

The tenor of the article and your editorial comment as to the purpose of Dr. Hill and Mr. Coats in forwarding it would lead your constituency to believe that an effort had been made by Mrs. McPherson

Concerning the Ordination of Mrs. McPherson

Editor BAPTIST,
Chicago, Ill.

May 23, 1922.

Dear Brother:

Will you allow us the columns of THE BAPTIST, to correct several statements made by Mr. Coats in his report, of the ordination of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, recently held in the First Baptist Church, San Jose, Calif.? Also to refute certain implications and inferences which Mr. Coats not only draws for himself, but reads into the action of the church, in calling the council, and the report which was published in the San Jose Mercury Herald.

In the first place, there was no "implication" whatever that the "ordination which took place in the evening meant regular and official enforcement of all," or any of Mrs. McPherson's interpretation and practice of biblical teaching concerning divine healing. There was a simple statement of fact that she was ordained by the First Baptist Church, to the ministry. It is not only not true, but it is definitely untrue that "according to the church records, it had been first proposed to invite to the council only Baptist churches holding what is called the 'full gospel.'" What was discussed in the church meeting was the advisability of inviting one church within the association which was known to be openly hostile to the full gospel. This was part of a discussion that occurred within the church councils, and of which the ordaining council needed to take no notice, much less publish broadcast by "revilers."

Regarding all the "indications" which "suggested" the purpose of the First Baptist Church of San Jose to "pre-judge the issue," it may be said that the church had adjudged Mrs. McPherson a proper subject for ordination, and as a matter of fact did ordain her. About the matter of "pre-judging the issue" on the part of the moderator and the "denominational representatives" (with the exception of the "minor official") there can be no question. The moderator sent a pre-judicial, pre-council special delivery letter to every church in the San Jose Association which communication he sent "as moderator." And the denominational secretaries, representatives of the Berkeley Divinity School, and certain resident and acting pastors of churches about San Francisco Bay are known to have held a pre-council conference at Baptist headquarters in San Francisco, where they determined on a procedure to invade the council in a body, dominate its counsels, and determine its action. This conference was called by a general secretary from New York in the employ of the Northern Baptist Convention, evidently as a part of his secretarial prerogative. Their attitude of antagonism to the candidate was so marked as to elicit the sympathy of the audience and result in the applause of which Mr. Coats complains, and which did on several occasions greet her ready, sensible and biblical answers to their questions.

It is true that "the ordination of Mrs. McPherson was not the action of the Baptist denomination." We understand that the denomination does not function in ordinations. It is true that Mrs. McPherson was ordained by the only body within the denomination which has the power to ordain a Baptist minister. It is further true that during her great campaign in San Francisco, where she won the open support and cooperation of the only resident Baptist ministers, and of the most eminent Presbyterian, Congregational and Methodist ministers, as well as the Church Federation, she was gladly and proudly recognized by the two great Baptist churches, with urgent invitations to fill their pulpits, and that she accepted the invitation to preach in one of them, greatly to the profit and delight of the church.

As to the "haste with which the council was convened," it may be replied: First, that every church had a prayer meeting and a Sunday morning service in which to appoint delegates, and that as a matter of fact, it was by far the largest council in point of attendance held in Northern California during the writer's experience, running back nearly twelve years. There was plenty of time for organized opposition, both within and without the association. The moderator came with his "His-

By ARTHUR W. CLEAVES

Saturday Morning

SATURDAY'S sessions were almost entirely given over to convention business. Indeed there were few sessions at which important matters were not considered, making it likely that this convention will be remembered among other things for the multitude of its practical accomplishments. Early in the morning D. C. Shull reported for the finance committee of the convention, and presented among other things the suggested budget for the new year with the explanation that this budget represents a straight 25 per cent cut over the budget of last year. Items on this budget follow:

Foreign Mission Society.....	$ 1,446,215
Woman's Foreign Society.....	502,553
Home Mission Society.....	698,899
Woman's Home Society.....	362,553
Publication Society.....	245,562
M. and M. Board.....	734,565
Board of Education.....	127,500
Northern Baptist Convention.....	39,650
($15,000,000 designated for Federal Council)
Board of Promotion.....	396,600
Schools and Colleges.....	1,859,970
B. Y. P. U. A.....	20,000
State Conventions.....	1,385,970
City Mission Societies.....	416,617
Miscellaneous and Contingent
Underdrawings, designated gifts, etc.....	3,000,000
Total.....	$11,286,297

After it had been voted that an item of $25,000 for the Federal Council should be made a separate item, legal provision being made that the convention shall be liable for no more, the report of the committee, with its supplemental statement, was adopted.

The Executive Committee reported that in its judgment the Board of Promotion should continue to publish THE BAPTIST and with increased energy, and this was voted by a very large majority.

Election of Officers

The balance of the morning was taken up by the presentation of various reports and the election of officers. The number of ballots cast was 2,167. Among these were 338 scattering ballots, while 1,664 persons voted the straight ticket. Rev. F. E. Taylor, of Indianapolis, received 1,829 ballots as president of the convention. The officers elected were as follows:

Northern Baptist Convention: Officers: Pres., Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, Indiana; first vice-pres., Corwin S. Shank, Washington; second vice-pres., Rev. F. M. Goodchild, New York; corres. secy., Rev. W. C. Bitting, Missouri; rec. secy., Rev. M. A. Levy, Massachusetts; statistical secy., Rev. C. A. Walker, Pennsylvania; treas., Frank L. Miner, Iowa. Executive Committee of N. B. C.: Mrs. J. A. Lichty, Pennsylvania; Rev. J. A. Earl, Minnesota; Mrs. J. M. Brough, California; Geo. Earl, Minnesota; Rev. G. A. Briggs, New York; Rev. J. C. Hazen, Illinois; E. J. Steinberg, Wisconsin; W. W. Everett, District of Columbia; Mrs. E. C. Herrick, Massachusetts; Geo. Prescott, Michigan.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: Officers: Pres., Rev. W. S. Abernethy, District of Columbia; first vice-pres., F. T. Field, Massachusetts; second vice-pres., Rev. J. Gravett, Colorado; rec. secy., Rev. W. B. Lippard, New York; treas., G. B. Huntington, New York. Board of Managers, Term Expiring 1925: Rev. M. J. Twomey, New Jersey; H. M. Fillebrown, Rhode Island; W. A. Jameson, New York; Rev. C. H. Jones, Pennsylvania; C. White, Connecticut.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: Officers: Pres., Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, New York; hon. vice-pres., Mrs. A. MacLeish, Illinois (nominated by request of W. A. B. F. M. S.); administrative vice-pres., Mrs. H. E. Goodman, Illinois; foreign vice-pres., Mrs. N. R. Wood, Massachusetts; rec. secy., Mrs. T. E. Adams, Ohio. Members at Large: Mrs.

Board of Managers, Term Expires 1925 (Class 3): Mrs. W. H. Mount, New Jersey; Mrs. H. F. Googins, Illinois; Mrs. S. T. Ford, Illinois; Miss M. L. Howard, Connecticut; Mrs. H. O. Dobson, New York; Mrs. M. J. Twomey, New Jersey; Mrs. H. E. Morrow, New York; Mrs. L. C. Walker, Illinois; Miss M. E. Harris, Illinois.

American Baptist Publication Society: Officers: Pres., L. S. Chapman, New York; vice-pres., Rev. J. J. Ross, Illinois; vice-pres., Rev. C. N. Arbuckle, Massachusetts; corres. secy., Rev. G. N. Brink, Pennsylvania; rec. secy., Rev. W. H. Main, Pennsylvania; treas., G. L. Estabrook, Pennsylvania. Board of Managers, Term to Expire 1924: E. L. Taylor, Pennsylvania; H. L. Jenkins, Pennsylvania; Rev. E. L. Dakin, West Virginia. Term to Expire 1925: Rev. G. G. Johnson, District of Columbia; E. B. Collmer, Pennsylvania; H. K. Macfarlane, Pennsylvania; J. D. Rhoades, Ohio; L. L. Rue, Pennsylvania; J. E. Sagebeer, Pennsylvania; Prof. R. W. Swetland, New Jersey.

It was voted that the convention shall meet in 1923 in Washington, D. C. The general understanding is that in 1924 it will meet in Philadelphia and in 1925 in Seattle, Wash.

The most significant action taken in the afternoon was a vote to authorize the Executive Committee to appoint a committee to study the situation and to formulate a suggested program for the churches following the completion of New World Movement.

The evening of Saturday saw the banquets of the Brotherhood Federation and of the women, although it is probable that the great majority of the delegates were only too glad to take a rest after the heat and the arduous activities of the week. Certain it is that late in the afternoon a very large delegation of the men was to be found at the baseball park.

Sunday Morning

The convention sermon was preached on Sunday morning by Rev. A. W. Beaven, pastor of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., who spoke on "The Imperial Commission," his text being, "Go ye and disciple all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the end of the world." He said in part:

"Three things are elemental:

"(1) The missionary spirit is not an incident of the gospel. It is a fundamental. The missionary movement is rooted in the heart of God. The missionary spirit is one. There may be diversity of manifestation, but there is unity of the driving power.

"(2) The Christian movement is and always must be a movement of conquest. It must be one of constant expansion. The commission is intolerant of retreat. The program of Jesus is intended to meet the needs of the world.

"(3) It outlines also a program which is intensive. Christianity must extend not only laterally but also perpendicularly.

His Lamps

"Ye are the light of the world."

HIS lamps are we,
To shine where He shall say;
And lamps are not for sunny rooms,
Nor for the light of day;
But for dark places of the earth,
Where shame and wrong and crime have birth
And for the murky twilight gray,
Where wandering sheep have gone astray
And where the lamp of faith grows dim,
And souls are groping after Him.
And as sometimes a flame we see,
Clear shining, through the night
So dark we cannot see the lamp—
But only see the light,
So may we shine, His love the flame,
That men may glorify His name.

American Baptist Home Mission Society: Officers: Pres., F. W. Freeman, Colorado; first vice-pres., F. P. Beaver, Ohio; second vice-pres., I. W. Carpenter, Nebraska; third vice-pres., Rev. C. W. Kemper, Michigan; rec. secy., Rev. Alfred E. Isaac, New York. Board of Managers, Term Expiring 1925: Mrs. I. C. O'Hara, Pennsylvania; D. G. Garabrant, New Jersey; W. B. Hale, New York; Rev. Frederick Lent, New York; Rev. J. M. Moore, New York; Rev. C. W. Petty, Pennsylvania; C. H. Prescott, Ohio; Rev. R. M. Traver, New Jersey; Prof. R. M. Vaughan, Massachusetts.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society: Officers: Pres., Mrs. G. W. Coleman, Massachusetts; first vice-pres., Mrs. G. C. Moor, New York; second vice-pres., Mrs. J. Nuveen, Illinois; third vice-pres., Miss R. Shipley, Ohio; fourth vice-pres., Mrs. H. W. Foster, Washington; fifth vice-pres., Mrs. G. W. Cassidy, Iowa; rec. secy., Mrs. S. C. Jennings, Illinois.

The quality of Christianity is the guarantee of the presence of Jesus. We are not only to teach people what Jesus taught, but to teach them to observe what Jesus taught.

"There is money enough in the denomination for advance work. The program is not too large. Our leaders with their program may be ahead of us but they are far behind the Christ. The same tides which mark retreat on the foreign field will mark also loss of morale and of spiritual life at home.

Whose Cause?

"We are in the midst of a great company of witnesses who have carried the flaming cross in their hearts and gone with it into danger and difficulty. Whose cause is this, theirs or ours? Is there any line of division among us? Certainly there is no word of Jesus which releases us from the obligation.

"We are to go and disciple all nations. This of course means that we are to bring individuals to such a consciousness of Jesus as Savior that he may have his way in them. But this is not all. We are beginning to think internationally. Besides such individual work for individuals, a nation that is strong must learn to bear the burdens of weak nations. The idea that weak nations are meant to be exploited is to be downed. If America sits alone in the midst of a wrecked world, indifferent to its needs, she is building about her a wall of hate and suspicion. The missionary program stands over against the war program. If the missionary program goes down, the war program goes up. Let Baptists adopt a program which shall say not only that the nation shall spend less money for war, but also that we shall spend more money for a missionary program, making for peace.

"We need this program in America. We are to teach people to observe in all their relationships the things that Jesus commanded.

"In every man there is the need of balance between the power and the control systems. His moral ideals must be strong enough to keep in check his desires and unlawful impulses. America's power system has gone up mightily; has America's control system gone up, to meet it? On the contrary, ideals have been sinking. What will happen if our power keeps on going up and our ideals keep on going down? America, beware lest you fight your God!

"Because in this convention we want unity, we must take this commission to our hearts. We all want the great cause to be set forward. We share a common friend, deliverance from a great peril, a great common hope, a great common task. For all differences Jesus offered a valuable solution. When we see the devil having his way, and look from this into the face of Christ and hear him say, 'Go ye, go ye,' then brother to brother, however much men may differ, says, 'Come on, let's do the task.'

"Lo, I am with you all the way.' We are not going alone. We are all going from here back to our task with One like unto the Son of God."

Sunday Afternoon

One of the strongest and most far-reaching sessions of the convention was the one held on Sunday afternoon. This was primarily a young people's session and the young people from Indianapolis and nearby towns were present in large numbers. The program was arranged under the auspices of the Baptist Young People's Union of America and our general secretary, Dr. James Asa White, presided.

An outstanding feature of this session was the music given by the Cadle Choir. We were thrilled and inspired as we listened to the gospel message which they brought to us in song.

"Ted" Adams, as a representative of the "Student Fellowship for Christian Life Service," presented in a very forceful way the place and need of this organization in the student life of our country.

The "Call to St. Paul" was sounded by Rev. Mark F. Sanborn of Minneapolis. Mr. Sanborn reminded us of the call to service which Moses received out of the burning bush and he compared this experience of Moses with that experienced by our young people in such a convention as the one to be held in St. Paul. It will be the turning point in the lives of many of our young people and he urged the delegates of the Northern Baptist Convention to see that the young people of our denomination were sent to St. Paul, where they would receive the impress of this great convention. Burned into our hearts was the slogan, "Forward with Christ to St. Paul."

In her inimitable way, Miss Jessie Burrall brought us a short but searching message. We are glad we are to hear more from Miss Burrall at St. Paul.

Dr. W. S. Abernethy, of Washington, D. C., beloved by our Baptist young people, brought us a message of "Life, a Hundredfold." He told us that to truly live we must adjust ourselves to our surroundings and to our tasks; to glorify our tasks by serving our Master, even in our daily work. Dr. Abernethy urged us to clear the channels of our lives, that the Holy Spirit might work through us. "All power" will be given unto us if we are willing to pay this price.

The "irresistible" Joseph Taylor, of West China, next brought a forceful message to the youth of our great denomination from the youth of China. "I do not fear for the future of Christianity in China," said Dr. Taylor, "but I do fear for the present." He impressed us with the fact that Christianity can never have its way with China until China has had her way with Christianity. When Christianity can be put through a process of Chinese thought and experience then can it become native. The young people of China must put Christianity to the test in their own experience and environment. When they have done this they will have a contribution to make to us. It is a Chinese professor who gives us this classic in a recent address, "Agreed to differ, but resolved to love." Chinese young people are thinking as never before. Now is our time to act.

Sunday Evening

On Sunday evening, Mr. Voris reported briefly for the Near East Relief. He said that before the war there were 4,500,000 Armenians, now there are 1,500,000. This last winter at least 100,000 Greeks, women and children, died from starvation. We must keep the children alive, or Christianity dies in the Near East. America's duty is more nearly here than anywhere else. Let us demand a conference of the major powers on this great problem.

Dr. James H. Franklin's address on "The Uplifted Christ in the Far East," was a thoroughly optimistic utterance. The Eastern skies, he said, are now rosete with the rising sun of righteousness. The China and Japan of today are not those of nine years ago. The world cataclysm has shaken the Orient. Christ is being uplifted and men are being drawn to him. In twenty-one years the Christian church in China has increased from 85,900 to 378,000. Shanghai College is the second best in material equipment in all the Orient and has in it the finest spirit of soul-winning. Christian leaders count it one of the two or three finest bits of Christian work being done anywhere. There is a growing demand that the Chinese church shall walk alone and no longer be under tutelage. These countries have diplomats, statesmen, etc., the equal of any in the world. The missionary is becoming more and more an adviser to the Chinese. The Baptist women of America should send Mrs. Montgomery as a fraternal delegate to the rising womanhood of these countries. Have we the spiritual possessions equal to this hour?

Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, of New York, followed with a characteristic and delightful address on "The Immanence of God," taking his starting point from the Bethel story. Jacob had associated God with a day, a place, a ceremony. Now on a secular day, not in a temple, not in a religious service he learned that "the Lord is here."

"We may see the immanence of God in nature. He is in it, moving, working, doing. He upholdeth all things by the word of his power. We may see this also in history. When God shut man out of Paradise, he shut himself out with him. Did God speak to the prophets of the Old Testament in a way from which we are excluded? Why should we segregate history and say that God is in some sections and not in others? God is also in literature. I believe in the Holy Scriptures. But having said that I am bound to ask, Are these the only Scriptures God has inspired? Has God ceased to speak? So God is in the religious life of our day. Let us bring our every activity and thought into sanctity of the Lord until we can say, 'The Lord is in this place. Blessed be his name.'"

Monday Morning

Dr. Barbour presented the report of the delegates to the Federal Council, which was received and the two following declarations adopted:

1. "We believe that nations no less than individuals are subject to God's immutable moral laws.
 2. "We believe that nations achieve true welfare, greatness and honor only through just dealing and unselfish service.
 3. "We believe that nations that regard themselves as Christian have special international obligations.
 4. "We believe that the spirit of Christian brotherliness can remove every unjust barrier of trade, color, creed and race.
 5. "We believe that Christian patriotism demands the practice of good-will between nations.
 6. "We believe that international policies should secure equal justice for all races.
 7. "We believe that all nations should associate themselves permanently for world peace and good-will.
 8. "We believe in international law, and in the universal use of international courts of justice and boards of arbitration.
 9. "We believe in a sweeping reduction of armaments by all nations.
 10. "We believe in a warless world, and dedicate ourselves to its achievement."
- (2) That the Northern Baptist Convention join in a suitable observance of the tercentenary in 1923 of the Walloon settlement in Central Pennsylvania.

Mrs. H. E. Goodman presented to Mrs. Ballard, of Southern California, a prize of five traveling missionary libraries for the best record in the reading contests of the last year. Dr. R. M. Vaughan presented the report of the committee on resolutions, which was adopted. The resolutions follow:

To the Northern Baptist Convention:

We express to the Baptists of Indianapolis our deep appreciation of their hospitality. Located at the center of the population of our country, their beautiful city has been an ideal place for one of the largest conventions thus far in the annals of Northern Baptists. Although the time of preparation was brief, our hosts organized a welcome which in completeness and efficiency of arrangements we have never seen surpassed. We assure them of our heartfelt gratitude for their ministries to our needs and for the inspirations of our friendship in Christ.

THE ABOLITION OF WAR

We record our conviction that war as a method of settling international disputes is barbarous, wasteful and manifestly contrary to every Christian ideal and teaching. We reaffirm our belief that our country should have its part in an association of nations for expressing our common humanity, admitting and outlawing any nation that resorts to arms to further its own interests.

We earnestly petition our national government to participate with other nations in the World Court of Justice and to take whatever other steps may be necessary to secure such cooperation on the part of the peoples of the earth as will bring about a stabilizing of world conditions and permanently banish war.

ARMENIA

We view with profound pity and horror the extermination of the Christian peoples—Armenian, Greek, Syrian—now in progress at the hands of the Turks. At the conference at Versailles the United States was requested by the allied nations to assume a mandate for Armenia and to protect her faithful and heroic people. The Northern Baptist Convention makes a solemn protest against the ruthless starvation and massacre of the first nation to accept the Christian faith. We hereby petition our government immediately to adopt measures to secure united action on the part of the United States and European governments for the deliverance and security of imperilled Christian peoples in the Near East.

We recommend to the Convention the appointment of a committee composed of the officers of the Convention and such additional members as may be deemed best to convey these resolutions in person to the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, and to respectfully request that everything possible be done to secure the governmental action desired by this resolution.

NEAR EAST RELIEF

We commend the efforts of the Near East Relief to feed and protect the victims of Turkish cruelty in Asia Minor, and ask our churches to support this work. We request the Northern Baptist Convention to appoint an advisory committee composed of three members of the Committee on International Relations of the Social Service Committee, three representatives of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and twelve additional members, to represent us in promoting this work of mercy and fraternity.

EUROPEAN RELIEF

We give our hearty approval to the work of European relief as carried on by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and we urge our people to continue most liberally their support of this noble work. We request the Northern Baptist Convention authorize a committee on international justice and good-will.

OBEDIENCE TO LAW

We favor the strict and impartial enforcement of the Volstead law. The violation of the liquor laws, especially by members of the so-called influential classes, breeds a contempt for all constitutional and statutory authority and is a potent factor in the spread of the lawlessness which in many great centers of population menaces American institutions. We urge also the enforcement of all laws whose infringement imperils our right to a day of rest and worship. The commercialized Sabbath is a foe to the health, morality and happiness of the American people.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

The principles of the gospel must be applied to all industrial relations. It is therefore necessary for our pastors and churches to proclaim these principles in order that public opinion, informed and guided by the teaching of Jesus, may become effective in abolishing the curable ills of industrial life and in promoting cordial and just cooperation between all the forces of economic production. Capital and labor alike owe obedience to the laws of the land, and lawlessness on the part of either of them in advancing their interests should be discountenanced by the church with equal firmness and impartiality.

The economic and moral interests of the country demand a better method of adjusting labor disputes than now obtains in the use of strikes and lockouts. One of the remedies worthy of our study is courts of industrial relations, which, though they are not perfect in form or operation, may yet prove effective in certain classes of disputes. The greatest need is for the parties engaged in industrial enterprises to develop within themselves organizations of peace, good will and cooperation based upon mutual confidence, honest respect for mutual rights, and frank recognition of mutual obligations.

CHILD LABOR

We believe that the evils of child labor are so serious that something must be done to remove this blot on a Christian civilization. If Federal legislation is unconstitutional, then it is urgent that the citizens of the various states vigorously demand legislation which will protect the rights of children.

Beware of too sublime a sense

Of your own worth and consequence.
The man who deems himself so great,
And his importance of such weight,
That all around in all that's done
Must move and act for him alone,
Will learn, in school of tribulation,
The folly of his expectation.

—William Cowper

RACIAL JUSTICE

All good citizens north and south deplore lawlessness in the form of lynching and mob violence in the treatment of Negroes, and all un-Christian as well as illegal discriminations of race against race. We favor all legislation which helps to remedy these conditions. Much can be accomplished by inter-racial conferences to consider plans for the betterment of relations between the Negroes and the whites, both north and south.

OUR DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOLS

We recognize in our institutions of learning a most important agency for the furtherance of the cause of Christ. A much larger number of young people from Baptist homes should avail themselves of the opportunities presented by our schools in order that we may have more trained workers in church and society. We urge those entrusted with the management of Baptist schools and colleges to cultivate the highest scholarship, to emphasize a true evangelism, and thus to awaken and to deepen the religious life of students. In every Baptist educational institution a strong department of Bible study and religious education is a prime necessity. Young people who purpose to devote themselves to distinctive Christian work, particularly to the ministry, are urged to secure the most thorough training possible and to pursue these special studies in our own schools, colleges, and seminaries.

THE BIBLE IN THE LIFE OF THE PEOPLE

We favor the removal of the disability in certain states that prevents the reading of the Bible in public schools and recommend such reading, without comment, as a helpful aid in the training of our young people in the principles and practices of morality.

We heartily approve of the work being done by an increasing number of Baptist churches in Daily Vacation Bible Schools. Our people should be encouraged also to establish Church Week-Day Schools wherever possible. The effective coordination of these schools with the public school in the matter of credit for work done opens a new era in the religious instruction of the coming generations, but care should be taken to maintain our traditional position with relation to the separation of church and state. We recommend to all our people the use of the educational literature of our American Baptist Publication Society and the observance of Religious Book Week.

THE BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE

We share with Baptists in all lands a deep interest in the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm, Sweden, in July, 1923. We recommend that plans be made for our representation at this important gathering. To this end we request the appointment of a committee consisting of one member from each of our missionary societies and of two members from the Convention itself.

EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE

We hold that the basic fact in the advance of the Kingdom of God is the work of the Holy Spirit in the heart of the individual. The present widespread unrest affords peculiar opportunity for the effective presentation of the gospel of Christ. The large gatherings reported by the churches in our convention field are pledges of yet greater advance. It is incumbent not only upon pastors but upon all believers, through prayer and testimony, to win our fellowmen to Christian discipleship.

OUR MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE

We have been thrilled with the news of the progress of the Baptist cause in Europe and the great gatherings in our missions in Africa and India. In the light of these large opportunities and responsibilities for Northern Baptists, we feel the need of all our people supporting our own denominational work. We reaffirm our conviction that the goals of the New World Movement are not too great for Baptist resources consecrated to the uplifted Christ. The Convention hereby calls upon its entire constituency by a more thorough-going stewardship of life and money to carry our great enterprise to a victorious conclusion. We appeal to all our churches to support our world-wide program. In loyalty to Christ and the gospel, to our Baptist heritage and task, we find our true unity and fulfill our divine calling.

The executive committee recommended the appointment of a committee on international justice and good will and that this committee cooperate with a similar committee of the Federal Council.

Rev. Robert Hughes, of Ohio, moved that copies of resolutions 2, 3 and 4 be sent by our corresponding secretary, together with the cordial greetings of the convention, to the Hon. D. Lloyd George, Prime Minister of Great Britain, and to Dr. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland.

The report of the committee on gifts with attached doctrinal conditions was read by Rev. C. M. Gallup, but because of the confusion existing when it was found that a doctrinal preamble had not been adopted by a majority of the Boards, and although printed, was really no portion of the report, it was voted to refer the whole matter back to the Boards for report next year.

The report of the Board of Education was presented in three parts, the whole being presented by Dr. Padelford, while Rev. W. A. Hill read the section on the Department of Missionary Education. Important portions of this report follow:

The Board of Education herewith submits its eleventh annual report, the second since its incorporation with the American Baptist Education Society. No unusual events have marked the progress of the year, but there has been a steady development of our work.

STUDENT ENROLMENT

Immediately following the close of the war, there was a marked increase in the enrolment in all American colleges and universities. Many institutions went forward by leaps and bounds. This increase was not unexpected for many boys had left college in the midst of their courses, and it was anticipated that a good percentage of them would return to complete their work. But it was not expected that this increase would continue. On the other hand, it was fully expected that there would soon be a falling off in the enrolment. It is interesting to discover that instead of falling off

Whitsuntide in Hungary

By ATTILLA CSOPJAK

IN the Baptist mission of Hungary the Whitsundays are of great importance. In the houses of prayer of most of our unions there are no baptizing basins. Wherefore we are postponing the baptizing of persons converted and appearing for admission in summer or spring, to a warmer season and chose the two Whitsundays as being most fit for that purpose, so much the more as during those holidays work is resting. Then they mostly are walking in large crowds and singing as far as the next river to perform baptizing. The preponderant part of present Hungary consists of plains and there are places seven to nine kilometers from the river; and little ones and grown ups are marching thereto afoot with equal and undisturbed joy.

This year there were numerous baptizings at Easter, but for the most part in chapels. As, however, revival is continuing still, we verily expect that at Whitsuntide hundreds of people will be baptized in running water.

In several places of Hungary people begin to feel interested in the Bible. In many Catholic communities where Holy Scripture was almost unknown, Bibles may be discovered, this fact leading to the erection of new stations in a progressive way. Three years ago a preacher of ours was possessed of a union circuit having then but ten stations. Now it counts twenty-five stations, but each with six to twenty members only. It is not difficult to imagine what a work that preacher is mastering.

In large cities conditions of life are such as perhaps never have existed before the war. Hungary has been deprived of two-thirds of its territory, these dismembered parts being distributed amongst Czechoslovakia, Roumania and Jugoslavia. From these territories many thousands of intellectual people, as public functionaries, teachers, professors, railway officers and employes have saved themselves and taken their way to the now small Hungary. Part of such refugees could not find here any abode at all and are miserably dwelling in railway cars summer and winter. Many of them are not in place. Already a respectable number applied to us for help; and we have supplied them with bread, material and morale. If we had institutes, schools, offices we certainly could save many intellectuals not only bodily but also in soul.

Our Baptist brethren of Hungarian tongue, to about 6,000 souls, fallen into the empire of the Roumanian government, are in a very lamentable situation. They are applying to us for newspapers, books and writings. We would be so glad to provide them with all that. But the Roumanian government does not permit the book parcels to pass the frontier. We therefore cannot help forwarding them every single sheet, book or paper by post in registered letters, this being a rather expensive expedient.

We trust our Lord will open the way for us and enable our endeavors to send away our Scriptures far to the east, perhaps also to the Turkish people whose race is related to us. The Hungarian mission is, in fact, the most qualified to evangelize the Turks. We ought to have a central office here, wherefrom the gospel would take its triumphantly enlighting march into the remote countries of the Balkans and Asia Minor.

International Baptist Seminary

Closing exercises of the International Baptist Seminary, East Orange, N. J., were held May 28-June 1. The annual sermon was preached by President George Edwin Horr of Newton Theological Seminary. The service was held Sunday morning, May 28, in the North Orange Baptist Church.

On Monday evening at the seminary building was held the prize Scripture reading contest. Passages of Scripture were committed to memory and recited in the English language. There were three prizes of $10, one for each of the three classes in English. There were nine contestants and the prizes were won by the following: Michael Gallo of the Czechoslovak Department, first year; Domenic D'Adario of the Italian Department, second year; Guiseppi Dellutri of the Italian Department, third year. The judges were Rev. Avery A. Shaw, of Brooklyn; Rev. Coe Hayne, of the Home Mission Society, and Prof. Albert T. Davis, of Newark Academy, Newark. The prizes were given by the Baptist Church of Brookline, Mass., the Baptist Church of Scotch Plains, N. J., and the First Baptist Church of East Orange, N. J.

Tuesday night the faculty and student body were distributed among the four Baptist churches of the Oranges and the Roseville Baptist Church of Newark, being in charge of the weekly prayer meetings of those churches.

The first annual field day and banquet was held Wednesday afternoon and evening. The field day sports were in charge of the athletic committee of which Rev. Antonio Mangano is chairman. It is hoped that by next year there may be an inter-department trophy which will add considerably to the keenness of the competition and the eagerness of the students to endeavor to add to the score of their department. The banquet was held on the rear lawn of the seminary grounds. The tables were decorated with red roses from the garden. Dr. Mangano was toastmaster and there were short speeches by Prof. Orosz, of the Hungarian department, Prof. Adamus, of the Polish department, Prof. Slabey, of the Czechoslovak department, Prof. John Bokmelder, of the Russian department, and Prof. A. T. Davis. On this occasion also the students and faculty publicly extended their congratulations and best wishes to Dr. Anderson and Mrs. Meeker who were married on June 10, and presented them with a tea cart and tea set.

Thursday at four p. m. the board of trustees held its annual meeting, at which it was decided to name the main building of the seminary Walton Hall in honor of Mr. David S. Walton, from whom the property was purchased and who has always had so prominent a part in the life of the community. The other large dormitory at 32 South Munn Avenue will hereafter be known as Howard Hall in honor of the Howard family of Hartford, Conn., who have shown so great an interest in the work among the foreign-speaking people. Mrs. Edgar O. Silver of West Orange and Prof. Albert T. Davis of East Orange were elected to the board of trustees. It was also decided to form a woman's auxiliary to be made up of women from the Baptist churches in the vicinity of the seminary.

The final exercises were held Thursday evening in the First Baptist Church of East Orange. Rev. Charles A. Brooks gave an address on "The Need of Trained Leaders among the Foreign Speaking Communities." Dean John F. Vichert of Colgate Theological Seminary gave an address on "The Meaning and Scope of an International Baptist Seminary." Dr. Frank L. Anderson, president of the seminary, was in charge of the service. One of the features was the singing by the student body of the seminary hymn which was written by Prof. Davis.

The Baptist Missionary Training School

Sunday, June 11, was baccalaureate day. The service was held in the First Baptist Church, Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse, minister, preaching the sermon of the day. Monday was class day. At two o'clock the seniors gave the play, "The Rock." Class prophecy created much fun, and the giving over of the gavel by the retiring president of the student body to her successor of next year, stirred all who witnessed it.

Thirty-two alumnae were present. At 6:30 occurred the alumnae banquet. The address of the evening was made by Dr. Charles Alvin Brooks of New York City, on the theme, "The New Home Missions."

The presentation of Commissions followed Dr. Brooks' address. Mrs. John Chapman in behalf of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, made the presentation to the members of the class who have been definitely appointed to positions under the society. The dedicatory prayer was made by Mrs. R. R. Donnelly. The annual reception was held in the Board Room and Harris Library.

Tuesday, commencement day, was the climax of events. At this time seventeen received diplomas. The enrolment of the senior class has been twenty-three but several were obliged to leave because of illness, two were appointed to Central American fields before completing the work, and one entered the class at the beginning of the spring term. Dr. Roy E. Vale, pastor First Presbyterian Church, Oak Park, addressed the senior class, emphasizing the upward look in life.

New temporary quarters have been secured for the Training School at 4948 Indiana Avenue. This is near The Chicago Training School (Methodist); and a very good solution of the temporary problem. It is hoped almost immediately to build in a spot which will be permanent. No lot has been purchased, but it is hoped that this may be done soon and work begun on a new building adapted to the needs and purposes of the school.

The future bids fair to be greater than the past, if Northern Baptists will co-operate, and help maintain the highest standards of scholarship and practice work, by sending choice young women to be trained; and materially aid us by giving scholarships to help pay expenses. A scholarship is only $250 and many times lack of it means the loss of a fine young woman to the Christian work.

THE SPIRITUAL BENEFITS OF TITHING

The advocates of tithing urge its adoption not only on the ground of increased revenue for denominational needs, but also on the ground that the practice of tithing promotes and produces a lofty and desirable spiritual state or condition both in the individual and in the church. What evidence may be adduced in support of this contention I am not aware, but there are certain considerations on the other side which seem to me to demand consideration.

The Jews of Jesus' day were most scrupulous tithers. They had practiced it as a nation for years. Surely the fruits of the practice should be here shown in fullest measure. But the picture of the tither as an individual given us by Jesus is not encouraging from the standpoint of spirituality, and when we look at the nation as a whole we find them woefully lacking in all that constitutes real spirituality, real religion. Historically, since Jesus' day, the Jews stand out as a covetous, money-grasping race. It would be too much to say that tithing produced this characteristic, but at least it did not prevent, nor cure it.

Certain religious bodies of our own day are either wholly, or in large part, tithers. It is surely a fair question to ask whether these bodies are preeminent in spirituality. The Mormons are scrupulous tithers. They have abundance of money for their missionary work, and are most enthusiastic missionaries. But shall we admit that they are more spiritual than Baptists? The followers of John Alexander Dowie were and are strict tithers. They have money for most expensive crusades to neighboring cities. Perhaps they are more spiritual than the ordinary churches, but I doubt it. The Seventh-day Adventists are predominantly tithers. In the inter-church stewardship lectures they were held up as shining examples because they give more per capita than any other Protestant denomination. Am I wrong, however, in feeling that they are not preeminent spiritually?

I freely concede one great merit to the tithing system. It does get the money. In their desperation over the financial crisis and need of our denomination our leaders have most naturally been attracted by this successful money-producing system. If getting the money to promote our missionary and educational work is the great objective of our denominational life, then the promotion of tithing is logical, natural and will probably be successful. But, if we are seeking the deeper things of the spirit, if our objective is a genuine spirituality; if at least behooves us to consider carefully these historical examples of the results of tithing, and go slowly. Getting $20,000,000 per year for our promotion work would be indeed a poor exchange for losing our denominational soul. GEO. C. ALBORN.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE SMALL AND LARGE CHURCH

In your issue of March 11 you have an article under the caption "Well-balanced giving" which, in my opinion, does not do justice to the small church when all factors are given full consideration, and I feel the more at liberty to question the conclusions of the writer in view of the fact that my own church does not come under this category. The total amount contributed by the five small churches is noted as $10,658, an average of $2,132 per church, which after allowing, say, $1,200 to $1,500, for the pastor's salary leaves about $600 to $900 for every other item of expense, janitor, heat, light, repairs, insurance, etc. Is it fair to expect any smaller application for self-support? In the one case four and one-half families have to be supported, housed, fed and clothed (even a half of a family cannot escape this necessity), in the other, one. It is logical to expect the larger church to maintain itself on a smaller per capita than a group of small churches as illustrated with their cumulative responsibility.

This situation allows a larger emphasis on outside work which, apparently, reflects so favorably on the large church, but, allowing for the same kind of membership in all the churches, which means that many delinquents must be excepted to get at the real giving strength (and what church escapes?), the per capita contributions for all purposes appear as follows:

The large church with a membership of 867 raised $13,552.52, a per capita of $15.63; the small with a membership of 810, $12,571.11, a per capita of $15.52 or a difference of 11 cents per member per year. Where is the ground for any flattering comparison? Actually the general average per week per member is only about thirty cents for all interests, home and world-wide—the tithe on a weekly income of $3!

In the matter of membership records it should always be borne in mind that the large church with its comfort, music, appointments, better educated ministry (presumably) and social opportunities offers attractions that are competitive, as the faithful in the smaller congregations full often realize. Not infrequently it requires real consecration attended with no little deprivation to "stay by the stuff" in these smaller interests.

And it may be that a review of the sources of the letters granted to those who were received into the fellowship of the larger communion would reveal contributions of life and service which had their beginnings where the problems of self-support are vital and loom large.

It seems to the writer that the reflection on the giving of the small churches as contained in the head line of the item referred to is not sustained upon careful consideration and that it is unintentionally unfair in its inferences.

No mention has been made of the contributions to the building enterprise as these are local and personal and, moreover, are not used in the comparisons as made: it is encouraging to note that a new sense of responsibility to our missionary objectives has secured a response, if not adequate, at least stimulating, this handicap to the contrary notwithstanding.

FOUR LAWS FOR THE CHURCH AND ITS YOUTH

In any church where there is to be a consistent result-bringing kingdom work done as the kingdom relates its program to the young people, there are some quite evident laws that must be kept prominently in the thinking of the people. Without enlarging upon them, we can enumerate them under four heads as follows:

First. Every Christian church has a responsibility to make a very strong effort to reach all of the people of its constituency; study their characteristics and strive to know their needs of whatever kind; and then strive to meet those needs in such a way as to build a love for the church, its work and its Christ.

Second. It must always be remembered that in no two age-groups of a normal church is there absolute agreement as to what is most essential in life—even in a fully Christian life—and yet the fact that different age-groups emphasize different types of conduct does not necessarily determine at a first consideration a greater or less sincere religion. It may stand for only a different-ness rather than a better-ness or a worse-ness.

Third. It is very largely the younger adults in the church who must give of their spiritual and physical strength to furnish the teaching and supervisory (cooperative would perhaps be a better word) leadership for the younger people. In this leadership, usually, though not invariably, the men are responsible for the leadership of the boys and the women are responsible for the leadership of the girls.

Fourth. In any church the young people should constantly strive to appreciate the point of view of the adults, and in appreciating their point of view, should constantly strive to show their gratitude by responding to the honest effort that is made to assist them in working out their part in the kingdom program with a spirit and attitude that are one better than the spirit and attitude shown them by their adult co-workers.

The Chimney Corner

A Star in the Milky Way

ALFONSO would have told you disdainfully that he had a soul above selling milk! To him, this having a route was the stupidest thing in the world. Even the donkey soon memorized the ins and outs of those little, narrow streets, where housewives were forever poking their heads out of doorways to see if it were really Alfonso whenever they heard the patter of donkey's footsteps or the clatter of tin cans clashing together musically. If it was Alfonso, he would be marching at the donkey's head; and almost the only pleasure he ever got out of having a route was bickering with these housewives all along the way, over the bigness of the tin measures they brought out to be filled and the fact that so much extra milk would certainly cost them thus and so.

"Nonsense!" these individuals would say crossly, "is your milk so much better than anybody's else that you must cheat a poor woman out of her last cent? When your milk's half water, anyway, you ought to be grateful that I buy it at all!"

"Now, by all the saints, but you insult me unjustly," Alfonso would cry indignantly, "I swear that not a drop of water has ever touched my milk—you only have to look at it lying in that extra large tin measure of yours; may my eyes drop out of my head if I ever saw milk of a finer color, half cream it is—rich, yellow cream, woman! And yet you insult me by calling it watered. Such is life! And you talk of cheating when your measure is half again as big as anybody's else!"

It was in bickerings like this that Alfonso enlivened the monotony of his route along those narrow Cuban streets, and even the little donkey soon learned just where to stop so that the two big cans fastened to his saddle could be tilted over to fill the vessels, big and small, which were brought out for that purpose from dim patios indoors. For this was none of your modern American dairy companies, with milk sealed up in scientifically sanitary bottles and delivered at your door in the wee small hours of the morning before ever you yourself are dreaming of cream in your breakfast coffee. Alfonso's was the way in which milk was circulated in Cuba, where on any day you really might manage to bargain Alfonso into selling it a whole cent cheaper—provided your tongue were only long enough and sharp enough. Now it happened that along Alfonso's route was a certain house into which Americans had lately moved; so, with an eye to business, Alfonso jerked the donkey's tail and yelled a lusty "Whoa, there!" on the very morning following their first appearance on the street.

You would not have supposed that any milkman in the world could have executed so elaborate and beguiling a flourish as

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Alfonso made in bowing to the American lady—sweeping his hat to the very ground, he said: "Senora, permit me to recommend the perfections of my milk! Straight from the most distinguished and ornamental cows in all Cuba, senora."

"Oh, I have no doubt they are highly ornamental," she laughed, "but I don't care nearly as much about the way they dress up the appearance of the landscape as how the germs in the milk may affect my baby. So what have you got to say about germs?"

It must be admitted that Alfonso had never so much as heard of germs before, but being a tactful soul, desirous to please, he replied: "Put your mind at rest, senora. I can deliver the milk either with or without germs as best suits the small infant. State your preference, and I am at your service."

"Oh!" laughed the senora, "with or without germs, eh? You certainly are obliging! And now tell me, how often do you sterilize your milk cans?"

Poor Alfonso—this was too much! Little he knew whether this thing-called-sterilize was bird, fish, flesh or fowl, so he humbly begged an explanation; and, later on, rode away from the mission door a wiser boy, although still vastly mystified. What a lot of trouble she expected him to take: boiling tin cans and removing germs. "If ever she buys of me, double shall she pay!" he declared to the donkey, who flapped his ears approvingly.

The next morning he returned to the mission, his brown face beaming. "Senora," he vowed, "I swear by all saints that half the night have I sat up killing off the unfortunate germs lurking in the milk from my so ornamental cows. Therefore now the small American infant may drink it with complete safety!"

"Oh, you gay deceiver!" smiled the lady, much amused, "it grieves me to disappoint you, but no milk today."

"I am in your hands, merciful lady," cried Alfonso cheerfully. And after that he called each day, although never could he persuade her to buy even a drop of his milk. But there was a special lure about poking his head inside that doorway, where curious sights were to be seen: a dozen little children contentedly sitting as still as mice making black marks on white paper, receiving the thing called "an education." And sometimes when education threatened to grow too tiresome, that dozen silent children became as noisy as ever they pleased, scampering around playing games.

You can see for yourself that all his other customers put together could not possibly equal the charm of this house where the lady did not buy, but where such bewildering things were going on. Indeed, he talked so much about this thing called an education that his little sisters and brothers fell to wishing that they did not live way out upon a lonely farm with only ornamental cows for company!

Then one day Alfonso began looking at the donkey's back as if measuring the length and the breadth of it in the spots between the milk cans. "Juanita," he called, "also Tommasito, and thou, little Concepcione, hop up on the donkey's back and come visit the place called a school."

You may be sure they hopped up!

And a little later, when the missionary lady heard the familiar clatter of Alfonso's milk-cans and expected to see his beaming face poked in at the doorway, lo and behold, four faces appeared! Three of them very, very shy, and scared, and curious.

But after that first visit they came regularly each morning; indeed, Alfonso had to reverse his entire route in order to deliver them at school at the beginning instead of in the middle of his milky way. But, just as on dark summer nights you may have seen bright stars light up the Milky Way in heaven, so that small school began to shine along Alfonso's route. With every pint of milk poured into small tin dippers he made that star gleam in the monotony of other people's routine lives. Instead of old-time bickerings about one cent more or less, there would be glowing accounts of how those Protestants were doing thus and so in town.

"I tell you what," Alfonso would say to some disgruntled mother with a group of noisy children squabbling in the patio, "if you'd only send them around to the American senora's school for an education, you'd be amazed at the improvement in

Souls

By FANNIE STEARNS DAVIS

MY Soul goes clad in gorgeous things,
Scarlet and gold and blue;
And at her shoulders sudden wings
Like long flames flicker through.

And she is swallow-fleet, and free
From mortal bonds and bars:
She laughs, because Eternity
Blossoms for her with stars!

Oh, folk who scorn my stiff gray gown,
My dull and foolish face,—
Can you not see my Soul flash down,
A singing flame in space?

And, folk whose earth-stained looks I hate,
Why may I not divine
Your Souls, that must be passionate,
Shining and swift, as mine?

Atlantic Monthly.

them. I give you my word that from day to day my own mother hardly recognizes Juanita and Tommasito and Concepcione when I bring them home on the donkey's back, so improved are they becoming."

Naturally these recommendations had their subtle effect, and one by one new scholars began to crowd the senora's school, until her husband was forced to write home to our churches in America: "Dear Friends:—

"You will be delighted to hear of the marked increase in attendance at our mission this year. It will no longer be possible for my wife to hold the school in our own home as formerly, for we are already crowded to the very door-jambes, and have a long waiting list of children desiring to attend, only we cannot possibly squeeze in another pupil! This means that money is needed at once for a school building. Oh, I earnestly pray that you will not wait to fill this crying need, for enthusiasm is high just now; indeed, the Catholic priests are frightened enough at our success to forbid their people to attend either our school or our church. But, with no other school within a hundred miles, these warnings have little effect, and my church services are packed. One of my best volunteer helpers is an enthusiastic young fellow who has a milk route—utterly ignorant he is, yet with untold influence among the families he meets along his route. Indeed, he's a star in the milky way, exactly as Prophet Daniel said: 'They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.'"

The Young Reserves

A Clever Fellow

By CLARENCE HAWKES

THE otter is one of the cleverest of the wild kindred, although he lives such a secluded life and is so shy that very few people have ever seen him, except in museums, and there he does not show off to advantage. He is almost as clever as the fox, although his reputation for wits is not so well known as that of sly reynard. The otter's cleverness is rather in keeping out of the way and in protecting himself by his dexterity. He does not come into the open and match his wits against those of man, as does the fox. This is the reason why with his valuable coat, worth anywhere from twenty-five to fifty dollars, he survives where the fox disappears.

He is equally at home in water or on land, and that also gives him an advantage which the fox does not possess. Still another thing in his favor is the fact that he leaves very little scent, and only the best dogs can follow his track. In addition to all this, he is largely nocturnal, traveling and disporting himself in the night when men and dogs are usually asleep.

The otter is a great traveler; thus he escapes from his enemies. He never returns to a kill, and this fact alone often saves him. An animal that will feed upon a kill night after night until it has disappeared is easily trapped, but the otter is too wise for that.

The young otters are blind at birth and very small. They are born in February while the old otters are still frozen under the ice. The mother otter is very jealous of her young, and leaves them only long enough to get food.

The burrow is usually under some overhanging bank, is nicely lined with dead leaves, and is very comfortable. Sometimes it has doors leading both outside and under the water. The otter still has to catch his fish in winter time. He cannot eke out his meals with clams as he will do when the ice is broken up.

The otter is very fussy about his eating, and always eats his dinner in the same manner. He will skin an eel, beginning at the tail. Frogs he also skins, and he always eats trout from the head back to the tail.

When the young otters are eight weeks old, the mother takes them to the nearest pool to teach them how to swim. They are such adept pupils that they swim like fish within a week. The mother otter seems never to lose her zest for play. As soon as the young are old enough, they are taught numerous otter games and frolics.

The otter seems to be as fond of sliding downhill as any boy and he will indulge in this sport for hours at a time. If it is summer time, he selects a steep clay bank and slides down it until it is as slippery as if it were greased. He slides upon his belly with his forelegs doubled up by his sides. In the winter he selects a steep bank leading on to the ice, if possible, and here he can get a real slide, one that would do credit to a boy on a sled.

In Alaska the otter often travels fifty miles a day simply by sliding upon the ice of the lakes and rivers. He does this just as a boy runs and slides upon his feet.

The otter's usual way of fishing is by stealth, but if he wishes he can pick up a sucker on a straight-away swim, for he is the best swimmer of all quadrupeds.

In swimming he not only uses his muscular hind legs, but also his powerful flexible tail. All three work as hard as they can. He is a veritable stern screw steamer. When he swims he does not make a great splashing; he can slip into the water and swim away without even the slightest noise.

When domesticated, the otter is almost as much at home as a dog. Some neighbors' boys and myself had a tame otter when I was a boy in my teens. He had been taken from the burrow when he was very small so he did not know that by nature he was a very shy animal and fearful of men. He lived in a cage in the yard. The door was always open and he came and went as he pleased. Although he was given all the fish that he wanted, still he retained his fishing instinct. He would go to the river near by and spend half a day fishing.

When watching for fish the otter lies in the water with just the tip of his nose and his eyes showing. When the fish comes within striking distance, he moves like a flash. There is a ripple and a splash and he comes up with the fish in his mouth. This domestic otter would lie at his master's feet like a dog and he would even come into the house. He was very fond of crawling through small holes and often crawled through a six-inch drain pipe.

The otter's coat is very beautiful, being a dark glossy brown, long and thick. A full-grown otter is a little over two feet in length, not including his sixteen-inch tail. His weight is from twenty to twenty-five pounds although he is sometimes larger. He lives about lakes and rivers and along the seashore. Here he often swims far out to sea and lives upon the sea islands.

So keen is the otter's sight, hearing, and smell that you might spend half your days amid his haunts and never see him. He slips like a dark shadow into the water, without even the slightest sound and swims away just as silently.

Albert and the Ants

(This story was written by a Young Reserve named William E. Bullard Jr., of Redlands, California. He is eight years old.)

ONCE upon a time there was a boy whose name was Albert.

One time he saw an ant sitting on a clod. When he saw the ant he said, "Oh, I wish I was an ant." And what do you suppose happened? The boy turned into an ant. He wondered why he turned into an ant, but finally the big ant he saw sitting on the clod came and told him that it was he who changed Albert into an ant. He said he was the Ant Witch and that he had heard Albert's wish and turned him into an ant. After the Ant Witch had told Albert all this he said, "Why did you wish to be an ant?" Albert answered, "I found out in the Bible that an ant was wise." "You are right, the ants are wise," replied the Ant Witch.

Then the Ant Witch asked Albert if he liked ant-bread and ant-milk. Albert said he did, because he had turned into an ant, he had an ant's appetite.

After a while the other ants in the colony came to see the new ant.

Then the ants gave Albert some ant-bread and ant-milk. When he had eaten it he said it was as good as the bread and milk at his old home.

After Albert had lived with the ants for a while there came a colony of red ants that declared war against the black ant colony that Albert was in. When the Ant Witch heard this he changed Albert back into a boy. When Albert became a boy he killed most of the red ants and left the rest of the killing to the black ants. When this was done Albert turned into an ant again.

After a while there was a war with the white ants. In this war Albert did not turn into a boy because the Ant Witch thought that the black ants did not have so powerful an enemy to overcome.

"EARNEST OR TRIFLERS?"

Amos 6:1-8; Eccl. 12:13, 14; Matt. 12:36.

By MABEL H. BENJAMIN

Are you in earnest, or are you a trifter? This is indeed a searching question which we may well ask ourselves before we go farther. Let us base our discussion on these four thoughts: Who should be in earnest? why should we be in earnest? when should we be in earnest? how may we be in earnest?

I. Who should be in earnest? Surely there are those, you say, who are made to be butterflies, beautiful creatures who need not stop long at any one flower, but needs must flit on and on, ever on to the next and then on to the next. Shall we not as Christians look to the life of Christ for our example of an earnest life—a sincere and truly beautiful life? Fosdick says: "Some virtues are like separate flowers, they beautify the spiritual landscape; a few are like the climate, they are the atmosphere in which all other flowers grow. Sincerity was the climate of the Master's spirit." Christ was loyal to his cause even unto death. Though we may not be called upon to be earnest unto death, as was our Master, may we not be in earnest throughout life—a task difficult enough to challenge the spirit of youth in us all?

II. Why should we be in earnest? We need but to look at the many wrecks of life about us, and to determine why they are as they are, in order to understand why we should be in earnest. Is there anything more pitiful than a wasted life—a life which has lacked a purpose to make it worth while? If it is only for the selfish purpose of being happy, of making of our lives a true success, we should be in earnest. Again, as Christians, we can do no better than to follow in the footsteps of loyalty to our Christ.

III. When should we be in earnest? Are there not times when we should throw off all restraint and worry and just play? Indeed there are! A true sportsman, however, is in earnest. Earnest in our play, should we not also be earnest in our work? Who cares to employ a skilled workman who only plays at his work? But more than that, should we not be in earnest in our devotional life? To be a true Christian seven days of the week, to be in earnest in one's devotional life, is to have found the source of all sincerity and power.

IV. How may we be in earnest? We can be in earnest throughout life only as we have a purpose in life, a cause which demands our loyalty. The cause of Christ in a world which needs him deeply may rightly demand our utmost loyalty, our truest sincerity. To remain true to a cause like ours, there is needed a constant source of inspiration, and this may be found in constant communion with its Master Leader.

"The people of a great city were once very much surprised at the beautiful music which floated forth from a little harp, untouched by human hand. Many evenings they came to listen, to wonder, and then to leave. Little they knew that placed beneath the little harp, under the stage, there stood a larger harp played upon by the skillful fingers of a Master Harpist. It was because the little harp seen by the eyes of all was tuned so true to the larger harp played by an unseen Master, that it rang so true, that it gave forth music to delight the souls of the hungry, eager world."

The Daily Program of a Church Vacation School

1. Opening of the School: It is absolutely necessary that good discipline be maintained. This discipline can be secured if the school starts right and every child knows from the very beginning that disorder will not be tolerated. No child is allowed inside the church until the school opens promptly at nine o'clock. The boys and girls line up as in public school. They march in to music. All the signals to stand or to be seated are given by the piano. A definite program is carried out for the entire time of the school session, leaving no time or opportunity for mischief making. A system of demerits will care for the ordinary thoughtless child. A truly vicious child should be kindly but firmly dismissed.

2. The Worship Period: The first ten minutes of the school is a period of worship. The children come in with the spirit of the street. A period of real worship will calm them and fit them for a happy and helpful morning. Into this period there should not come drill work of any kind. The leader, by his own attitude should create an atmosphere of worship and reverence.

3. The Kindergarten: In many schools the kindergarten children join in the devotional period and then go to their own room. In other cases they are by themselves throughout the morning. This work needs to be under one who has had some kindergarten training or who, having a love for and understanding of little children, takes the special training which the Training Conference offers to those who work in the kindergarten. Those who are public kindergartners need to understand that in our Daily Vacation Bible Schools there is a distinct religious background to all the work and play. "The Manual for the Kindergarten," by Miss Florence H. Towne, will be used this summer.

4. The Missionary Offering: This offering is distinctly a missionary offering. It goes to help other boys and girls have a happy time in a vacation school. Each day the children are given an opportunity to think of others and to do something for them. A glass jar is placed on the table in front of the school. The purpose of the offering is explained. Sometimes the children are asked to get a pint or a quart of coins. A "Giving Verse" is repeated. The children march around the room to music, pass the table, and back to their places. Sometimes an appropriate giving song is sung. Some of the schools take this offering once a week instead of daily, but the best results for the children themselves come from daily giving. This offering is usually sent to the denominational representative. Any school may designate its offering for any special school or purpose. This offering should not be used for expenses of the local school. Schools where two or more churches cooperate send their offerings to the secretary of the Commission.

5. Memory Work: Each day the boys and girls memorize some portion of the Scripture. The memory passages for this year are given in connection with the Bible story material. In the memory drill some use the black board, some a big chart, some the stereopticon, some pictures illustrative of each verse, and some use the drill method. It is the best to vary the method and put much thought, interest and enthusiasm into this part of the day's program.

6. Music: Good music is one of the important factors in any school. To secure this each school needs a good pianist and good leader. Usually the children have neither song book nor leaflet. Both music and words are memorized. The children are taught the spirit of each song. A devotional song is sung reverently, a prayer song prayerfully, a militant song with vigor and power, etc. Tone and correct interpretation are considered of greater value than noise or volume. From twelve to fifteen songs will be learned. Some of these are religious, some patriotic, some nature and some folklore songs. For the summer we suggest as our music Manual, "Manual of Hymns, Songs and Marches, with Music Interpretation," published by the International Association of the Daily Vacation Bible Schools, New York City.

7. Calisthenics: Five minutes of calisthenics to music by the piano will prepare the boys and girls for the Bible story of the morning. A high-school boy or girl will often be the very best leader that can be found for this part of the program. In a few of the schools rest games will be introduced this year. This can be done if the school is divided into departments. If games are introduced care should be taken that the leader does not lose control of the school.

8. Story Telling: Story telling is one of the oldest and best forms of teaching for children. Class groups for discussion or for lessons as in Sunday schools are not to be encouraged. The lecture or preaching method has little place in a Vacation school. Tell stories. Study the art of story telling. Make the story your own and tell it with all the art and vigor which can be given to it. Let the boys and girls make their own application. It is often wise to let some of the stories be retold by the children or dramatized. There are two kinds of stories told in a vacation school; a character or habit story and a Bible story. These stories are selected so as to fit into the general theme. The suggested stories for the summer, the outline of which follows, are quoted in the "Story Bulletin." Any story teller is free to substitute other stories. Be sure to tell stories. Do not neglect the daily Bible story.

9. Craft Work: Craft work has a distinct place in our vacation schools. This work is not put in as a bait for the boys and girls or as something to amuse them or as busy work; but it is engaged in because of its distinctive value in character formation. All the teachers are Christians. The work is therefore under Christian influence and in a Christian atmosphere. In the craft work the boys and girls are taught how to work together as Christians. This means good work and neat work. One article is finished before another is begun. There is no wandering about the room. All work is done as Christians should do work. Some of the craft work is related to the theme of the day. Some is not. But every child loves to make things. The craft work should be exalted in the vacation school this summer. Every group of ten or fifteen boys and girls needs an older person as a helper. This helper should always have an attractive model of the article which is being made. Care should be taken to keep each child's work safely over night. A bag or box for each pupil is a good plan. This year we have a new bulletin on craft work. Each teacher should select with care the things which she will teach the boys and girls.

10. School Yells and Songs: It is well for each school to have its own yell, school song and cheer leader. The closing period is a good time to introduce the school yell, sing "booster" songs, welcome new scholars and make the daily announcement. A bit of good fun will mean much to the success of the school.

11. Closing the School: A good vacation school opens promptly and in an orderly manner; it closes on time and with interest. It is absolutely important that the boys and girls go home happy. This can be done through an attractive closing period.

Upon a given signal all craft work ceases, each scholar's work is marked and put away, and when the pianist begins to play, the whole school re-assembles quickly and orderly, marching from their departments and classes. For local reasons a few schools do not re-assemble. This, however, should be the exception rather than the rule.

The closing assembly offers an opportunity to secure the eager interest of the children and of the teachers in the growth and progress of the school. Put the attendance by departments on a blackboard. Compare with the previous day. A standard of attendance can be adopted. Mass interest in a school often wins and holds even an indifferent pupil. Interesting features can be introduced. A finished article of unusual merit can be exhibited by the girl or boy who makes it. A word of public commendation will help the morale of the whole school. A pleasant surprise introduced from time to time will maintain interest to the very end.

The closing should be varied, interesting, orderly and dignified. It is the closing impression which the child takes home. Seek through this period to produce just those impressions which you want the boys and girls to carry home and tell their parents.

Seattle District Summer Rally

The regular Summer Rally of the Seattle District B. Y. P. U., was held at Bremerton, Wash., June 9. The steamer City of Bremerton was chartered for the occasion and, by actual count, 603 were on board. The Baptist of Bremerton rented for the occasion one of the moving picture theaters and 800 people were present at the evening meeting. The address of the evening was given by Dr. Gabriel Reed McGuire, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Vancouver, B. C. On the trip over to Bremerton and back to Seattle a musical program was rendered on the boat, music being furnished by the orchestra of the Second Swedish Baptist Church of Seattle. Robert Wright, of the Queen Ann Union arranged with the Post Intelligencer of Seattle for a radio concert which was enjoyed on the return trip. Ice-cream and "hot dogs" were sold on the boat, the proceeds going to the Chinese night school.

Arrangements for the rally were perfected by Clarence P. Sander, president of the Seattle District and Alvin Westin, chairman of the publicity committee.

Arrangements are now being made for the fall rally and the attendance goal has been set at 1500.

TRAINED LEADERS' CLASS, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, BLACKFOOT, IDAHO

Religious Education

How It Was Done

By E. S. BRAMBLE

The last Sunday in June, 1921, the writer was called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Harbor Beach, Mich. He accepted, not because of the enormity of the salary, for that was only equal to the average rural community church: not because of the beauty of the church edifice, for that was badly dilapidated: not because of the large congregation, for it was exceedingly small; but because of an opportunity for real service for Jesus in the community.

In a few weeks a campaign was launched. First a complete survey was made of the town, revealing a population of nearly 2,000. This was done by the Baptist church people, independent of all others. The pastor then gave the cards indicating membership or church preference in other churches, to the various other denominations in town to whom they belonged, keeping the non-membership cards for the foundation material on which it is hoped to build a glorious superstructure for Christ.

As to the financial campaign, the pastor personally visited and solicited every member of the church, every business man, every resort, and every person interested in the Baptist church and secured in cash (not promises to pay) $1,900. Work commenced, contracts were let, and on October 9 the church was re-opened—new, fresh and clean from “stem to stern.” Nothing left of the old church but the frame and a remembrance.

Did we feel happy? Yes, and surely we had a reason to praise God.

The spiritual development was not in any way neglected. While out of the church, we worshipped in the auditorium, and the common room of the community house which seated 500 and 250 respectively. The pastor invited into his pulpit some of the best preachers of the state, regardless of denominational connections; likewise influential business men who were Christians also received invitations to speak. These men came, gave ringing messages and inspired all.

The forty-five-piece Salvation Army band of Flint gave two days of sacred concerts with the result that the whole community was awakened to the fact that the church was a vital factor in the community life.

The Sunday school reached the high water mark of 189 because every one in the school was working to “win one.”

The B. Y. P. U. numbered twenty-five in membership. Through the use of the “Red and Blue” contest lasting over a period of ten weeks, B. Y. P. U. now numbers 230 active and social members. Almost all of them are young people and every one of those taken in were “free lances.” In other words, we did not trespass on any other denomination to secure our members. The meetings are bright and cheerful. We have no trouble to secure leaders for six months ahead.

The regular preaching services are quiet, not sensational; nor are there employed any other methods than the preaching of the Word of God. As a result, we are always assured of a large and attentive congregation.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools

The ministry to the child-life on our city streets, through the program of the Daily Vacation Bible Schools, continues to be one of the largest summer activities of the New York City Baptist Mission Society and also of the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens. For the past two years all the Christian forces doing this work in the Metropolitan Area have been united in a Federated Committee, and the same cooperation will exist during the coming summer.

In preparation for this summer's work, a Saturday morning training school for a period of ten weeks has been conducted by this committee and prior to the opening of the schools a three day intensive training institute will also be held for all the young men and young women who will engage in the work of the schools in New York City. The schools themselves will open on July 3 and continue through August 4—a period of five weeks, July 4 being omitted but Saturday of that week will be included to make the full twenty-five sessions.

The program of the schools will be much the same as in previous years, ministering to children along the lines of evangelism, industry, song and play. Just as the Sunday school approaches the religious educational problem from the point of view of worship and the week-day school of religious instruction approaches it from the point of view of instruction, just so does the daily vacation Bible school approach the problem of religious education from the point of view of play and industry. Handicraft has always been a large feature in the schools, but the most important item is still the Bible story, Bible memory work and the learning of the great hymns of the church. Habit talks and first aid to the injured, picnics and field days in the parks will be parts of the program. As heretofore, the children have been encouraged along the line of charity. This year two benevolent interests will be furthered, the daily offerings being divided for the children of the Near East and for the extension of daily vacation Bible school work here in New York.

It is hoped to have schools at the following centers: In Manhattan and the Bronx:

International Uniform Lesson for July 16

TEMPERANCE LESSON

Lesson: Daniel 5:1-31 Golden Text: Ecclesiastes: 12:14.

Setting

After Nebuchadnezzar's death in 561 B. C., his weak son Evil-Merodach ruled for two years. He was murdered and his young son Labashi-Marduk reigned for a brief period. Then Nabonibus, one of the noblemen, was placed upon the throne by some of his number. His son was the Belshazzar of this lesson. Belshazzar was heir to the throne but the records do not indicate that he reigned although the book of Daniel calls him king of Babylon. He may have shared the throne with his father or he may have governed Babylon as viceroy and been known by that title. In 538 Cyrus, king of Persia, captured Nabonidus and Babylon and adopted the title of “King of Babylon and King of Countries.” That Babylon fell so quickly is one of the wonders of history.

Lesson

The first fourteen verses of the chapter assigned for the lesson take up the feast of Belshazzar whereat appeared the handwriting on the wall. Upon the failure of the wise men to interpret it, the queen advises that Daniel be sent for. To him Belshazzar promises a purple robe, a chain of gold and the position of third ruler in the kingdom if he would interpret the handwriting on the wall. “Then Daniel answered and said, Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another; nevertheless I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.” He recalls to Belshazzar the career of Nebuchadnezzar before whom “all the peoples, nations and languages trembled and feared . . . whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive . . . but when his heart was lifted up, and his spirit hardened so that he dealt proudly, he was deposed from his kingly throne and they took his glory from him . . . And thou his son, O Belshazzar hast not humbled thy heart, although thou knew all this.” Then Daniel charged Belshazzar with the sins he had committed and his neglect of the true God. Because of this the hand appeared (whether miraculously or in a vision is not stated) writing: Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin, that is numbered, numbered, weighed and divisions. That night Belshazzar was slain and Darius took possession of the kingdom.

Our Own Folks

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

On Friday evening, June 2, Brother A. E. Jern, a student at Shurtleff College and pastor-elect of the Salem Church, St. Louis county, was publicly set apart to the work of the ministry, he having been previously examined and approved by the standing committee of the St. Louis Baptist Association. The ordination service was in Salem Church. Dr. S. E. Ewing presided and offered the ordaining prayer. The writer delivered the charge to the candidate, Rev. R. K. Kelly, the charge to the church, and Rev. M. W. Dressel presented the Bible.

Our City B. Y. P. U.

The City B. Y. P. U. held its annual meeting in Third Church, Tuesday, June 6, and elected officers for the ensuing year. Harold C. Fechner of Ebenezer Church was elected president; Harry A. Stewart, Grand Avenue Church, vice-president; Miss Opal Crane, West Park Church, recording secretary; Miss Gladys La Rue, Tower Grove Church, corresponding secretary, and W. Klein, Third Church, treasurer. The advisor is the president of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of the City, Miss Mary Woods, Lafayette Park Church, was elected intermediate superintendent, and Miss Blanche Dulin, Grand Avenue Church, junior superintendent. These take office July 1. The writer has been asked to serve as educational director. A training school for B. Y. P. U. workers will be held this fall, probably in November. The city is divided into three districts, each having its own district union.

A Pastoral Anniversary

June 9 the writer completed four years of service as pastor of Grand Avenue Church—years of strenuous endeavor. At the beginning of the pastorate the church was somewhat discouraged; financially distressed (the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board helping in the payment of the pastor's salary); the church building, inside and out, badly in need of repair; its organization defective, without possession of its property and unable legally to hold property (because not incorporated); its membership less than 200; its Sunday school attendance less than 100 and other departments of its work equally crippled. Today, the church is paying $620 more for pastor's salary and $156 more for janitor per year than in 1918, other items of expense being also increased. The church membership is 288 and the average Sunday-school attendance is about 200. From June 9, 1918, to June 10, 1922, there have been added to the church sixty-nine by baptism, eighty-one by letter, thirty-three by experience, and five by restoration, a total of 188. The church property has been repaired, the church is incorporated and in possession of its property. During the past four years the receipts for current expenses have been $11,852.67 and expenditures $11,375.96, leaving a balance in the treasury, June 1, of $476.71, all bills paid. Our present prosperity, aside from the blessing of the Almighty, has come because the church generally believed in its pastor and was ready heartily to follow his leadership.

Miscellaneous Notes

The Water Tower Church has unanimously called Rev. L. B. Arvin to be its pastor. He has been financial agent for the Missouri Baptist Sanitarium. The call has been accepted.

An outing by the ministers of St. Louis was enjoyed at Lindenwood College, St. Charles, Mo., on Monday, June 5. The members of the Ministerial Alliance were the guests of Dr. and Mrs. John L. Roemer, president and dean of the college. Anthony F. Ittner, a former police judge of St. Louis, spoke at the noon luncheon. Other addresses were made by Sheriff W. E. Robb, of Des Moines, Iowa, and by Rev. Samuel Jordan, a missionary of Teheran, Persia. Rev. Dr. C. M. Tadlock, pastor of Centenary M. E. Church, was elected president of the alliance. Rev. L. R. Call, of Second Church was elected treasurer, and Rev. P. G. Van Zandt, of West Park Church, a member of the Board of Councillors.

The Ammon Class of Lafayette Park Church celebrated on Sunday, June 11, the fourteenth anniversary of its existence. Hon. J. B. Edwards of this city addressed the class at the Bible-school hour. There were 210 people present to hear him.

Another Mile Stone

By ROSE L. BOYNTON

Five o'clock of a beautiful June day found the Sycamore delegation of Mono Indians wending its way down the "Glory Trail" to Auberry, to attend the annual meeting of the Indian churches to be held with the mother church, June 9-11. With Christian Conquest banners flying, a horseman leading followed by an auto, wagons and buggies, the crowd of thirty drew up in the shady grove surrounding the chapel. Here we found the Auberry Christians, in camp since early morning, with tents up, long tables erected, chapel decorated and everything in readiness for their guests.

Alfred Lord and wife, with Indians from Nippiniwassee and Coarse Gold had just arrived and were making camp near by, while the Table Mountain people were on the other side, and soon horses were unhitched, wagons unloaded and happy children running to and fro. The call to supper was heard a little later and as soon as the hungry travelers had been fed the bell rang out its call to the spiritual feast.

The pretty "church house" was soon filled with well-dressed, bright-faced Indians and an inspiring song service was led by Alfred Lord, our Indian missionary at Nippiniwassee and Coarse Gold. Rev. J. G. Brendel, superintendent of the work among the hill tribes of Northern California, enlarging the work begun by Miss Ida Scofield and Miss Emma Christiansen, gave the opening message and called on an Indian brother from each mission to give a few words of greeting. In response to this invitation Joe Hutchens of Auberry said many "good words."

Saturday morning at 9:30 the Indians were again in the house of worship and to their delight a spirited song service was led by Mrs. R. D. Licklider of the Memorial Church, Fresno, followed by messages from Indian sisters from each mission. Mr. Cowser, the new pastor of the Clovis Baptist church, had come to share our services and to bring two addresses on the "Word of God," which were given morning and afternoon. The evening service was called the young people's, and the house was crowded at an early hour, the delegations sitting in groups. After a short song service Mr. Brendel called the missions in turn and each group responded with song or exercise. Three groups sang gospel songs in their native tongues, the last sending up a group of little ones to sing in English. Another group all sang in English and a group of girls marched in with conquest banners to sing "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," after which the entertaining church gave a great demonstration of their young people's work. A fine group of little ones showed how primaries could sing praises to God, a splendid band of older members of the Junior B. Y. P. U. gave a song, a Bible drill and memory work, and the W. W. G. Society gave a flag drill and drew spiritual lessons from it. Alfred Lord then gave an impressive talk upon the text "Whatsoever He saith unto you do it." At the close an appeal was made to respond to God's call to the unsaved and three came forward, two Junior boys and a young man. This great meeting, with about 250 present, closed a memorable day.

The services of the Lord's Day were opened by a council for missionaries and Indian leaders with Mr. Brendel, then a preaching service and in the afternoon reports from the various Sunday schools, women's societies and other organizations. Four churches had given largely to missions, as well as local work. The other two made no financial report but all reported growth. At the close of Mr. Brendel's strong message to those present four more juniors came forward to confess Christ.

Twin Cities' Letter

JOHN A. EARL

The joke is that they are called twin cities because they are so much alike. It isn't similarity that makes them twins but proximity. And yet when it comes to Baptist fellowship St. Paul and Minneapolis are one. This was demonstrated again the other day when the ministers and their wives were the guests of Dr. Robert Earl and Dr. George Earl at the Mounds Park Sanitarium, one of the three Baptist hospitals located in St. Paul. It was a revelation to some of the guests that the Baptists owned such fine properties and carried on a ministry of healing and comfort of such magnitude in the Northwest.

The beautiful house of worship of University Church is nearing completion. Dr. Norman B. Henderson has done a notable work here both in promoting the building enterprise and in greatly increasing the spiritual efficiency of the church.

The Trinity pastor, Walter Woodbury, is much in demand as a preacher. He is a special favorite at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., where faculty and students hear him frequently with pleasure.

The young pastor of the youngest church in Minneapolis, Lake Harriet, is rejoicing in substantial evidences of progress. S. H. Farringer, the pastor recently took in forty-seven new members.

W. E. Loucks, pastor of Fourth Church reports a wonderful victory in securing $65,000 in pledges to complete the church building.

The Baptist Summer Assembly grounds at Mound, Minn., on beautiful Lake Minnetonka will be improved this summer by the building of a hotel and dormitory.

Already your readers have learned of the extension planned by the First Church of Minneapolis for which more than $300,000 have been subscribed.

Allyn K. Foster will be the supply pastor of the Calvary Church for six weeks while Pastor McLean takes his vacation in New England.

Changes are in the air. Dr. E. R. Pope, who has so signally and successfully led the Baptists of Minnesota for nearly a generation suggested at a recent meeting of the board of directors of the state convention that he be released. While the board was loath to entertain the suggestion, a committee was appointed to confer with Dr. Pope concerning his wishes in the matter and to report at a subsequent meeting.

The outstanding event for the twin cities is the convention of the Baptist Young People of America. No such preparations have ever before been made for a convention of young people. It is confidently expected that 10,000 delegates will register for the convention opening in the St. Paul Municipal Auditorium on the evening of June 28. Already more than 6,500 delegates are registered from the Twin Cities. More than 1,000 are coming from Iowa, and evidences point to the breaking of all previous records in attendance of delegates.

The Camp's the Thing

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

One hundred and fifty of these camps dot the United States, from Maine to California, from the northernmost part to the most southern, where 50,000 girls last year enjoyed vacations at a minimum cost of $12 a week, which included the transportation there and back. The vacations are honest-to-goodness vacations with rolled up sleeves, khaki suits, freckled noses, and appetites that make the famed farm-hand's meal suggest the sparrow's in comparison; vacations where Miss Girl meets Miss Girl robbed of all the paraphernalia of rivalry, and good fellowship is born, vacations that send over the distant hills the sound of the clicking of mallets and balls, and gay laughter; vacations that include hikes, swims, beefsteak bats, watermelon feasts, marshmallow roasts, sunrises and sunsets; an acquaintance with trees and birds and the wild flowers that causes one to think less frequently of the unpleasant acquaintances in town. A health-renewing, heart-enlarging, brain-clearing, soul-developing experience, and the bank is not exhausted when the girl turns home!

It is highly likely that there is such a camp in your neighborhood. Write Camp Department National Board, Young Women's Christian Associations, 600 Lexington Avenue, New York City, for its location. When the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Associations decided on these camps for girls, it also decided to locate them impartially. If you live in a section of the country that seems to your eyes to lack all attractive features of water and meadow and hill, don't worry. They are all around you: God has been impartial with the beauties of outdoors, and the association has found one right at your front, or back, door, or just around the corner. It is inspired in seeking these ideal camp sites by its love for all girls.

WILLIAM G. SPENCER, PRESIDENT OF HILLSDALE COLLEGE

New President of Hillsdale

Professor William Gear Spencer, of Franklin College, was on June 13 elected president of Hillsdale College. Introduced to the board by the chairman, he first asked President Joseph W. Mauck, who has been the president for twenty years, to lead the company in prayer. In a brief response he accepted the election. He and Mrs. Spencer were then informally greeted by all present. At the annual reception of the president and his wife, at their home a few hours later, they were in the receiving line with President and Mrs. Mauck and were cordially welcomed by hundreds. The president-elect is the assistant of the president of the original Chautauqua Association of New York, in charge of the program and other parts of its administration. He will take charge at Hillsdale next September. President Mauck will continue as president emeritus with such functions as may be mutually arranged. He requested release from the internal administration and during the negotiations with Mr. Spencer he has heartily cooperated.

President Spencer's father has during nearly all of his son's life been a professor in Denison University at Granville, Ohio, from whose academy and collegiate courses William G. was graduated. Thirteen years after his graduation from college were spent in the faculties of the academies and universities of Denison and of Colgate University at Hamilton, N. Y. For the past three years he has been in the faculty of and took special studies in the Colgate Theological Seminary, and is a licensed minister but not ordained. He is a member of a half-dozen or more education associations and honor clubs, active in community affairs, and is a member and director of the Rotary Club at Franklin. His wife was Miss Dorothy Burns, of Hamilton, N. Y. They have three children.

Church News by States

Mississippi Valley

MICHIGAN

SUNDAY, MAY 28, was a mile stone in the history of Belding Baptist Church and its pastor, W. A. Biss, as it marked ten years of work together, in which time there has been the most harmonious effort and hearty cooperation between pastor and people. Special services were arranged for Sunday, and for Monday evening. Rev. Joshua Roberts, district superintendent for Northern Michigan, delivered the Sunday sermons. Monday evening the first feature of the celebration was the supper, following which the members and guests adjourned to the audience room, where they were welcomed by Mr. Biss and the Rev. H. S. Ellis, of Ashley Church, led in prayer. Letters from former pastors were read, congratulating pastor and people. Rev. G. A. Osborne, of the Methodist Church, on behalf of the Ministerial Association gave a glowing tribute to the character of Mr. Biss and alluded to the spirit of brotherly kindness existing between the different ministers. L. M. Berry, of the board of trustees sprang a complete surprise on the pastor and his wife when he arose and said he wanted a place on the program and on behalf of the church presented them with over thirty dollars in gold coin.

MAY 16, MEMBERS AND FRIENDS of the Baptist Church and Sunday school of Holly, united in giving a reception to their pastor and wife, the occasion being the eighth anniversary of Mr. Burnett's pastorate in Holly. The slogan for the evening was "Eight Years More." A testimonial, in the form of a well-filled purse, was presented Mr. and Mrs. Burnett.

A GET-TOGETHER BANQUET UNDER the auspices of the Lansing City Union was held in the dining room of North Church, Friday evening, June 2, covers being laid for 100. Brief reports were made by representatives of each church including Olivet, North, Hillsdale Street (colored), German-American, Christianity Mission and First. Pastor Balfour spoke words of welcome and President P. A. Johnson gave a resume of the work of the union since its organization three years ago, showing that it had achieved some things worth while. The guest of honor and principal speaker was Dr. H. C. Gleiss, superintendent of the Detroit City Union who was introduced by Rev. W. T. Roberts, director of city extension. Dr. Gleiss spoke of the opportunity the present day offered Baptists and gave valuable counsel in the matter of effective city mission effort. Music was supplied by the choir of the Hillsdale Street (colored) Church and Rev. Donald T. Grey, pastor of Olivet Church.

REV. CARL LEE KENAGY, recently elected pastor of the Bethany Baptist Church assumed duties on May 30. Mr. Kenagy fills the place vacated by the removal of Rev. Thomas B. Marsh. He is a native of Missouri; is a graduate of the Missouri State Teachers' College at Warrensburg, served as principal of the high school in Weleetka, Okla., and later took up work at William Jewell College. Upon his graduation he served as pastor of the Prince Avenue Church in Hannibal, Mo., which he left after three years, to enter Rochester, N. Y., Theological Seminary. During the war Mr. Kenagy left school to serve in Y. M. C. A. work at Camp Beauregard, La., where he was building secretary, in charge of some 50 Y. M. C. A. secretaries. After the war Mr. Kenagy spent a year as director of young people's work, in Central Baptist Church, Norwich, Conn., then re-entered Rochester, graduating in May, this year.

OHIO

THE TRINITY BAPTIST CHURCH of Barborton, which for five years has been without a building, dedicated a tabernacle on its new location, Sunday, June 4. The tabernacle is an all-steel building fully equipped with chairs and furniture and large enough to seat 600 people. Rev. C. J. McLean of the First Church of Akron, Rev. J. E. Myers of the First Church of Barborton, Rev. C. J. Sterratt of Kenmore and Rev. J. M. Houston of Goodyear Heights, assisted in the dedication. A revival meeting of two weeks followed the dedication, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Geo. M. Hulme and Ralph W. Carringer. Members are being added to the church each Sunday and all who are interested feel that a great future is before them.

DR. THEODORE M. HOFMEISTER, of First Church, Greenfield, delivered the memorial address for the G. A. R. and the sermon for the memorial of the I. O. O. F.

MISSOURI

AFTER A SUCCESSFUL PASTORATE in Rogers, Ark., Dr. J. C. Armstrong has accepted a call to take charge of the library and the students' home at William Jewell College, Liberty. As a companion and director of young men, he is fitted to do a large and constructive work. For almost a third of a century he was editor of the Central Baptist and was actively connected with the Board of State Missions and Sunday Schools. For many years he was a trustee of William Jewell College.

SOUTH DAKOTA

ON THURSDAY, JUNE 14, THE DEGREES of A. B. and A. M. were conferred upon Rev. Alex Rexion, of Lake Norden, S. Dak., by Western Reserve University, Cleveland. During the summer Mr. Rexion will supply the Baptist church at Lake Norden, thence he will go to Salt Lake City, Utah, to teach in Westminster College.

IOWA

REV. E. D. SIMS has taken hold of work at De Witt, Iowa, where for the past fifteen years a big brick church building, in a central location of the town, has been closed up for fifteen years. The building is a wreck now. Brother Sims has commenced to put a new roof on the building, and as soon as it is rehabilitated, he expects to conduct revival meetings in the building. He hopes to reorganize the church and work, and then make new the entire building.

WISCONSIN

EVANGELIST JOHN M. LINDEN, Madison, supplied the Madison pulpit, June 18. July 2 he will supply First Church, Michigan City, Ind. He opens next season's revival work July 23 with campaigns scheduled in Kansas and Wisconsin.

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. CHARLES STANLEY PEASE, for five years pastor at North Abington, has had a pleasantly unusual experience. He has received a spontaneous recall to the church at Northboro which he served seven years from 1903 to 1910. They simply remembered his clear-grained worth, and wanting a minister, came to him and said that they wanted him. It is difficult to decline such a call, especially when the terms of it fully accord with its spontaneity. The church at North Abington regrettably coincides.

THE STRATFORD STREET CHURCH in the West Roxbury district has called Rev. Herbert B. Hutchins, formerly of Hartford, Conn. This brings into the Boston ministry a man of solid attainments, and rich experience in important churches.

THE CHURCH at LEOMINSTER, Rev. W. F. Meyer, pastor, is at last to have facilities adequate to its unusual demands for growing Sunday-school and parish activities. The new extension will be added back of the present admirable edifice, will afford them ten rooms for work and growth, and cost over twenty thousand not entirely invisible dollars. This church is a bee-hive.

THE FIRST CHURCH, FRAMINGHAM, has been befittingly celebrating the fortieth anniversary of the settlement and ordination of its pastor, Rev. Franklin Hutchinson. This is Dr. Hutchinson's only pastorate. It has had all the characteristics of the old-time New England ministries that, in this shorter-winded period are so rare. It takes substance in mind and heart to run such a race.

THERE IS REJOICING over the failure to allure Dr. Everett C. Herrick from First Church, Fall River. He is so thoroughly enmeshed in the work of that big parish, and in the life of the city, that his going seemed like an imminent calamity, and it was the loving expression of that fear that prevailed. Now the wide work will widen.

TWO OF THE BUSIEST SUPPLY MINISTERS in eastern Massachusetts are Dr. F. B. Gruel of Brookline, and Dr. I. W. Grimes of Cambridge. Both are in vigorous maturity and in constant demand. Dr. Gruel carried the First Church, Providence, R. I., about six months in 1921, and evidently made an abiding impression, for he is to be the supply there during the month of July, and many are anticipating his coming. Dr. Grimes' several pastorates in the state have given him prominence, and his mature preaching power, and wisdom in leadership and counsel, give him decided acceptability in occasional and temporary supply.

THE EVIDENT INTEREST of press and public in Northern Baptist doings is an unusual experience. All Boston papers conclude that Northern Baptists are compelling attention, and are giving it to them. How much merit there is in it for them is not an altogether painless query. They are not exactly causing the uncircumcised to rejoice, but they look, and listen. A reporter of one of the worst papers in Boston assured the writer that "no one could enjoy such deplorable scrapping among good people!" Yet he was hoping to get the "story" of it.

REV. WILLIAM C. R. VINTEN, formerly assistant pastor at Ruggles Street Church, Boston, and latterly stated supply at the South Boston Church, accepts the hearty call of the good church at Turners Falls, and has entered upon his work there. Mr. Vinten will do them nothing but good, and will bring with him a spirit that adorns the gospel with a wise and tactful sympathy made the more effective by a rich experience.

REV. EBEN F. FRANCIS, one of several illustrious minister-brothers, and pastor of First Church, Lynn, finds himself busier than ever in that full and useful church. The congregations are inspiring both morning and evening, and evidently the church is organized to help and lift the people. Pastor Francis has the qualities in leadership and character that evoke a gratifying response, especially from the many young men who gather there.

SUNDAY EVENING, JUNE 18, Rev. Neil MacLean, pastor of West Midway Church, preached a fitting Father's Day sermon; and, at the close, baptized two young ladies. Increasing interest is manifested on the part of the young people of the congregation and indications are that not a few will eventually unite with the church.

VERMONT

REV. RALPH H. ROGERS, who has been employed by the Vermont State Convention for the past nine months, closed his work on June 11. Mr. Rogers was at first engaged in promotional work and more recently has been acting pastor of the Windsor Church. The good wishes of his many Vermont friends will follow him as he leaves to take up further study at the University of Chicago.

PLANS ARE PRACTICALLY COMPLETED for the Vermont School of Religious Education which was held at Vermont Academy, Saxtons River, from June 23-30. It is hoped that every Sunday school in the state has taken advantage of this splendid opportunity for training for the most important work of the church.

MAINE

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the board of managers of the Free Baptist Woman's Missionary Society, will be held in Porter Memorial Hall, Ocean Park, Maine, Friday, July 28, at 2 p. m.—Mrs. N. I. Jose, secy.

NEW YORK

REV. ELMER E. DRESSER, who is to close his pastorate at Lowville, N. Y., July 3, baptized six young ladies Sunday, June 11. This makes the additions to the membership of the church during his five-year pastorate 146. Financially the years have also been good. Mr. Dresser begins his work at Pittston, Pa., July 9.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL YEAR, financially and spiritually, ever experienced in the history of Baptist work in Northern California has just been recorded. Under the leadership of Secretary C. W. Brinstead, last year the churches of Northern California gave for missions over $13 per capita and a total amount of $244,000. More than 1,400 people were baptized and 1,700 received by letter and otherwise during the past year. This is the largest number ever received by baptism by the churches of this convention in one year's time. This success is the result of two causes, able leadership and close cooperation. All departments of the state work cooperated in a most harmonious manner. The young people pushed a "Win-One League," the Sunday schools had a special "Easter Campaign," the pastors did the "work of evangelists." The entire state for over three months entered into a spiritual drive for souls. A live evangelistic committee of ten, one being appointed by the state board from each association, and the director of evangelism outlined and led in this campaign. This plan of organization proved so efficient that it has been continued. A marked feature of the campaign was its cosmopolitan complexion. Large numbers of Chinese, Japanese, Mexicans, Negroes, Indians, Danes, Swedes and Norwegians followed their Lord in baptism.

EASTERN WASHINGTON

MRS. HARRIET ELIZABETH DAVIS, wife of Rev. Charles H. Davis, fell asleep in Jesus June 5 at their home in Yakima, Wash. She was born 1842 in Boston of colonial ancestry, and possessed exceptional gifts of person and character. For nearly forty years she shared in the active duties of the pastor's wife, enduring without complaint the hardships of the frontier and winning in the service many stars for her crown. She is survived by her husband and one son, Supt. A. C. Davis of Yakima.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

CHINESE CHRISTIAN CENTER, SEATTLE: On Sunday afternoon, June 11, a service was held at the corner of Tenth and King Streets to break ground for the erection of a Chinese Christian Center building. A large number of persons were present from the Chinese Church, and several of the other churches in the city were represented. Above the group floated the American and Chinese flags. Mr. Bong, a member of the Chinese Baptist Church, presided. The service was partly in the Chinese language and partly in English. Mr. Jun, Chinese, read the Scriptures. Prayer was offered by Dr. F. W. Carstens, pastor of Queen Anne Church. An address was given by Rev. Lum Ming Tak, pastor of the church, and Dr. G. F. Holt, representing the Western Washington Convention, gave an address. The closing prayer was offered by Rev. C. L. Maxfield, Y. M. C. A. secretary of the University of Washington. The first spadeful of earth was dug by the pastor and another by Dr. G. F. Holt, representing the state convention. The building, with the lot, is to cost $37,500. The church hopes to be able to enter it in the early fall. The lot was purchased by the church. The building will be erected by the joint offerings of the Western Washington Convention, American Home Mission Society and Woman's American Home Mission Society.

UNIVERSITY Y. M. C. A.: As a part of the commencement exercises of the University of Washington, ground was broken for a new Y. M. C. A. building. The secretary of the association at the university is Rev. Charles L. Maxfield, a Baptist minister, who for a number of years was a missionary in the Philippine Islands.

Rocky Mountain States

UTAH

REV. EARLE D. SIMS recently closed a six months' engagement in Utah, five months in Soldier Summit, a town of a thousand population and 7,400 feet above sea level. Brother Sims found the town without religious services, and found only two Baptists living there. He secured a room, started a Sunday school and Ladies' Aid and established regular services. He purchased a central corner and dug a basement and with a little hired help built and completed and furnished a modern church building. Upon completing the building he conducted three weeks' revival meetings in it, baptized a number of people, organized a Baptist church and a B. Y. P. U. and started a prayer meeting. The building cost $7,000. Of this amount the American Baptist Home Mission Society gave $2,500, the Baptist churches of Utah $1,000 and the balance of the money was raised by Brother Sims from the local community and from his friends throughout the Northern Baptist Convention. Miss Delia M. Beattie, a missionary of the Woman's Society, assisted Brother Sims in the revival meetings. Two weeks were spent assisting Pastor Byron Baynes in meetings at Bethel Church of Salt Lake City. Mr. Sims also preached in Rio Grande, Taylor Avenue, Murray, and Immanuel Baptist churches of Salt Lake City, and gave five lectures at the Presbyterian College.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

REV. J. ORRIN GOULD, university pastor at the University of Idaho, has resigned his position and will be ready to accept a pastorate in the West or Middle West Sept. 1. He was formerly assistant to Dr. Bruce Kinney in the southwest district of the Home Mission Society; pastor of the Baptist Church at Manhattan, Kans.; Sheridan, Wyo.; Alliance, Neb., and director of institutional education for the Nebraska Convention. He is a man of wide denominational acquaintance and experience. He prefers to locate in some college city. His address is 626 Elm St., Moscow, Idaho.

Obituary

EMMA L. MILLER

Miss Emma L. Miller was born in Marshall, Wis., Aug. 27, 1853, and died in Los Angeles May 24, 1922.

From a long line of Christian ancestry she inherited unusual physical, mental and spiritual powers, which were developed in the atmosphere of a Christian home. She was converted at the age of 16 and was the last one of a family of ten children to be baptized in the same stream of water, that ran near by her country home. From that time until the day of her death she lived an active devoted Christian life.

Her interest in missions was a part of her inheritance from her missionary mother, which was greatly intensified and developed by her education. She was a graduate of Wayland Academy, Beaver Dam, Wis., the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago, and the Theological Department of the University of Chicago.

She bore the Commission of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society for thirty-seven years, filling various positions on different fields of work. Her first field was in Salt Lake City; then for three years she was preceptress of the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago. This was followed by seven years as organizer and superintendent of missions in the West. The states covered during these years were the Dakotas, Montana, Idaho, Washington, California, and Arizona. Nearly all of the stronger missionary societies on this entire field today were organized during those formative years.

The next fifteen years of her life were spent in the South where she was preceptress of The Missionary Training School for Colored Women, at Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C., and at Dallas, Tex. Here she prepared many colored women for work among their own people, both in the South and in Africa.

The last ten years of her life were given for the Russian people of Los Angeles. She loved her work wherever it was and gave herself to it with unstinted devotion and faithfulness, but her sympathy and interest were world wide and especially for the work of her own denomination; giving generously to it while she lived and remembering it in her will.

Her funeral, which was held in the Russian Chapel, was attended by the people whom she had helped, the children she had taught and a host of friends from all parts of the city. The service was conducted by Rev. J. B. Fox, superintendent of city missions. Rev. J. W. Brougher, her pastor, Rev. W. F. Harper, Rev. James A. Francis, Rev. A. W. Rider and Rev. J. E. Artemenko, the Russian pastor, all took part in the service. From a personal acquaintance of her and her work they each paid a just tribute to her beautiful character and noble work as a good missionary of Jesus Christ. In a quiet spot in one of Los Angeles' most beautiful cemeteries she was laid to rest. Her immediate family who survive her are three sisters, Mrs. Harriet E. Twining of Ottawa, Kan., Mrs. Mary S. Smith and Mrs. J. Jackson of Los Angeles, and a brother, Henry A. Miller of the same city.

REV. WILLIAM PARSONS STANLEY

Not one of the large circle of friends was prepared for the message Sunday night, May 21, that William P. Stanley had entered the life beyond. He was always "the picture of health," but a weakness of the heart had never registered itself in his general health. His illness lasted from Thursday night until the following Sunday afternoon.

A simple but impressive funeral service conducted by Rev. Arthur W. Warren, pastor of First Baptist Church, was held from Mr. Stanley's old home, 61 Middle St., Gloucester, Mass., May 25. Large delegations attended the service from the Middle Street Baptist Church, Portsmouth, N. H., which Mr. Stanley served eleven years as pastor, from the Baptist Church, Manchester-by-the-sea, of which Mr. Stanley had been the pastor for the past year and from Boston and vicinity.

William Parsons Stanley was born in Concord, N. H., December 14, 1877. His father, John L. Stanley, was for years one of Gloucester's leading and successful business men. His mother, Annette Parsons Stanley, was the daughter of William Parsons, 2nd, a descendant of Jeffrey Parsons, the original settler of the name who came to Gloucester in 1665. His grandfather, Rev. Herbert Stanley, was for many years a temperance missionary in New England.

After graduating from the Gloucester high school, Mr. Stanley entered Harvard College, graduating with honor in 1899. The following year, he took a post-graduate course at Harvard, before entering in 1900 the Rochester Theological Seminary, New York. From the latter institution, he graduated in 1903 and after a year's study and travel abroad, he was ordained to the work of the Christian ministry, 1904.

His first pastorate was in Oberlin, Ohio, for four years, then he accepted a call to Portsmouth, N. H., where he remained eleven years. After the death of his mother in 1919, he resigned his pastorate at Portsmouth and went to live in his old home at Gloucester, Mass. Later he became acting pastor of Rockport Baptist Church and last year accepted the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Manchester-by-the-sea, Mass. After his return to his old home at Gloucester, Mr. Stanley the attendance has been constantly increasing. Despite the business depression, when large numbers of our people have been forced to live on greatly reduced incomes, the enrolment of our American colleges has been greater this year than at any time in their history. A study has recently been made of thirty typical universities. In twenty-nine the gain for this year over last year has been 7 per cent in full time regular students and 17 per cent in the grand total enrolment. The gain in attendance over that of five years ago has been 55 per cent. The gain in the last ten years has been 139 per cent; from 94,412 students to 226,421. This makes the greatest development in educational interest in the history of any nation.

Northern Baptists in Fifteenth Session

Our Baptist colleges have not failed to share in this remarkable progress. The figures indicate that all of them have a larger enrolment than a year ago and a decided increase over a period of five years. Some things are now settled. We have not too many colleges in America. In fact we are already discovering that we have not educational facilities enough now to meet the present demand, and the demand grows greater with every passing year. One of the greatest educational problems facing America is as to how we can develop our educational plants fast enough to meet the demand. The future of the Christian college is now assured. If the college has sufficient equipment and income to give a good education it need have no fear for the future. The demand for its service is demonstrated.

This assurance lays upon us now an obligation to equip and staff these colleges in such a way as to enable them to promise to prospective students a high grade education. If our colleges are prepared to give a first-class education, even though it may be limited in its scope, there will be no question about their having all the students they can care to receive.

The Christian forces in America are now squarely facing a definite issue. We have long professed our belief that besides the system of state education there must be a system of Christian education sufficiently strong to make a compelling impression upon the state system. That system is now developing so rapidly that unless the Christian system is greatly strengthened it cannot possibly exert an influence sufficiently strong to effect the moral and religious standards of the state schools. Nothing that we have achieved in the past is sufficient to meet the present demands. Unless we greatly strengthen our Christian schools we shall fail to meet the opportunity and the demand of this hour. The opportunity is ours, but we must grasp it if we would possess it.

OUR STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY

Our theological seminaries had a most agreeable surprise awaiting them as they opened their doors last fall. The survey that had been made in the spring seemed to indicate that there were few men in the colleges who were planning to go on to the seminaries in the fall. But when fall came a surprisingly large number of new men presented themselves for matriculation at each seminary. It is not clear yet where they came from, but the surprise was a most welcome one. Most of the seminaries report that their new men are of an unusually high grade.

THE UNIVERSITY PASTOR

Our work in the student field has gone on steadily during the year. When the Board of Education undertook this work nine years ago, pioneer efforts had been made in only two universities—Michigan and Wisconsin. This past year we have been operating in forty colleges and universities.

THE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE OF OUR SCHOOLS

Without question our colleges are awakening to the fuller realization of their obligation for the moral and spiritual development of their student body. Other colleges than those which we have named are giving serious thought to these great problems. The Board of Education has often pointed out to the schools themselves and to our constituency the imperative necessity that our schools should be Christian not merely in name but even more in the character of their faculty, the spirit of their environment, and the impression which they make upon the student body. Much depends upon the teachers themselves. We repeat with emphasis what we have frequently asserted before, that our schools should give first consideration to the Christian character of their teachers. If by their character, their attitude or their teaching they are in any way compromising the Christian influence of the institution, they should be invited to depart. Difficult as it often is to secure the right kind of teachers, trustees and officers should rest content with no teachers who are not earnestly and actively Christian. Our Christian schools have only one excuse for their appeal for students; one excuse for their appeal for large funds and that is that under Christian teachers, in an environment that is Christian they are able to give an education that is Christian in spirit and in passion, and that sends forth men and women who have caught the spirit of their Master.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION

It is now three years since the Board of Education took over the department of missionary education. We are deeply gratified over the development of this phase of our church life. For some time prior to this period there had been no systematic missionary education in the denomination save such as had been carried on in the women's missionary circles. These three years have seen a complete change. This phase of our education has been developed to a high degree of efficiency. Hundreds of churches now have a thorough system of missionary education that runs through all departments of the church. It is in no sense of boasting that we report that today no other denomination has a finer system of missionary education, better articulated or better adapted to our various types of churches. We do not claim perfection for it but the churches have given it a most hearty welcome.

We are especially proud of the development of the World Wide Guild and the Children's World Crusade since this work among young people was turned over to us. The numbers of chapters of each organization has very largely increased and a healthy life is being developed. Their record of giving during the past year has been a source of great satisfaction. In the campaign to raise extra funds this year the women asked the chapters of the World Wide Guild to assume a responsibility for $50,000 over a period of three years. The reports indicate that during this first year the Guilds have already paid up $37,000. The Crusaders had an allotment of $6,000 for the three years and they have turned in $9,518 in one year. This is a splendid record for our young women and children.

The work of the coming years is to be presented on practically the same scale as for the last two years.

Standardization of the Ministry and Ministerial Standing

At the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention held at Buffalo in 1920, the duties formerly required of the Committee of Standardization of the Ministry were transferred to the Board of Education (Item 101, Minutes 1920). The Board of Education found that there are several committees in existence charged with the same matter, viz., a committee appointed in 1921 by the Pastors' Conference of the Northern Baptist Convention, a committee of the American Baptist Publication Society, also committees from several of the state conventions. The Board of Education has conferred with these committees and the representatives of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board. The Board has consulted letters from thirty-two state convention secretaries. We believe that the following recommendations are in close agreement with the views of all the organizations consulted and that they represent the view of the state conventions which have expressed themselves in this matter. They will also be found to be in harmony with the action already taken by the Northern Baptist Convention (Convention Annual 1917, Pg. 35; 1918, Pg. 87-88).

RESOLUTIONS

Whereas, There are no common standards recognized by the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention as to prerequisites for ordination to the ministry, nor is there any common procedure regarding recognition and standing; and

Whereas, It is very widely felt that uniform standards should be adopted for the sake of maintaining a worthy and well-qualified ministry, and that there should be protection for The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Fund;

Be it Resolved, That the Northern Baptist Convention recommend to the state conventions within its territory that they adopt the following plans.

1. That all candidates for ordination, who have not already had its equivalent, shall be required to complete a two-years' course of study that shall include:

- (a) Elements of English language.
- (b) A course in the English Bible.
- (c) Biblical theology.
- (d) Baptist principles and history.
- (e) Homiletics.
- (f) Modern missions.
- (g) Religious education.

(A suggested curriculum for such a course was presented in the Convention Annual 1918, Pages 88-90.)

2. That the examination in this course be conducted by a committee of the state convention, in such manner as each convention may determine for itself.

3. Where a church is served by an unordained minister, he should be licensed to preach by the church for a limited period. He might also be authorized during this period to administer the ordinances, but ordination should be postponed until he has satisfactorily completed this course of study.

MINISTERIAL STANDING

State conventions are asked to pass resolutions:

1. Refusing financial aid to churches which shall not in the future conform to the educational standards for ordination adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention.

2. Refusing to recognize as ordained ministers those who have not the minimum educational requirements for ordination adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention, this action to apply to ordinations bearing date subsequent to this action.

In order to make the foregoing regulations effective:

1. The conventions are requested to ask each association to appoint a committee on ministerial standing. These committees should secure lists of accredited ministers residing within the bounds of the association and should publish a ministerial list each year. These associational committees should seek to prevent unfit men being settled as pastors of churches within the bounds of their associations.

2. A pastor accepting a call to a church outside the bounds of the association in which he has been settled shall be expected to secure certificate of ministerial standing from the committee of the association and present it immediately on settlement to the committee of the association in which his new charge is located.

3. Each state convention is asked to appoint a committee on ordination and ministerial standing. This committee might be composed of the chairman of committees in the several associations of the state. It should be the duty of this committee to receive credentials from ministers before settlement in the state, either as pastors of churches or as heads of other denominational units operating within the state. This committee should present to the convention for publication a list of accredited ministers. This list should contain only the names of ministers who have associational standing as interpreted in the foregoing statement.

4. Pastors going from one state to another shall be expected to present their certificates of standing before being employed by any church or other denominational institution operating within the state.

5. We recommend that state conventions avail themselves of the assistance offered by the American Baptist Publication Society and the help of such theological seminaries as are willing to render service in preparing and directing pre-ordination courses of study for those who have not had seminary training.

6. State conventions are asked to instruct committees of their own organizations appointed to work with The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board, that they decline to recommend any grants for men who have failed to comply with the minimum requirements for ordination adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention. This action to apply only to those who are ordained subsequent to the adoption of this resolution.

We recommend that The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board adopt rules to conform with the above recommendations.

7. State conventions are urged to keep the subject of standards for ordination and ministerial standing before their constituency, and to take advantage of the present interest in the matter to secure action in the direction indicated. They are also asked to inform the Board of Education and the Committee of the Baptist Pastors' Conference as to actions of this matter taken within the bounds of their conventions.

After some discussion, this entire report of the Board of Education was received and its recommendations adopted.

At the afternoon session, Dr. W. S. Abernethy delivered an address on Christian Stewardship, in which he insisted on three things, namely, God is the owner; we are the trustees; we ought to get on to some satisfactory business basis with God.

The convention then dissolved into sectional conferences, to consider matters of interest to workers in cities, evangelistic workers, etc.

The evening was called "Civic Evening," and the address was given by the inimitable Clinton N. Howard, of Rochester, N. Y., on the subject "A Warless World and a Sober Nation." An abstract follows:

"The passion of the world today is for peace. The despairing cry that is going up to the throne of God from the bleeding and war-torn heart of the world with groanings that cannot be uttered is—God of the nations, Father of all humankind, send peace!

"If the church will lead the way, function in the life of the state the principles of Christian religion, and have faith enough to fix the date, the scourge of war will pass away in this generation. If the church has the faith of a grain of mustard seed, it can say to this mountain of war, 'Be thou removed, and cast into the depths of the sea,' and it will come to pass.

"The fundamentals of the Christian faith put into practice would abolish war around the world. What are those fundamentals? The things that are essential to salvation. Jesus settled that for all time beyond human controversy. Jesus told the rich young ruler, 'If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. This do and live.' When a lawyer asked him, 'Which is the greatest commandment?' he replied, 'Love God and thy neighbor as thyself. On these two hang all the law and the prophets.'

"These two fundamentals of the Christian faith, spoken by the founder of the Christian religion, put into practice would abolish war around the world, and bring peace on earth, good will to men, in this generation.

Divisions of Opinion

"We are not all of one opinion, even in the Kingdom. If there are differences that arise in the same Christian denomination, the same Christian congregation, and in the same individual family relations there will arise differences among nations, differing as they do in race, language, history and religion, in color and character, in methods of government.

"The question for our consideration is what shall nations do when these differences and quarrels arise? Shall we settle them with the sword? Shall brute force rule the world? Shall scientific killing be the court of last resort among civilized nations? Shall the world continue the barbarous practice of settling its disputes by mortal combat? Shall we sacrifice 10,000,000 orphans and demolish a million homes to determine who is right and who is wrong when Christian nations have a quarrel? Shall wholesale murder be sanctioned and regulated by international law to be violated, as it always has been violated, when required by military necessity?

Conferences Not Enough

"I do not care what well intentioned resolutions are adopted by nations in conferences, whether at Washington, Genoa, or the Hague; so long as the military establishments are kept up, war weapons accumulated, and made ready for use, battleships built, and soldiers trained for war, nations will resort to force for what they regard as sufficient provocation, and use prohibited weapons, and resort to uncivilized warfare when it becomes a question of life or death, victory or defeat. They always have and they will again, if the nations keep up their armament, and continue their preparation for war, as an insurance for peace. The only way to civilize war is to abolish it; the only way to abolish war, is to destroy the means and weapons of making war.

Substitutes for the Sword

"There will be disputes until the end of time, but they must be settled by reason, by the reign of law, by arbitration—by force only as a last resort. But we deny that force is limited to the sword. There are methods of coercion more ef-and her friends, especially her pastor, to spread widely some misapprehension. Quite the contrary is true. The only account that has gone out from San Jose is a very brief news item in a purely local paper. Mr. Coats has done all the broadcasting. The news account which was published was briefer than accounts of such functions usually are, and if "the pastor of the First Baptist Church of New Monterey (a church of some fifty-five members), the moderator of the San Jose Association and of the council" had not rushed into print with his comments on the procedure of the council, the conduct of the church, of "Baptist tradition and history," and the difference in standing between Mrs. McPherson and other ordained Baptist ministers, the denomination would never have heard how ambitious secretaries, meddling ministers and "liberal theologians" had conspired to invade the councils of a church and to trample on every precedent, principle, polity and privilege of an independent congregation.

They did not come "to sit in council to consider the advisability" of ordaining a candidate to the Christian ministry. They came to try to discredit the candidate, and defeat the purpose of the council. This was so patent that visiting clergymen and laymen from all denominations remarked about it, that the great audience was rudely awakened to it, and finally cheered the straightforward and ingenious answers which artlessly thwarted their self-evident intent. As one fair-minded, warm-hearted minister said, "I never heard or saw Mrs. McPherson until today. It is her enemies which have made me her friend." The church and its pastor do receive the Bible without question as the revealed word of God. Not "mere sound, then black printers' ink on white rag-paper," Carlyle, "but, as it is in truth the word of God, which also worketh in you that believe," they believe that the gifts and callings of God are without recall; that according to the great commission Jesus is as actually and potentially present with his church here and now as he ever was, or ever will be, anywhere within the universe of God. This literal acceptance and practice of the presence of the living Lord may be fanaticism, but it is not unscriptural and it works. There may be peril in it, there certainly is power.

There has been but one week within the last nine months when the minister of the First Church of San Jose has not baptized from one to nearly 100 candidates. The church is at present increasing in membership at the rate of over fifty each month and the spirit of revival is constantly on the rise. The results in the ministry of healing are blessed, marvelous and permanent. They include blindness, deafness, paralysis, cancer, rheumatism and all manner of sickness. These records are carefully tabulated and the files are open for inspection and many of the cases are under the pastoral care of the church, and easily available for verification.

Mr. Towner has on file over 2,500 cases that testify to healing over their own signature. The wonderful work done in salvation from drink, drugs, suicide and personal, domestic and social tragedy seems to set the seal of God upon the faith and practice of his people, who do not debate and question, but believe and practice. In view of this, the slur Mr. Coats throws upon Mr. Towner, pastor of the ordaining church, is wholly uncalled for, as well as ungracious.

CHARLES ALBERT PARKER.

Armenian Rights Society

The Armenian Rights Society of Pennsylvania, an outgrowth of Armenian relief work, has been organized in Philadelphia, with the following officers: Pres., Rev. Paul S. Leinbach, editor-in-chief of the Reformed Church Messenger; vice-pres., Fullerton L. Waldo, assistant editor of The Public Ledger; treas., Frank J. Smith, of Provident Life and Trust Company; secy., Harry Pringle Ford, connected with the Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath school work. Rev. Frank P. Parkin, secretary of the American Bible Society, Rev. W. Edward Raffety, editor-in-chief of the Sunday school publications of the American Baptist Publication Society, Rev. Haig Y. Yardumian, pastor of the Church of the Martyrs of Armenia, and Fred Perry Powers, assistant editor of The Philadelphia Record, are members of the executive committee.

The object of the society is to influence, in all proper ways, public opinion and to secure action by the government and people in behalf of Armenian independence and the international rights of the Armenian people. All citizens who believe that the Armenian people are entitled to a free and independent government and should be forever delivered from the tyranny of the Turk, will be eligible to membership in the society, and it is hoped to have branches organized throughout the state.

An effort will be made to have all who are interested in relief work for Armenia, secure signatures to the following petition and send it to the state department at Washington or to representatives in congress: "We, the undersigned citizens of America, believing it to be the duty of America to assist in securing justice and liberty for the oppressed Christian nations of the Near East, and particularly for the Armenian people who were our brave and gallant allies in the world war, and who continue to be subject to persecution and cruelty, hereby petition our state department and congress to take such necessary steps as will secure political justice to the Near East and fulfill the promise of a free and independent republic which was made to the Armenian people."

joined the Masonic Order and gave to it his loyal support.

In 1905 Mr. Stanley married Marina E. Pattison of Rochester, N. Y., daughter of Prof. T. Harwood Pattison of that city. Mr. Stanley is survived by his wife, two daughters, Jean Le favour and Louise Bainbridge Stanley, and by his sister, Mrs. Gordon Campbell, Upper Montclair, N. J.

Mr. Stanley was a true Christian gentleman. From the past, he inherited those fine traits of intellect and character which have made New England manhood one of our nation's greatest assets. These traits, he ennobled and enriched. Exceptionally fine opportunities for business and professional life summoned him, after his graduation from Harvard. He chose the exacting and sacrificial life of the Christian minister and with rare ability and success, he followed his chosen work. His Portsmouth friends have put into words a tribute which finds a response in the hearts of all who have worked with Mr. Stanley.

"He went in and out among the people of this parish with love in his heart, God's truth upon his lips, and kindness in his hand. He has left footprints that time cannot eradicate for he trod the path of service, following his Master."

His generous deeds were so quietly performed that his left hand never knew the ministry of the right but a host of friends remember with what accuracy his gift and their need found each other. Always, it was not only what he gave but what he shared of his great heart which glorified such service to his fellow men.

His home was his delight. Here his rich mind and warm heart found joyful expression. Hospitality abounded. Many soldiers and sailors at Portsmouth during the war will remember the inspiration of his personal influence and the cheer which came from the hours in the paragonage with Mr. and Mrs. Stanley.

He loved the sea. Nothing in nature seemed to fascinate him as "the great and wide sea" with its varying moods and limitless energy. Looking back, it seems Providential that so much of his ministry and the closing years of his life were spent where he could draw his inspiration from one of the most picturesque and richly historical parts of the New England coast.

To all who knew him, Mr. Stanley was coming to the height of his power and usefulness and our world had need of him for many years. But he was hastily summoned upon the voyage which has brought to those who are left a painful separation, to him abounding life and unlimited development of the rich gifts of mind and soul which here made him a noble, true knight of the Kingdom of God.

A Resolution

Under letters of May 8, 1922, Jessie W. Day and Charles F. Hall asked for an ex-parte council to meet on May 22, 1922, in the Central Baptist Parish House, Manhattan, to consider the whole question of their exclusion from the Madison Avenue Baptist Church and to give them needed advice.

The council met on May 22 and organized by electing Rev. Albert G. Lawson as moderator and Rev. W. E. Mounteney as clerk. Subsequent sessions were held May 25, June 1, 5, and 8.

Pastors and delegates from seventeen churches of the association participated. At its closing session on June 8, the following conclusion was arrived at:

Resolved—
"That we declare that it is our conviction that Mrs. Jessie W. Day and Rev. Chas. F. Hall were unjustly and irregularly excluded from the Madison Avenue Baptist Church.

"The Council need take no further action concerning Mr. Hall since he is already in membership with the Calvary Baptist Church of this city and the council has already declared that his standing as a Christian minister was not in any way impaired by his expulsion from the Madison Avenue Church.

"The Council recommends, however, that if the Madison Avenue Church is unwilling to reinstate Mrs. Day to membership she be received into the fellowship of any Baptist church to which she may make application."

All members present voted on resolution and there was one vote opposed.

The Council ordered that copies of resolution be sent to both conveners of Council, to Madison Avenue Baptist Church, to Watchman-Examiner and to THE BAPTIST. By order of the Council.

ALBERT G. LAWSON, Moderator.
W. E. MOUNTENEY, Clerk.

Kalamazoo College

Kalamazoo College held its sixty-eighth annual commencement June 18 to 21. There was an unusually large number of alumni and ex-students back for the commencement exercises. The sermon before the religious societies was preached on Sunday morning, June 18, by Rev. Floyd I. Beckwith of Boise, Idaho. President H. L. Stetson delivered the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday evening. The commencement address was given Wednesday morning by Rev. James McGee of New Haven, Conn. There were forty-two members in the graduating class with an unusually large number graduating with high honors. The high character of the academic work of the past year is evidenced by the large number of the graduating class receiving fellowships and scholarships to post-graduate schools of the country.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. Floyd I. Beckwith of Boise, Idaho, who graduated from the Kalamazoo College in 1904. The same degree was conferred upon Rev. James McGee of New Haven, Conn., who graduated from Kalamazoo College in 1905. The degree of Doctor of Science was conferred upon Prof. Charles A. Deppe of Franklin College.

At the commencement exercises President Stetson spoke of the fine progress which was being made in connection with the extension program of the college. In the development program the unit which has been receiving first consideration has been the women's dormitory. The campaign in the interest of this has developed to such an extent that the trustees are hopeful that they will be able to begin construction of the building this fall.

At the commencement dinner President Stetson announced that the trustees had accepted his resignation and that Professor Allan Hoben of Carleton College, Minn., had been elected to the presidency of the college.

not and that was all on account of a great big angleworm that Albert had caught. The reason that Albert would not leave it was because he thought that a wasp might come and get the worm.

When he had struggled with the rain for a while he felt as if he was going to die. Finally the Ant Witch commanded the rain to stop, for it was he who had called on the rain to see what Albert was made of. When the rain stopped Albert was surprised to find that he was just as well off as ever.

After these exciting experiences Albert learned how to tend to the "lice-cows." It was lots of fun. Sometimes the "cows" would kick the milkpail over and send it rolling down the hill he was working on.

Albert also learned how to catch worms and butterflies. When he was catching butterflies all he needed to do was to sit in the middle of a flower and wait for a butterfly to come. When it came Albert would grab it by the neck and bite its antennae off. Then he would take it to the nest and with the help of the other ants kill the butterfly and store it away for good keeping. Sometimes he would get a ride on the butterflies.

When Albert was out on very hot days or very cold and rainy ones he carried a tiny little blade of grass for an umbrella. When Albert woke the next morning he was astonished to find that what he thought he had been doing he had dreamed.

THE CHURCH IN RELATION TO THE ORGANIST

How many of the church-going public realize the duties of an organist? Is it generally known even in this enlightened age what it means to become, not necessarily an expert, but an average good organist, one who understands the needs of the day and whose playing will make a direct appeal to the listener? Can it be supposed that any one still entertains the idea of an organist doing his work without preparation—simply playing through the various items of the service at sight, with an hour or two devoted to the choir at the weekly rehearsal—and then dismissing the subject for a week? If there are those who think this is the sum total of the time and thought expended, is it not the moment to dispel this erroneous impression?

Some Indispensable Principles

To go farther, a few of the indispensable principles to be mastered in studying the organ may be mentioned: The pianist plays upon a single keyboard; the organist upon two, three or four, according to the size of the instrument. To this is added the pedal-board, requiring independence of action between hands and feet—necessitating the ability to play a theme with the right hand, and then with the left, and still a third with the feet. All this at one and the same time. Years ago people flocked to hear Blind Tom, the negro, who was able to accomplish this "wonder" at the piano, playing a popular air with his right hand and another with his left at one and the same time. I can well remember as a child having been taken to hear this extraordinary accomplishment, deafening applause following each number on the program.

It is just this, developed and elaborated upon, but done in a legitimate manner—according to form and rule—that an organist accomplishes each time he plays. This frequently requires years of patient study and naturally an outlay of time, effort and money before facility is gained. A knowledge of registration, transposition, modulation, score-reading, accompanying, conducting and many similar things must be attained, even if only in a general way, for the churches in these days require musical services, with selections from the oratorios, cantatas and standard works, at special services, in the small towns as well as in the large ones.

A Higher Standard

The standard of church music today undoubtedly is much more to the front than at any previous time. How are the rank and file of the profession to cope with it? If it is to be done well, then sufficient preparation must be given. The item of selecting the organ voluntaries and choir music alone requires time and research—not to mention the preparation. Many clergymen desire the numbers to conform with the sermon. This is the only logical way the musical part can hold its proper sphere of usefulness and I not only heartily endorse it, but from actual experience find it produces a spiritual uplift that is far-reaching in its effect. With ample preparation the organist can give to the service an atmosphere that will further the effort of the clergy in a way otherwise impossible.

The organist who devotes only a few hours to the preparation of his work no longer holds good. The church-going public wants the best, but if it is to have it, the only solution is in a substantial increase in the salaries offered. If this is not granted it will become a necessity for many men and women now holding organ positions to abandon the profession and adopt commercial pursuits. Will this be permitted? It is a question which both music committees and the clergy should consider seriously. Hundreds of churches are now paying from $3 to $5 a Sunday and an equal number not over $10 for each Sunday's work to their organists. This is to prepare, conduct and play two services each Sunday and at least one choir rehearsal. Is this right? Surely in no other business or profession is such a demand made for a compensation that is absolutely unjust. An office boy formerly started at $3 to $5 a week, but such cannot be found today. Then why an organist? Will not our committees look at the subject in the right light? The laborer is surely worthy of his hire.

A Sufficient Salary

It is to be presumed that the average church cannot offer a sufficient salary to support an organist entirely, but it should be of an ample size to compensate for the time and knowledge expended. The organ has unlimited possibilities and the development of church music knows no bounds. Therefore, with adequate recompense for time expended, the music in our churches can be raised to standards never yet attained.—William C. Carl in The Diapason.

Oftentimes, especially during the summer months, the choir-master finds frequent use for easy trios for solo voices. The first six above listed have won wide use for their honesty of purpose, technical ease, and service value. They are written for various combinations as to voices—the first two for soprano, alto and tenor; the Smith number for two sopranos and alto; the Stearns selections are for alto, tenor and bass, and soprano, alto and bass voices, respectively; and the final title is scored for trio of women's voices. All can be highly recommended for service use.

The last five numbers for male quartet or chorus are designed to be sung without accompaniment, but all are provided with such in case instrumental support is desired. All the numbers are simple in structure and content—and pleasing melodically.

fective than a resort to arms. Let the nations serve notice upon the world that any power that makes war upon another without first submitting the question in dispute to an arbitration tribunal shall put itself outside the pale of civilization, be denied the right to operate upon the high seas, refused access to the raw materials and markets of the world, denied the right to buy or sell when under the ban, and the sword would rust in the scabbard. An international trade boycott against a brigand nation would be more effective than armed force. A league of nations, a supreme world court, and compulsory international arbitration is essential to the abolition of war. This must be a substitute for the sword.

World Headed for War

"The world is trembling upon the brink of another disaster. The old hatred among the neighborly nations of Europe has been deepened by the world war, and unless the world finds some other way of settling their disputes than by flying at each other's throats, we will have even a worse war than the last one, not many months hence. Should it come, it would make the last war seem like a tempest in a teapot compared to the deluge of death and destruction it would impose upon the world. And America would not escape. We came in at the back door at the last war, we will come in at the front door in the next war.

Only One Escape

"There is only one alternative; the world must disarm or die. The brand of Cain should be put upon the nation that would disturb the peace of the world by resorting to the sword and assassination. It should become a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; its very name a hissing and a byword among the nations. Drive the armed outlaw beyond the pale of civilization; cast the gun-totting nation into outer darkness, and in the name of our divine Lord sheathe the sword of the world. We must make our choice now between disarmament and death. The world must put up the sword or perish by the sword."

Tuesday's Sessions

As usual, attendance at all sessions on Tuesday was greatly diminished inasmuch as large numbers of delegates left for their homes. The committee on enrolment announced a total registration for the convention of 2,874, of whom 1,509 were ministers, 847 women, 478 laymen and forty visitors. The proposal that sessions of the convention be held biennially was adopted without debate. Provision was made for a commission of seven who shall study Baptist history, persecutions and achievements and report at the next session. The recommendations of the Social Service Committee were adopted as follows:

1. We commend to our churches the principles of humane work as it applies to protection of children, helpfulness to the aged and infirm, and kindness to animals; we favor humane education in the public schools and public institutions generally, in the principles of kindness to all creatures; we commend the work in behalf of humane education and conduct as conducted by the American Humane Association, and we commend the organization of a Band of Mercy in each church, and that the Social Service Committee be authorized to co-operate with denominational and the other agencies in promoting humane education and service.

2. We urge our people to unceasing effort in behalf of temperance education and the dissemination of facts showing the success of prohibition; and we further urge our people to cooperate with all right agencies in upholding the sanctity of law and in securing an adequate enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment.

3. In view of the fact that human values are involved in industry and the industrial question is a moral and religious question, we strongly urge our pastors and people to make a careful study of the issues unsolved, to encourage classes to study these questions, and to use such literature as is available in reaching a right understanding of the issues at stake; and to promote conferences of employers and employees for the consideration of industrial questions and the adjustment of human relations.

4. We urge upon the Christian heart of America sympathy and responsibility for the suffering childhood of the world; that our people loyally support the established, recognized relief agencies, such as the Near East Relief, Russian, and European Relief organizations. The hungry and destitute child is America's challenge to serve Christ.

5. We record our profound appreciation of the efforts of the President and the Secretary of State to secure a limitation of armament, and see in the treaties adopted a step toward this desired end. We recognize fully the responsibility of the churches to educate the people in the evils of war and to promote a federation of all peoples. We urge our pastors and people to study the principles of international morality, and to seek to create a Christian attitude of mind in international relations.

The program of the morning was in charge of the Home Mission Society, Pres. Chas. R. Brock, of Denver, presiding. Miss Alene Bryan spoke on "Kingdom Building through a Christian Center," and gave a vivid description of the work being done by the Judson Neighborhood House among the 65,000 Italians living in the vicinity of Washington Square, New York City.

Dr. Bruce Kinney spoke of "Our Indian Missions," to which he is now giving practically all his time. We have exploited Indian land, violated our treaties with them, and despite our nearness have made little attempt to reach them with the gospel, yet the Indians have always been receptive to the gospel, and there are at present about 8,000 of them in Baptist churches.

Dr. L. C. Barnes spoke of "Our New Missionary Chaplains." Twenty-one chaplains of the army and navy are connected with the convention. We have given them the privilege of being called chaplain missionaries and two-thirds of them have put themselves into this relation with the denomination. Chaplain Ballentine, of Ft. Benj. Harrison, was introduced by Dr. Barnes and spoke briefly.

Dr. C. S. Brown, president of the Lott Carey Foreign Mission Convention, told of the work of this Negro organization. Last year it collected $50,000 and this year has a budget of $100,000. It has nineteen missionaries in Liberia, six native missionaries in South Africa, is paying the salaries of twelve native missionaries in Hayti and two in South America. "You white people," he said, "cannot go up and leave us down. We must go up together."

Rev. W. H. Bowles spoke of "Mormonism at Close Range." He said that the present generation of Mormons has broken away from its hierarchy, that the Bible is common in their houses, that the bulk of Mormons are today putting their church on the same plane as any other, and that the Mormons are appropriating the methods and plans of other churches. The missionary opportunity in Utah and adjoining states has come to its greatest hour.

Afternoon Session

This afternoon was given up to the foreign mission societies. An address by Rev. T. Fieldgrave on "Among the Hindus of the Pacific Coast," showed the difficulties of life for these people, and pleaded that more Christian treatment be given them.

Secretary Franklin introduced two of our foreign students, after which there followed one of the most impressive events of the convention, namely, the introduction of our new missionaries. Seven, it was announced, have sailed since the last convention but there were present the following appointees of the general society: Mr. and Mrs. Leslie C. Whittaker, who go to Burma; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth G. Hobart, to South India; Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Holsted, to South India; Dr. and Mrs. Gordon S. Seagrave, to Burma; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. F. Smith, to Belgian Congo.

Mr. N. R. Wood introduced the five of the twelve appointees of the Woman's Society who were present. These were Miss Victoria Christenson, who goes to Assam; Miss Edith Duling, to South China; Miss A. Kluck; Miss Hilda Lund, to the Congo; Miss Florence Webster, to East China.

Prayer was offered by three pastors for the new missionaries, the homes from which they come and the churches.

Secretary Lerrigo gave a most interesting address on "The Negro in Africa." The Congo native, he said, has a sunny disposition, a sense of humor, a human feeling, faith in a loving God, a readiness to forgive and a willingness to follow leadership. The missionary has given these people a God, a Bible, a church, Christian words, a new moral standard, new ideas of cleanliness, and moral uplift. He has done all by bringing them Christ. There is a new Pentecost on the Congo today. Thousands are being brought to Christ.

In the evening the convention listened at its closing session to a great address by Major Robert B. Moton, of Tuskegee, on "The Negro in America," extracts from which appear elsewhere.

Among the notable features of the convention were the Mission Study Classes, held late in each morning's session, when various leaders presented the mission study books for next year.

The closing half hour of the morning's sessions was devoted to a series of Bible studies in Ephesians, given by Rev. James A. Francis. These were uplifting and gripping to an unusual degree and helped to give a tone to all the meetings.

Mention should also be made of the motion pictures, put out by the Board of Promotion, which were shown at the close of the evening's sessions.

All in all, one of the greatest conventions in the history of Northern Baptists has just closed.

Sacramento's Protestant church population, for the past year ending Easter, 1922, grew over 3½ times as rapidly as the estimated growth of the city at large. These figures are a result of almost complete returns of the annual church census. This is conducted by the Federation yearly to check its progress toward its aim of "30,000 Sacramento Protestant manpower." The yearly allotment toward this aim was exceeded. The Sacramento Church Federation contributed considerably to this gratifying result. It supplied the above named ideal of "30,000 Sacramento Protestant manpower." It inaugurated the competition between churches. It was a clearing house for the interchange of ideas. Furthermore, through its eight years of successful campaigns for cleaner moral conditions, it changed the attitude of this originally soaking wet and wide-open town toward its churchmen.

International Sunday School Convention

Fresh from the Field

After four and one-half years of service as general secretary of the Rhode Island Baptist Convention, Rev. B. T. Livingston has resigned. He will become general secretary of the Evangelistic Association of New England. His new work will begin September 1. Mr. Livingston has served the convention with great acceptance during the period of its reorganization. He enters upon a great work in his new relationship.

Rev. W. T. Dorward of Milwaukee recently delivered an address before the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Bar Association. The three "learned professions" were represented in the form of symposium. The law by a lawyer, medicine by a physician and Mr. Dorward represented the ministry.

Announcement is just made at the University of Chicago of the university preachers for the summer quarter. President J. G. K. McClure, of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, preached June 25. On July 2, Herbert Lockwood Willett, professor of the Old Testament language and literature, University of Chicago, was the preacher; July 9, Ernest DeWitt Burton, head of the department of New Testament literature and interpretation, University of Chicago, will preach; July 16, Harris Franklin Rall, professor of systematic theology, Garrett Biblical Institute; July 23, Theodore Gerald Soares, head of the department of practical theology, University of Chicago; and July 30, Allan Hoben, professor of sociology, Carleton College. In August the university preachers will be Professor Henry B. Robins, of Rochester Theological Seminary; Rev. James Francis, of the First Baptist Church, Los Angeles; Professor Gerald B. Smith, of the University of Chicago Divinity School, and Rev. Lathan A. Crandall, of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago, who will be the convocation preacher August 27.

The First Church, Painesville, Ohio, Rev. Willis S. Webb, pastor, at the Sunday morning service, June 25, heartily and unanimously endorsed the resolution recently passed at Indianapolis in which our government was petitioned immediately to adopt measures to secure united action on the part of the United States and European governments looking to the deliverance and security of imperiled Christian peoples in the Near East. A copy of this action was forwarded to President Harding, Secretary Hughes, and the senators from Ohio.

Rev. Fred Allen of First Church, Bay City, Michigan, reports that his evening congregations have trebled by the use of stereopticon lectures. Judging by the demands upon the stereopticon department of the General Board of Promotion, other pastors must have found these lectures helpful.

Dr. Marion Lawrance, general secretary of the International Sunday School Association from February, 1899, until September, 1920, and since then consulting general secretary, probably the best known man in Sunday-school work in the United States, has retired as general secretary. Dr. Lawrance has attended every International Sunday School Convention since 1884, and the World's Sunday School conventions in London, St. Louis, Jerusalem, Rome, Washington, D. C., Zurich and Tokyo. In 1911 he made a tour of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales as joint general secretary of the World's Association and has, in his official capacity, attended Sunday-school conventions in every state and province in North America. The period of Dr. Lawrance's incumbency of office has witnessed practically all of the changes in Sunday-school literature and methods that are making possible the new day of "The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education." Dr. Lawrance retires beloved in every home where Sunday-school folks dwell.

When Dr. John M. Moore entered the pulpit of the Marcy Avenue Church, Brooklyn, on the last Sunday evening of June for his last sermon before vacation, he found a bouquet of twenty-five roses, placed there by friends in recognition of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry. In speaking of the statement of faith which he presented to the Ordination Council, he named three emphases which were wholly absent from that statement which he would surely now include: The scientific method as necessary to the apprehension of truth, the urgent need of Christian unity, and the social application of the gospel. The church recently held its annual meeting, in which reports were presented showing that a total of $50,000 had been raised during the year for all purposes, of which $31,000 was for benevolences. Fifty persons had been baptized during the year, making a total of 464 members added to the church during Dr. Moore's pastorate of a little more than five years.

An Association Lined Up

Baron A. McLean, of Fresno, Cal., writes: "On behalf of the young people's union of the San Joaquin Valley, I would like to ask for thirty copies of the special young people's number—one for each society. We will pay whatever price you may name for the quantity. I should like to state that THE BAPTIST in its young people's number is the finest issue I have ever seen gotten out for or by a young people's group. As soon as our people get back from Asilomar I shall begin working on our fall campaign which will include THE BAPTIST. I like its fair-minded, open-minded and reasonably conservative attitude toward the denominational situation." A man like Mr. McLean is a field agent of the most useful type.

Killam's Kollum

No Declaration of Independence

THE BAPTIST does not pride itself upon being an independent organ. There is no such denominational institution. Every society and board, including THE BAPTIST, is dependent upon Baptists for patronage and support. Each must meet the needs of its constituency or give place to agencies which will. THE BAPTIST has no interests which are foreign to those of the denomination as the denomination expresses itself in its organized activities. We would not dare to sign a declaration of independence. It would be high treason.

All Dependent

Be not deceived. Practically all denominational newspapers in all Christendom are dependent upon individuals, institutions or groups from which they secure at least a part of their financial support. Some are aligned with educational institutions from which they secure patronage; some papers conduct a printing and publishing business against which some of their overhead expenses are charged; still others have the support of interested individuals or theological groups. A larger number sustain direct relations to their constituency through state organizations or the denomination at large. Practically all of the Southern Baptist papers are controlled by the state conventions. It would be as difficult to find an honest-to-goodness independent denominational newspaper as it would to find a Romanist in Masonry.

We Acknowledge Our Dependence Upon You

We gladly acknowledge our dependence upon the pastors and church folks to whom belongs the sole credit for building up a list of subscribers which has averaged more than 30,000 from the first issue. Indianapolis upon recommendation of the Executive Committee refused to sell the paper and in addition pledged even more hearty cooperation. The denomination is not represented by a coterie of liberals nor by a group of ultra-conservatives. The denomination does not want to be compelled to choose between two or more journals representing these extremes. It wants a paper for the people. It wants a paper true to the historic mission of Baptists. It wants a paper which will stand back of and promote the program and policies adopted by the denomination. THE BAPTIST accepts this task and devotes itself to this mission. The usefulness of the paper will be greatly extended by increasing its circulation to 50,000 this year with an eye to the 100,000 goal.

Japan Baptists on the March

By WILLIAM AXLING

THE Baptists of Japan have just closed a conference which will long stand out as a milestone along their path of progress. Far up in a mountain village, away from the rush and roar of the work-a-day world, surrounded by a quietness broken only by the song of birds and the music of rushing streams they reviewed the past and planned for the future.

Japanese Baptists to the Fore

The outstanding feature of this year's gathering was the all-Baptist sessions. In these sessions thirty-three Japanese pastors and evangelists, 165 Japanese laymen and laywomen and fifty-four missionaries met together on an equal footing and as a unit joined hearts and minds in worship, fellowship and conference. The number in attendance on these joint-sessions, the unity of spirit, the all-pervading enthusiasm and the forward-looking note which was sounded all indicated that the Baptist wing of the Christian army has entered upon a new day in its work in this empire. The most encouraging indication being that the indigenous church has reached a new and higher stage in its development. There is a new self-consciousness, a new sense of responsibility, a new willingness to put the shoulder to the wheel and push, and a new coming forward of the laity in the work.

The Baptist Forward Movement

This movement which was launched four years ago as a cooperative drive has had signal success. A survey of the work of this movement shows that the goal to double the contributions of the Japanese church was reached during the third year of the campaign. By the end of the fourth year the contributions had trebled. Real progress has also been made toward realizing the goal of bringing one-fourth of our churches to self-support. During this period the number of self-supporting churches has exactly doubled. The goal of doubling the church membership has not been reached. During the past four years, however, 1,155 people have been baptized into our churches. Moreover, as a result of an extensive as well as intensive campaign of evangelism which is being conducted during this fifth year of the movement it is confidently believed that real progress will be made toward realizing this goal. In the matter of deepening and broadening the inner life of the churches—the fourth goal—there are clear evidences that the movement has raised new standards, erected new ideals, given new visions, pointed out new goals and created a new morale among both the leaders and the rank and file.

Some Significant Signs of the Times

The intellectual, social and industrial unrest of today has in a marked manner opened the heart of Japan to the Christian message. Reports from the different sections of the empire show that in the evangelistic field opportunity is written in letters of light across the path of the church's advance. Special evangelistic campaigns have recently been conducted in connection with nine of our Baptist churches under the leadership of the eminent Japanese evangelist, Mr. S. Kimura, the "Moody of Japan." Night after night he spoke to capacity houses. The audiences were largely made up of young men and young women, an eloquent testimony to the fact that the heart of young Japan is hungry. In all there were 976 public decisions. A large majority of these signified their intention to receive baptism and come out fully on the side of Christ. Of this number 224 have already taken this step. Hundreds of the remainder are enrolled in inquirers' classes.

In the educational field Christian institutions are having their full share of patronage. During the past year our schools, both for young men and for young women, have had so large a number of applicants that they could enter but a fraction of those who applied. At the opening of the spring term in April the Mable Memorial School for Boys at Yokohama had 340 applications for entrance but could only accommodate 110. At the Himeji Girls' School eighty-two young women were eager applicants but only forty-five could be received. At the Sendai Girls' School, which has a total attendance of 250, ninety young women are crowded into a dormitory originally built to accommodate thirty-five. The Kanagawa Girls' School after stowing away 306 girls into crowded quarters has had to turn away large numbers. The out-and-out Christian atmosphere and influence of our schools is indicated by the fact that at the Sendai school there were thirty baptisms last year and every member of the senior class became a Christian before her graduation. At the Kanagawa school eighteen girls were baptized during the year. The Mable Memorial School with a total enrollment of 434 has 140 young men lined up in its Y. M. C. A.

In view of the fact that next year will mark a half century of Baptist work in Japan the Japanese Baptist Convention voted to launch a Fiftieth Anniversary Campaign. This campaign will be educative and evangelistic in its aims and methods. It will bring into review the work of the past fifty years. It will also take full advantage of the present open-minded hungry-hearted attitude of the people and press a program of advance.

Filling the Gaps in the Broken Line

The reenforcing of the personnel of our working force in Japan with new young life is by all odds the most encouraging phase of the present situation. On the Japanese side our ranks are being reenforced by young men who represent the best type of Japan's young manhood. Some of these are Imperial University graduates and therefore stand right at the top. Others have been to America and finished their training there. All of them are fitting in a large way. Among them might be mentioned President Chiba, Dean Kakaguchi and Professor Takahashi of our Theological Seminary; Principal Sakata, Dean Tahata, Chaplain Yasumura and others of the Mable Memorial School; Dean Yoshikawa of the Sendai school; Dean Takagaki of the Kanagawa school, Secretary Fujii of the Misaki Tabernacle and pastors Tomoi and Tada. In addition to these there are promising young men who have been trained in our own institutions here who are making good in a splendid way. Among the women are Miss Yamada of the Kanagawa school, Principal Ishihara of the Kindergarten Training School and Dean Nakaji of the Bible Women's Training School.

On the missionary side, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Thompson are fitting in a fine way into the student opportunity on the Kyoto field. This field was unmanned for ten long years. Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Haynes have already made a deep impression on the far-flung Morioka field. Captain and Mrs. J. F. Laughton, splendidly equipped in heart and mind and experience, are at the helm of the Gospel Ship as successors to the greatly beloved Captain and Mrs. Luke W. Bickel. Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Derwacter have been designated to the Himeji field. They are worthy successors to the sainted Briggs and his efficient companion who labored so long and well on that field. Mr. J. S. Kennard will, in connection with his language study, do week-end work on the unoccupied Mito field. At the Mable Memorial, J. H. Covell, and at Waseda University, L. G. Crocker and E. G. Spencer are rendering a far-reaching service. Misses Minnie V. Sandberg, Agnes Meline, Evelyn Bickel at Kanagawa; Misses Ruth E. Smith and Ruth C. Ward at Sendai; Misses Elma R. Tharp, Louise F. Jenkins, Lucy Palmer at Tokyo; Miss Jesse M. Wilkinson at Kobe; Miss Vida Post at Himeji; Miss Charma M. Moore at Osaka, and Miss Ella M. Gifford at Morioka, make up a group of new recruits that is injecting new hope and new life into the work in these different sections. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse R. Wilson, Misses Lucy K. Russell and Georgia Newberry are tackling the language and will soon be in line for active service.

Are the Baptists of Japan blue? They have had blue days but this is not one of them. It would take a long search to find a pessimist among them today. Word from New York indicates that we shall be called upon to cut our budgets by 25 per cent for next year. This is most distressing news but we refuse to be discouraged. We are facing the future with high hopes and fine courage. Victory is sure. Ours is the victorious Christ!

Baptists Still Being Persecuted in Roumania

By FRANK E. BURKHALTER
Publicity Director, Conservation Commission

DESPITE the repeated promises of the Roumanian government that persecution of Baptists would cease in that country, advices have just reached this country that the persecution is practically as severe as ever, and that for no other offense than that of worshipping God after the dictates of their own conscience, without any disturbances of their neighbors or violating any of the rights of others, our spiritual kinsmen are being humiliated, beaten, imprisoned and subjected to all sorts of inhuman treatment.

It is learned that among the concrete instances of such persecution that have just been called to the attention of the Roumanian government through the activities of the Roumanian Baptist Union are the following:

(1) Jon Dan of Petrifalau, District Sibiu, cited before the Court Martial repeatedly because of his Baptist faith.

(2) The Baptist pastor, Alexander Isbasha, of Birchish, District of Caras-Severin, cross-examined by the local priest regarding his Baptist faith, thereupon arrested by the police and beaten into insensibility.

(3) The Baptist pastor, Jon Unger, arrested and brutally beaten by the police of Negrulesti, District of Solnok-Dubuka,

The Great Rallying Call

IN a convention in which there were many addresses of high order, the annual sermon, which appears in full in this issue, stands out as the great rallying call of the Indianapolis meeting. It lifts us out of a sense of depression occasioned by the experiences of the past year. It sounds a call for advance when we face debts which necessitate retreat. It magnifies the missionary character of our religion and challenges our Christian faith.

It should not be forgotten that of the thousands who heard the message that Sunday morning, large numbers had spent the preceding hour in most earnest prayer in the convention prayer meeting. It should not be overlooked that this meeting had been the subject of more prayer than perhaps any other like gathering of Baptists in our generation. Messages came from all sections of the country indicating that the churches at home were engaged in special meetings for prayer. Men on their sick beds sent word that their waking hours were filled with thoughts of and prayer for the convention. The speaker seemed to be aware that it was his privilege and responsibility to give voice to the fundamental spirit, faith and purpose of the denomination.

The message was one of imperialism—the imperialism of the Commissioner. “Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you, and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world.” This commission is “imperial by every test; by the presence of the Giver; by the occasion of its utterance; by the task which it proposes; by the power which it utilizes; by the peoples which it includes; by the movement which it inaugurates.” We are at once taken out of the realm of controversy and brought into the presence of Christ. We seem to hear him say, “This is the task for which I called and redeemed you. About this task there can be no difference of opinion. Go ye . . . I will be with you.”

The preacher took us back to the a, b, c's of our Christian calling. He made clear the axioms of our Baptist heritage. The missionary spirit is not incidental but fundamental in the whole Christian movement. It is a spirit of conquest. Expansion is its law. The ends of the earth must see the salvation of our God. It is intensive. The work of teaching must go on until every thought is brought into captivity to Christ. There must be no country where humans dwell that this gospel is not preached. There must be no realm in human life and human activity where Christ is not made Lord.

It is made clear that obedience to the imperial commission is the true measure of the spiritual life of a church and of an individual. Loyalty to Christ's call is the best method yet devised to achieve peace, progress and spiritual power in a local church. Petty jealousies, strife and bickerings slink out of sight when a church gets a world vision and begins to carry with prayer and sacrifice the burdens of lost men.

There seems to be a conflict between this imperial commission and our convention action. The limits of our missionary activity have been curtailed as far as the convention is concerned. We have instructed our agents, the missionary societies, to reduce their work at least 25 per cent. The churches determined the limits of our work before any formal action was taken. Our leaders and missionaries can go as far as the churches go and no farther.

The whole matter is by the nature of our polity referred back to the local churches. Once more the responsibility for decision is laid upon the heart of the local church and of its individual members. During the year which lies before us the churches can make null and void the action at Indianapolis. They can repudiate the disastrous retreat. They can order advance. The doors of opportunity are wide open to them in this as in other respects. By the faithful performance of our pledges to Christ and his work, by enlisting every new disciple in the missionary task, by persevering efforts to secure the cooperation of indifferent members, by increasing our individual pledges wherever possible, the churches to which this imperial message comes can order an advance in 1922-23.

In Defense of the Truth

AN editorial appearing in the Baptist Observer, June 29, says:

The election of Rev. F. E. Taylor, the honored pastor of the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis, to the presidency of the Northern Baptist Convention, is much appreciated by all who know Dr. Taylor, irrespective of church affiliation, and it is exceedingly gratifying to the Baptists of Indianapolis and of Indiana.

His election makes him in a sense the representative and mouth-piece of the denomination, hence it is necessary that people everywhere should know where Dr. Taylor stands in the controversies which have agitated Northern Baptists the past two or three years.

In view of these facts, it is exceedingly unfortunate that it should have been broadcasted by the public press that “A Liberal is elected to lead Northern Baptists” and “A Modernist Heads the Northern Baptist Convention,” and similar statements. Both Dr. Taylor and his many friends resent such incorrect and unjust classification.

Dr. Taylor has always been a conservative in his theological views and in his preaching. It is true that he did not identify himself with the fundamentalist movement, as such; neither has he identified himself with a liberal or modernist group, but has conscientiously stood where thousands of his brethren stand—loyal to the Word, the Christ and the Gospel, but refusing to be labelled by any party.

In defense of the truth, in justice to Dr. Taylor, in view of the international character the presidency of the Northern Baptist Convention assumes, and also with the consent of our worthy president, we make this statement. We request that the editors of our denominational papers, the officers of the convention and cooperating societies, state secretaries, workers and pastors everywhere shall correct the misstatements of the public press and do justice not only to Dr. Taylor, but also to those who voted for his election.

We Say "Amen"

IMMEDIATELY following the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis, a two-day rally was held at the Moody Church, Chicago, at which the principal speakers were Rev. Frank M. Goodchild, Rev. J. C. Massee, and Rev. Curtis Lee Laws. In the course of his address Mr. Goodchild said: "We do not believe the Bible because of anybody's attestation of it, but because of what it is in itself. Left without note or comment in the hands of any reader who is not hardened or prejudiced and determined to resist it, it brings a man to God. We want no better proof of what the Book is than that. This seems always to be the result of an open-minded reading of the Bible. It carries conviction to all who so read it, that it comes from God, just as the light about us comes from the sun. It is the one book that meets the needs of old and young, rich and poor, the learned and the ignorant, the sorrowing and the rejoicing. Only he who knows men altogether could have made a book that so meets the needs of every man. And that is one of the most marvelous things in the world. It is scarcely possible for any two men to report alike about anything they observe. Men differ about the simplest and most commonplace things and yet here is a book written by men some of whom lived 1,500 years apart that takes one view of things about them and is suited to the need of the most varied peoples the world over." We believe that this statement will receive the hearty "Amen" of every one of our readers.

Church Work in July and August

"EVERYTHING is at a standstill in church work during July and August. There is little use of keeping the church doors open," said a well-known minister in a recent conversation. He is probably correct if by church work he means attending preaching services. Multitudes of our people evidently agree that this is too strenuous a task for July and August.

May we not, however, ask the question, whether real church work must of necessity be done on Sunday within the four walls of the meeting house? If we have in mind the scattered congregations and the sparsely attended services we might be led to feel that our church people were not very deeply interested in church work during the heated season. We are, however, looking at another group. Never before in the history of the Christian church have so many boys and girls of all sects, creeds and no creeds gathered together for wholesome, helpful, religious instruction as are now meeting in the daily vacation Bible schools from coast to coast. The growth of this type of work has been phenomenal. Thousands of our most capable teachers and church workers are giving themselves to this service. It is peculiarly and definitely a hot-weather task. Is this church work?

We see another group. It is made up mostly of our young people. They are combining a vacation period with serious study of the Bible, missions, evangelism and social service. They are under the tuition of our most experienced Christian leaders. Thousands of these are in our own Baptist assemblies and other thousands of our own people are in Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. conferences under the tuition of men and women whose ability and service have made them the servants of all denominations.

We look again and we find other thousands of boys in church and scout camps with the pastor and other mature Christian men. We find these boys engaged in all the activities which appeal to youth and at the same time in an atmosphere that is wholesome and under leadership that is Christian. May we ask again, is this in the best sense church work? It is a vacation service, and the contacts formed in this way are most lasting and helpful. Let us not overlook the summer work done in the name of Christ. It is real "church work."

Will the Pastors Make as Good a Showing?

ONE-FOURTH of the public school teachers in the country attended summer schools in 1921. The nation now requires 700,000 teachers. The standard of excellence is constantly rising. The preaching of the country is supplied by 200,000 ministers. Twenty-five per cent of the 700,000 school teachers spent the whole or a part of their vacation preparing themselves for a higher type of work. What percentage of the 200,000 ministers did the same? No one can answer accurately. Our observation leads us to guess, however, that the number is much less than five per cent. Do not jump to the conclusion that the fault is altogether with the minister. We have churches among us still which "hire" the minister as the farmer hires a farm hand. No provision is made for an adequate vacation. Some ministers even pride themselves upon the fact that they seldom if ever take a vacation. We really need a new "movement" for longer vacations and "a drive" to get the pastors to attend summer sessions of the universities, seminaries and conferences where provision is made for systematic study. The demands upon the minister today are making summer schools more necessary each year. Pastor, insist on a vacation and then don't loaf.

"Should Colleges Pay Their Own Expenses?"

AN article with this startling title appeared in a recent issue of Good Housekeeping. At present very few think of paying the actual cost of tuition in any higher school of learning. The amount charged for tuition tion ranges from $50 to $250. The margin between the actual cost of tuition and what students pay comes out of endowment or from funds raised to meet an annual deficit.

Why not charge what it costs? Every pupil who goes through college has several hundreds or maybe thousands of dollars added to his annual earning. The college degree automatically raises his economic value by an appreciable amount. Many of the parents can pay the tuition. They now pay more for their children's clothes, for their food, for their amusements, why not more for their education? Moreover, the majority of the students spend on clothes, college functions, amusements, fraternities and general luxuries an amount in excess of the actual cost of their tuition.

One college president told of a father who sent him his daughter's budget of expenses for scrutiny. The girl had down $80 for ice cream, soda, candy, moving pictures and amusements. At the same time the college was allowing to her father a $100 scholarship for the daughter. Could not the girl better dispense with these luxuries and enable her father to meet the greater part of his loan?

Oh, but there is the ambitious poor boy or girl! Provision must be made for such. That can easily be done by loan funds, scholarships and an opportunity to work their way through. If the thing is right, a way can be found.

Is it right?

Is it expedient?

Money and Character

"GOD is not running a collection agency, he is building character," said Dr. Abernethy at Indianapolis. We have no quarrel with this statement. We do want to point out, however, that men are both collection agents and distributing agents. On the whole it seems to us that men show better sense in getting money than in spending it. God's plan in character building includes both the collection agency and the distributing agency. Men need God as a partner in both enterprises. We believe that God is vitally concerned in the matter of money getting on the part of his people and also in the causes which lead us to spend our money. Was this thought in the mind of James C. Colgate when he made the statement, "If we are rich we are mean; if we are generous we are poor?"

It Sounds Like Indianapolis

A DETAILED report of the National Christian Conference which was held recently in Shanghai, has come to our desk. It is an inspiring document. It tells plainly that a new day is dawning for Christian work in China. Chinese leadership is everywhere in evidence.

In one section of the report we come upon a discussion which sounds more like Indianapolis than Shanghai. There has recently been, as everyone familiar with current religious developments in China knows, a sharp aligning into conservative and liberal theological camps as in other countries following the war.

In China this has been almost wholly an imported matter, that is, the lead in controversy, in so far as there has been one, has been taken by the missionaries. There was great fear lest it should cause an open break in the conference. It was a rebuke to that fear and an averting of what would have been a terrible blot on Christian history in the Orient, that this did not happen. Pleas were made from the platform chiefly by D. M. Hoste, of the China Inland Mission, and by Miss Ruth Paxson for the inclusion in the constitution of the new council of a statement affirming belief in "the deity of Christ, in salvation by his atonement, and in the authority and trustworthiness of the whole Bible." After hours of discussion, the business committee proposed the following statement to meet this situation:

"A proposal has been made to the conference that a doctrinal statement expressing fundamental Christian beliefs should be embodied in the resolution appointing a national Christian council.

"We the members of the conference joyfully confess our faith in, and renew our allegiance to, God the Father Almighty, Jesus Christ, His Son, our Lord and Saviour, who loved us and gave himself for our sins, and the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of life; and acknowledge our loyalty to the Holy Scriptures as the supreme guide of faith and conduct, and to the fundamental Christian beliefs held by the churches to which we severally belong. The conference however is not constituted as a church council with authority to pass upon questions of doctrine and of church polity or to draw up a creedal or doctrinal statement of any kind."

The conference made clear that it believed it to be a matter of vital importance that the church of Christ of China should be established on a basis of true faith and sound doctrine. It recognized that the authority to determine what are the essential affirmations of the Christian faith, lies with the several churches of which those attending the Conference were members.

The world is not so large after all, and many of the problems we face in America are being faced by our Christian brethren in the Orient.

We See What We Want to See

IT is said that every English visitor to America takes back with him some very pronounced opinions about the effect of the Eighteenth Amendment. The result of the reports from these visitors is to leave a confused impression in the public mind. What the visitor sees depends so much on the bias the witness brought with him. He is sure to see what he is looking for. If he favors prohibition he is sure to find many evidences of the advantage of our prohibition laws however imperfectly they may be enforced. If he wants to find evidence of failure he can secure volumes which will meet his demands.

Unfortunately the Englishman is not the only one who sees what he wants to see. We have been making a study of various reports of the meetings of the convention at Indianapolis. Experienced reporters of religious meetings sat at the same table during the same sessions and have written reports which in some cases are not only different in form but contradictory in fact. How can you account for this divergence? For the most part on the principle that we see what we want to see.

Christian Colleges as Educational Leaven

Education fails unless it becomes primarily the culture of the spirit. Danger of preparing men to earn a living rather than to live. Education is the center and circumference of evangelism.

By ALLYN K. FOSTER

EDUCATIONAL night at the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis was in all respects a notable occasion. That occasion was made notable by two really great addresses, one by Dr. D. J. Evans and the other by Dr. Frank W. Padelford. Oratory, like religion, is the artistic output of the whole man in terms of his characteristic temperament. The two speeches, therefore, were quite different and yet both fulfilled this definition. The two men were different, therefore their speeches were marked by different characteristics, but both men presented their best materials compounded into unities which varied.

A good speech is like a bullet. Its material is unified and adapted to its end and it carries explosive power to drive it to the mark. Both of these speeches contained all this and more. One could easily see that both men had worked through all their incidentals to fundamental positions, and both speeches are worthy of very careful reading by every lover of education in the North.

Culture of the Spirit

The address of Dr. Evans, which we do not attempt to appraise as a whole, emphasized a matter of the very greatest importance. Passing by all else in this deliverance, the idea expressed by Dr. Evans that the Christian colleges are set to the immense task of leavening American education, should hold our attention acutely. That is the exact heart of the educational situation in America. No generation in our history has seen such a growth in educational equipment and clientage as this present one. Colleges everywhere are expanding, and there is not room, even now, to accommodate the thousands of students who are pressing to their doors. It is essential that the function of education be made clear and here we are, for the most part, in the dark. To put it bluntly and perhaps paradoxically, the purpose of secular education is religious. All education fails unless the student enters life expanded symmetrically. The sound mind in the sound body must be enveloped by the sound spirit. Education fails unless it becomes primarily the culture of the spirit and it is at this point that the greatest danger besets the coming generation of students. Our great state institutions are estopped from teaching religion as such, which means that sectarian distinctives must not be emphasized. That means too often that the elemental forces which play upon the human spirit, are strangled before they reach the student. The Christian church will have to blame itself for a good deal of this, because of its insistence upon Christianity as a set of ideas, or as a fabric of ritual, or as a source of authority. I say it again, the purpose of every college of every sort in the land, is to teach religion in this elemental way I have indicated. This judg-

The Goal

By MILTON EVANS

IT was a disastrous day for Christ's kingship over human thought when, "Between science and faith . . . a bargain was struck. Hands off; each to his own was the compact; the natural world to intelligence, the moral, the spiritual world to belief." Neither has been content with the compact; each has been invading the territory of the other, and occasionally one who has taken the compact seriously, finding himself divided against himself, surrenders his inalienable rights to find refuge in what he is pleased to call "reason" or "faith," according to the territory surrendered. The issue has been tragic for more than one soul. It drives the man that surrenders his "reason" to the slavery of subjection to others who reason; it drives the one that surrenders his "beliefs" to unknown wastes in which he wanders aimlessly until new beliefs become established. Had the Christian teachers of all centuries the sympathetic insight of Paul, and of Clement of Alexandria, and of Origen, rather than the formal logic and the juridical procedure of the Roman Forum, Jesus would not have lost his kingship in the realm of philosophic thought. It would have been the joy of every thinker as it was that of Paul and of Justin the Martyr, to bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ."

This is the goal we are approaching today.

ment is pressing itself upon the most thoughtful writers of the present day. Mr. E. S. Martin said in Harper's in 1920: "It is not the exclusive province of religious teachers to teach religion. It is the province of all teachers, and a teacher who cannot do it, is by so much less qualified for his job. Agassiz got religion out of dissecting fishes and passed it on to his pupils. Darwin got religion out of earthworms and passed it on and did good, although it raised hob with current theology. It is in all the sciences and in all the arts and at the heart of all literature that is worth its place on the shelf. It flows through all life and unless it is felt and recognized, the learner and the investigator cannot get at the heart of what is going on. The world is a wreck, not because it had not thrift enough, nor food enough, nor commodities enough, nor armies and navies and guns and poison gas enough, but because it lost religion and could not recognize and apply the eternal laws to which men and nations must conform if they are to live in peace. To search out and apply these laws and send out men who can recognize and apply them, is the great job of the colleges as it is of the churches, the job by doing which, they can earn their keep."

A Living and a Life

Our colleges and universities, as President Butler recently asserted, are in danger of preparing men to earn a living rather than preparing them to live. Dr. Evans was right when he said that the Christian colleges of the country must leaven American education. What is necessary before this can take place, is that the Christian church shall come to see that Christ and his redemptive and transforming influence, wholly aside from doctrines and all ecclesiastism, is Christianity. That means in plain English that the divine energy which proceeds through the person of Christ, shall have its way with the individual and with relationships without obstruction from the philosopher and the metaphysician and the theologian. In plainer English still, it means that the Baptists must have their discussions in groves far removed from the battle line where Christianity is forcing its way into the Enemy's country.

Theological discussion belongs properly to the leave areas of the army. It means that all this irresponsible talk against our colleges in general should cease, and that what criticisms are to be made of our institutions should be made directly to the authorities of the concrete institutions under suspicion and made in a constructive fashion. It is my constant observation that teachers in all of our Christian colleges are more solicitous about the men and women they teach than the specific intellectual machines which they create.

Dr. Padelford's speech came out whole and not a single word of it could be changed. It was, moreover, delivered with such controlled passion as one rarely finds on the platform today. The Baptist denomination recognizes that it possesses in Dr. Padelford one of the great American experts in this field. Again it is impossible to review the whole speech, but one thing was finely demonstrated, namely, that education is the center and the circumference of evangelism. It seems passing strange that thoughtful men are not always able to see this simple proposition. What is needed at this point is a touch of historical imagination. To win souls by conversion is, of course, the natural function of all Christian propaganda. We have, however, failed to visualize the situation in which the missionary works, particularly in the foreign field. It is a moving procession to which the preacher must speak and there is often not enough sowing for a crop. It is only with static groups that intensive work can be done. Besides, child psychology lies at the root of the whole matter. Archbishop Hughes said some years ago: "Give me a child of seven and I defy all the forces of Protestantism." At that age and on through the adolescent period, the tissues are soft and responsive and impressions made can never be wholly lost. The present generations at home and abroad were produced by this incubating process extending over long years. The present day is troubled by such a confusion of ideas on all possible subjects, that it seems fair to say that unless our educational processes had been exceptionally adequate, the Christian church would possess a less powerful leadership than it now has. No age has had projected into it such conflicting forces as the present age, and we need to remind ourselves that, during the past forty years, much expert educational work has been done by the teachers in all of our Christian colleges without which the Christian church might be headed for the rocks. The Christian colleges alone are interpreting science and philosophy in terms of religion, and for that service they deserve our highest praise and our unqualified support.

The New Chapel for Denison University

THE new chapel occupies the place of honor in the group of buildings which will be erected for Denison University. The splendid, thickly wooded hills on which the university stands provide an exceptionally beautiful site and every effort has been made to adapt the future buildings to their surroundings and to change the existing grounds and disturb the trees as little as possible.

In the center of the composition of the various academic buildings, dormitory groups and so on, the chapel stands dominating the entire assemblage. It is a characteristic example of colonial church architecture of America. The style of all the buildings is Georgian, commonly called colonial, and the new chapel presents an opportunity to emphasize the distinguishing traits of the style. It will be constructed of brick laid in Flemish bond with stone cornices and quoins, and it has a dignified stone portico consisting of six Ionic columns supporting a pediment. The tower is of brick surmounted by a stone spire. Both the portico and the spire have been carefully studied from a plaster model which was made to determine the best proportions of the various subdivisions of the design. The contrast in color of the stone with the brick and the slate roof will give character to the building and recall some of the delightful early American churches familiar to many of us.

DR. AMBROSE SWASEY,
DONOR OF THE CHAPEL

The chapel is 76 feet wide and 142 feet long, not counting the portico, which projects 13 feet. The size of the building may be realized by the fact that the columns are 29 feet high and the tower is 134 feet to the top of the belfry. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 1,300. It is simply treated with a curved ceiling 48 feet high resting on a series of arches supported by two rows of slender columns, five in each row, thus suggesting the subdivision of nave and aisles. The platform is semi-circular and on it are two rows of seats for the choir, above which is placed the organ with an ornamental front and all surmounted by a richly coffered semi-dome. Large round-headed windows will amply light the auditorium which will be kept bright and simple in color with the decoration centered and emphasized above the platform so that the strongest note of color will be concentrated at this point. There is an ample entrance vestibule with two halls in which are the stairs leading to the gallery. At the other end of the building are additional entrances, study, organ loft, and so forth.

The plans for the chapel were prepared by Mr. Arnold W. Brunner, the architect for the university, and Mr. Fred Law Olmsted, with whom Mr. Brunner collaborated in making the general plans.

It is hoped that the chapel may be completed in time for the opening of the college year in September, 1923.

The Shaohsing Industrial Work

By MARIE A. DOWLING

INDUSTRIAL work in Shaohsing practically started in earnest in the spring of 1920 and is rapidly passing from the stage of questionable experiment to one of decided usefulness to the community as well as to the church.

In the beginning a few were helped, now not less than a hundred are earning comfortable amounts, for the most part enough for actual self support, ranging from $3 to $8 a month by piece work, the average being about $5. Very few are employed by the month. There are two women receiving $6 and one man $7.50 if they give full time. Deduction is made for time off except for Saturday half holiday. We need to add more salaried workers, for it takes about two to every fifty piece-workers to keep up to the demands.

Except for $100 appropriated two years ago the mission is at no expense for industrial work, apart from the missionary's salary and that of the Bible woman, and a little evangelistic money. These are really not industrial funds as they would be much heavier if we were working upon purely evangelistic lines. The Bible woman does concentrate largely upon industrial workers, but she does not limit her energies to them. Those who inquire for work are also upon her calling list, besides others.

In the beginning Liang Shih-Yi gave $500 and since then personal relatives and friends have added $480. This with the $100 appropriation makes $1,080 for capital.

During the past two years about $13,000 have been handled. This includes all gifts and profits. Since the last of May, 1921, total receipts have been about $7,500, about $7,020 are from the work. Materials on hand about $500. Equipment furniture, etc., about $100. Expenditures approximately $7,500.

Because of the heavy drain in repairing dolls and paying the debt for materials we have had very little profit, but we are practically free from debt, and are paying our way with good outlook for an increasing profit as time passes and system and experience develop.

Our present quarters are in a very small house of two bedrooms, a kitchen, one work room, and a garden and court. It is impossible for us to do the aggressive work we can do and must do in such a cramped environment. Expert workers are needed to live on the place in order to keep steadily at their work, and to be under direct supervision when new ideas are being developed. Experiments must be tried out on the premises and developed to completion before being sent out into the homes if a high grade of work is to be done and waste avoided.

Thanks to a gift of $500 gold from Mrs. M. White, besides the interest from other gifts while the money is not in use, we are looking forward to owning a place in which to spread out and develop for convenience to the work, and Christian and social helpfulness to the workers. In the meantime we are renting a place from Dr. Goddard which has about twenty rooms, large and small. These will need cleaning and lighting before they are of much use, but will greatly help us until we have our own place. Some workers will be encouraged to live at the headquarters, and will be required to pay rent.

From the start, our market for dolls and handwork has been good. Over 1,300 dolls have been sold, and several hundred dollars' worth of cross stitch besides other kinds of handwork. It is all a question of being able to meet the demand which is increasingly greater than we can supply, especially in cross stitch. The doll market is limited, but as large as we are able to supply at present. Had we been ready we could recently have filled an order for 1,500 dolls, and may do so yet. As the present contract expires we intend to sell independently. Fortunately the 10-inch doll, which is the best seller, is not under contract. In the course of time we will advertise in the United States through friends or business people. Chinese stores are glad to have our dolls, but their prices and payments are not sufficiently satisfactory to make it worth while to sell to them. The dolls are now so well made that they must become an increasing factor in Chinese business. Technique on the dolls is improving steadily though it is an exceedingly difficult business to keep up to high grade. At first the industrial plant manufactured the dolls, but to reduce the chance of loss we now buy the heads from those who learned the business with us. We do the finishing and dressing. Those who are capable of good work prefer independence, and the inefficient are not on our hands as before.

When I returned to China definitely for industrial work I had to take back 400 dolls to do over, due to careless work. This involved an expense of not less than $400 due to experimenting and failures which have had a wholesome effect on the future of the business. Our workers realize now the meaning of thoroughness as they never knew it before. They are also recognizing business system and honor better than at the start. It has required good heart and close application to keep the business going throughout difficulties. Besides repairing 400 dolls, I found a debt of about $500 on the street for materials which had to be met quickly when there was little money to fall back upon. But we are practically free now. M. S. Crow Ins. advanced $250 without our request as a guarantee. But we are now paying that back, and owe $157 which we are able to pay at any time.

The majority of the people are spirit money workers who prefer our work, some because of conscience, others for convenience, or because the work is cleaner. All are not poor, but we do not debar them on that account, for it gives us a point of contact. Most of the better class, about twenty, belong to good families who have been reduced in circumstances. They come to church rather than lose the work. About thirty are of the middle class, and about fifty are really poor people. The Christians number about twenty.

We believe that the industrial work is a factor in building up the church. As an evangelist one would spend her time visiting and teaching, and would have a good mission appropriation to cover her expenses. She would have to win her way into the homes and hearts of the people. As an industrial evangelist one does the same kind of work with a minimum amount of expense to the mission and instead of seeking the point of contact it is already at hand, often in a more vital way than could be on the purely social basis, for the workers depend upon the missionary for their daily living. Because they earn their money on a thoroughly businesslike and self-respecting basis, the weakening element of pure charity is reduced to almost nothing, and former charity objects become self-reliant. The industrial evangelist has good opportunity to find out weak or strong points in the physical, mental or moral make-up of the workers, and so can apply the teaching which she may herself give or direct others to give. The listless or discouraged are quickened into gradually increasing efficiency and self-respect, beside gaining a larger vision of the value of self-reliance. This makes for better material in the church than has sometimes been the case. As membership is not required to obtain work, only the better element will be liable to join the church. The discipline of having to produce satisfactory work, and to abide by definite rules all goes toward character upbuilding.

Shanghai, China.

"Federal protection must be restored to American children through amendment of the constitution and the passage by congress of another child labor law," declared Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary of the National Child Labor Committee in his address before the seventeenth national conference on child labor in session at Providence, Rhode Island, June 27. It is felt that any further attempt to secure federal legislation without a constitutional amendment would be folly now that the United States Supreme Court has successfully found two federal child labor laws invalid on constitutional grounds. It is said that many leaders in the South are urging such action.

The Imperial Commission of the Christian Church

"Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations; baptizing them into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

By A. W. BEAVEN

WHEN I communed with God and with my own heart about the message for the morning I determined to choose a text so great that if we could get that and that alone we would have a message of inspiration to carry back to our own tasks. I have chosen as such as a text these words which form the imperial commission of the Christian church.

It is imperial by every test—by the presence of the Giver; by the occasion of its utterance; by the task, which it proposes; by the power which it utilizes; by the peoples which it includes; by the movement which it inaugurates. Here in a real sense human beings are called to be fellow-workers with God, in his program of redemption.

To the Galilean Hillside

We, who are gathered here today may look back across the years to that hillside in Galilee. We are told that Palestine was important because it was where the caravan roads of the Orient crossed; where the currents of the world's life met, but Galilee that day stood at the crossing of the highway of Eternity. Nor is that scene so far away. That hillside has simply been pushed back. The thousands of years have simply increased the numbers of those who gather around him and call him Lord, but they have in no wise diminished the force of his imperial command when he said to those who followed him: "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you, and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

There are certain great elemental things evident in the text, upon which I assume we will all agree.

The first of these is that the great missionary spirit is not an incident of the Christian movement, it is fundamental. In a real sense it is the Christian movement. The essence of the missionary spirit is the impulsion in the soul of one who has experienced in himself God's redemptive power through Christ to bring the good news of that saving power to others, secure in them if possible, the response to that offer and then to teach them to observe the things that Jesus commanded. This impulse roots itself in the heart of God. Christ's coming was in a real sense a great manifestation of the missionary spirit. The whole Christian church has no explanation aside from the missionary spirit. The spirit is one though its manifestations are many. It is as truly evidenced when the follower of Christ here attempts to bring his offer to the person here at home and secure his response, and culture him in the Christian life, as it is when it is done on the foreign field, but while it does operate near by it can never exhaust itself here but must extend to the uttermost parts of the earth. All bars are down and his command drives us on until every last man who needs that Gospel has it brought to him.

The second great truth evident in the commission is that the missionary spirit is a spirit of conquest. It demands a ministry of expansion. We are to disciple all nations. We are to go to the ends of the world. To that spirit retreat is intolerable. We are not in line with the spirit of this commission unless in our local churches and in our denomination we are planning aggressive campaigns of expansion. Whether that be by the evangelism of the pulpit, or the personal word in the local field, or by organizations and contributions which enable us to unite to send more fighters to the front line in the foreign field. When the Christian church stops determining to press on and evangelize the world it will have ceased to be in line with the definite purpose of the Christ. We need also to get clearly in mind that no matter what other influences in the world may be helpful, and from whatever other sources people may have drawn inspiration, that Christianity is proclaimed by its Founder to be needed by all the world, and that "there is no other name given under heaven or among men, whereby we must be saved."

The third great elemental truth that is clear in the text is that alongside its program that is extensive must go its program that is intensive. Alongside its program of evangelism must go its program of culture. We are to make disciples of the nations, then we are to teach them to observe all things that he has commanded. Christianity extends laterally over the world; it is also to extend perpendicularly, up and down through society.

There was to be, as Christ visioned it, no situation in the church like that which occurred in the war when a British general made his plans to advance but made no plans to hold the ground that he had gained, therefore he immediately lost it all to the enemy.

Pray Without Ceasing

"PRAY without ceasing," says the zealous Paul;

But what means this? Must we not work, nor eat,

Nor take our rest? Is prayer to swallow all?

Are knees to serve in lieu of hands and feet?

Nay, I will show you what is ceaseless prayer.

First, 'tis a heart to prayer for aye inclined;

Next, that it be of all our choicest care;

Next, that we ask the Counselor to share

Each sorrow of the body and the mind;

Next, that we cease not till our good we find,

Like him who said, "I will not let thee part Until thou bless"; next, that our spirits dart

Their pious glances, when they can, on high;

Last, that we bound each day with morn and evening cry.

There is this two-fold function in the church. To win and to teach. But this teaching is not simply that people may learn the commands of Christ, it is teaching people to observe them so that his commands become their inner manner of life so that the quantity of Christianity is transformed into the quality of Christianity. We are to work for the same results for which Paul prayed: "That we may be no more children tossed too and fro—but that we may grow up into him in all things, that is the Head, even Christ." We are to work, not simply that people may confess Christ by word of mouth and be baptized, but that they may observe, in daily life, in every relationship, between man and man; in their relationships in society and in political life, and in international relationships and everywhere else, the commands and spirit of Christ. Christianity will be judged far more by its quality than by its quantity. The deepest law of teaching is that the one taught must not only be impressed by the teacher, but must, himself, be able to express the things taught. We may impress by our teaching but we must secure expression by service.

A Culturing Christ

There are those in the church today peculiarly qualified to lead along one or the other of these two lines. Today, as of old, he gives some to be evangelists, and some to be teachers, but their work is not mutually exclusive. They are to be complementary. If, at times when we have the evangelistic spirit we are impatient with those who have the task of teaching let us remember that the Christ, himself, won very few but spent most of his life culturing those whom he did win. If others are inclined to put the emphasis upon the teaching function and ignore evangelism, let us bear in mind that the primary act of religion is the personal and willing submission of the individual will to Christ and without that act as a basis any informational structure we may erect is a house that is built on the sands. But holding these three conceptions that our text makes clear as our background, I want to bring before you the challenge which this commission presents to us as a denomination at this particular moment in the world's history.

First, I emphasize its world-wide application. Through the course of the years, by the vision and prayer of our forefathers, the great world-wide missionary enterprise has been pushed forward until it has planted its front line trenches in almost every foreign nation on earth. As in the war, the advance has been marked by the shed blood of our fellow-workers, and the sacrifice of our sons and daughters. That enterprise has represented the treasure-house into which thousands of people here at home have brought their investment of prayers and treasure. There is not a missionary field that does not represent the accumulated deposits of faith and hope and prayer and treasure that make it priceless beyond compare. In spite of this today we come face to face with the fact that we are retrenching in many a field. Our gifts have fallen off, our debts are piled up. Work is curtailed and missionaries are asked to give up advance ground. We are allowing the flag to fall back rather than to advance. We are standing before the world at the time of its greatest need to reverse the processes that have been set forward by our forefathers, and this in a day when we have more power than we have ever had before. We have more members. We have more money at our disposal than we have ever had in the history of this nation. We have money for automobiles and movies; for face powder, silk stockings, cigars, theaters and everything else, and yet the missionary flag is called back.

All Bars Down

It is one of the tragedies of the times that this should be the moment of retrenchment rather than of advancement. I call you back again to that commission under which we operate, "Go ye, and disciple all nations." There is no limit there as to color—red, or yellow, or black or white. Before its sweep all bars go down. It is an objective that calls for an increasing rather than for a retrenching program. We are told that our Board of Promotion has planned too largely. That those who dreamed the dream at Denver attempted too much and led us into wild and impracticable plans. The question I raise when I read this text is this: If we were to say that they were impractical to prepare an aggressive program for the carrying of the gospel more adequately to some of the nations of the world, in a day when they had 1,750,000 people to carry out their share of that program, with wealth almost unlimited at their disposal, what shall we call the Christ who, on that Galilean hillside, 2,000 years ago, with only eleven men upon whom he could depend, and all of them poverty-stricken, prepared and launched a program that involved the evangelism of all nations and which extended even unto the end of the world. Let us admit freely that while those who planned our advance program, may have gotten beyond us, they have not as yet caught up with him.

The missionary spirit is the thermometer of the churches' spiritual life and of its truthness to the Christ. I make no distinction between the missionary spirit as it evidences itself at home or abroad, but I am convinced more and more that the foreign missionary enterprise is the most dramatic exhibition of that spirit and as such it is more easily indicative of our condition. And let us make no mistake, we cannot fence the foreign missionary enterprise away from the home. The same spirit that will allow that to retrench will eventually indicate itself in the retrenchment of spiritual power and evangelistic fervor at home. The retreating tide that will leave the boats stranded on the foreign shore will leave our local churches here high on the beach.

There has been no method known as a practical way of achieving peace, and progress, and spiritual power in a local church that can compare with the results that are obtained when the members of that local church are inoculated with the world vision, and carry the burden of the entire world upon their shoulders, rising with prayer on the lips, and sacrificial fervor in the heart, to dedicate themselves to the world's redemption. In the presence of a great motive like that the small bickerings, the petty jealousies, the inner difficulties of many a church sink out of sight. When the war was over the nation forgot the great cause and the danger of the enemy abroad, and we rapidly sank into small factions and selfish contentions. It will be so, if we are not careful in the religious world. We need to keep our face to the enemy and the line advancing for the sake of our own morale as well as because it is the Master's command.

I am thinking today of Paul, Carey and Judson, and of the long line of men who carried the flaming cross in their hearts and went forth to the ends of the earth in the missionary cause. I am thinking of a grave in China which today marks the resting place of a classmate of mine who for this cause paid the last full measure of devotion. I am thinking of that great company of our missionaries now on the field who have offered their lives in the faith that we would back them if they went forth and who today stand in the midst of their work wondering whether the structure they have built is not to be pulled down over their heads, and they are to be asked to abandon the trenches they have captured.

Love Ever Gives

LOVE ever gives—
 Forgive—outlives,—
 And ever stands
 With open hands.
 And while it lives,
 It gives.
 For this is Love's prerogative,—
 To give,—and give,—and give.
 —John Oxenham.

I am thinking of that man and wife who three weeks ago stood by me with their little lad, three years old, their only lad, in his father's arms. They were about to leave for Africa. I said: "What about the lad?" They said with tear-dimmed eyes, "We are kissing him good by for seven years. We are going back to work and leaving him here with a friend." They went and the little fellow is here. My friends, whose task is it that they are going forth to do? Is it theirs? No, it is ours. There is no law which makes this commission demand more of them than of you or of me. So far as responsibility is concerned shall we argue that it is their task to face hardships while it is ours to stay in the midst of safety with the comforts of civilization with our children by our firesides. If Christ makes such a division of responsibility it is not clear in the text. No, the task is ours as well as theirs. But if they go the least we can do is to back them with a sacrifice that will stand unshamed in their presence and yet—we are going back—we are retreating—can we tolerate this another year? We cannot. The Master calls and the Master calls advance. We cannot sound retreat.

I am not ignorant of the difficulties. On the foreign field the rising tide of nationalism, the political complications and suspicions of our ulterior purpose create problems that are difficult of solution. On the home field we see a spirit of deviousness, an inability to cooperate for the achievement of great ends, that threaten paralysis at this end. There are problems that face us all. But can we admit for a moment that any of them are sufficient for us to turn back from the imperial program to which Christ calls us in that commission?

When the war was at its height and the German invasion had swept down over

France, showing by the marks on the map an advancing position of the German army week by week, and month by month, there was one point that they never passed and that was the hilltop of Verdun. Against it the Germans hurled their best men; over against it the Crown Prince encamped. The crests of some of its hills were actually blown off by the explosion of bombs by the enemy, but no matter how severe the attack, the enemy never passed that point. When we came to inquire the reason we found that down underneath the ground of that hill was a great cave cut out of solid rock, where the leaders of France came together day by day for council. The soul of the nation was incarnated in those men and the spirit they recognized in the nation's heart was manifested by them when up over the council table around which they had sat, day by day, they carved into the solid rock the words of the nation's determination, with which we are all familiar "They shall not pass" and, thank God, they never did pass.

There have been things to disturb; there have been differences of opinion. There have been, sometimes, differences of council, but can we admit for a moment, that in the face of the needs of the world and the program of Jesus Christ, we cannot set our face toward the enemy, square our shoulders, and say of these enemies of God, "They shall not pass"? To such a stand this challenge calls us.

But there is another reason in this same field why I feel that we must rededicate ourselves to the accomplishment of this purpose. The text has the remarkable phrase in it "disciple all nations." While we agree that this process is to operate through individuals it nevertheless suggests an attitude toward the people of other nations that we must weigh carefully. The war has thrown the question of international relationships into the foreground. We have to pay attention to it whether we want to or not. Secretary Hughes said a short time ago of us, "We have only begun to think internationally and we find the attitude of the public mind to be still ill-adjusted to the magnitude of our financial power and to the international interests that we have suddenly accumulated as the result of the world war."

A By-Product

There are two conceptions in this field struggling for the mastery. One is best typified by the spirit and program that Jesus outlined in this commission; namely, that the people who owned the sway of Christ should go into all the nations to preach the gospel and teach the Christian life. In other words, that the representatives of this nation should go out as the emissaries of the gospel with its spirit of good-will and kindly service, representing the very best elements of the nation. The results of their labors, where they have so gone, has been to lay the foundation for national relationships that will conduce to understanding and cooperation and friendship. How largely our friendship for China and Japan is affected by this compact can hardly be over-estimated. It is a type of approach that best illustrates the Christian principle that the strength given any nation is given for service and not for exploitation of those who are weaker. The missionary cause in a real sense has created as a by-product a right atmosphere in which to settle many of our vexed international problems. Its spirit is constructive. Its method is service. Its result is peace. This cause, today, is asking for more money, and for the service of our boys and girls and the dedication of ourselves.

Over against this conception is another type—the older type, based on the idea that a nation's strength is given it for selfish aggrandizement. That nations' representatives shall go out to seek to exploit those who are weaker. To utilize commercial and political power to override those who are smaller. The spirit of this is the selfish use of power. It creates hatred and suspicion; it leaves ill-will in its wake. Its ultimate appeal is to force and its end is war and destruction.

These two ideas are struggling for mastery today. The representatives of the latter system are not silent. There are those in commercial life and in political life and those who control large sections of the press who are fanning the flame of suspicion and hatred between us and other nations. They are operating under the type of a commission that would say: "Go ye into all the world and get control of everything. Build up American supremacy regardless of how other nations suffer." There is a great group of our population today which feels called upon to create ill feeling with nations like Japan; to override Mexico and fan the flames of distrust between our nation and others. It is not so long ago that an ambassador of this nation to a foreign court deliberately gave the impression that the only reason America fought was for her own selfish interest, regardless of any principle or ideal, or any attitude of service to humanity.

Riding for a Fall

Let us make no mistake. If this conception of our approach to other nations has its ultimate fruitage it will drag us into war. If we are to sit proudly and coldly today among the wreckage of the world, the one rich, prosperous, powerful people, and take such an attitude as shall ignore the needs or the cry of the rest of the world, and even exploit their weakness for our gain, then, let it be said clearly, we are riding for a fall. We are building a wall of hate and suspicion around ourselves, and when that next war comes it will find the rest of the world alienated from us, and we shall have to fight as we never dreamed of fighting before. That war will ask for our sons and our daughters, not by tens, but by hundreds of thousands. It will ask for our money, not in terms of our missionary contributions, but in confiscation of all that we have, and it will utilize those lives and that money, not for the purpose of constructive helpfulness to the rest of the world but in the damnable business of cutting the throats of humanity.

Jesus' program means salvation not only to individuals but to the world. It is a significant thing that Jesus' words were that we are to go and "disciple the nations" and his process of affecting the nations by a new submission to his will on the part of the individuals who make up these nations is the most statesmanlike proposal on the horizon. The missionary program stands over against the war program. By so much as we let the missionary program go down, by that much we let the war program go up. We hate war and its methods of destruction. A short time ago a Baptist president of this republic and a Baptist secretary of state summoned the nations of the world together and had adopted a program for cutting down expenditures looking toward war. That was a great advance. But at best it was more or less a negative program. The Baptists here today need to supplement that with a positive program. Such a program as shall send out over all the world the ambassadors of Christ who shall by the nature of their work, establish the forces of good-will, create ties of friendship and fellowship and enlarge the confidence of the world in America's spirit of disinterested service. If we want peace let us spend money to get peace as well as refuse to spend money to create war.

A Packard Car and Ford Brakes

But we need a rededication of our strength and energy to the carrying out of this commission, not simply because of its effect in the "utmost parts of the earth," but we need it in our "Judea and Samaria," that is, right here in America. There is a great moral objective in the command—We are to teach people to observe and to do the things that he commanded. What a vision of society that opens up! What a vast change it would make in any given community in this land if the people were to observe and to do what things Jesus commanded! If his sense of sympathy and kindly service for humanity; if his sense of fairness and fair dealing and equity could be observed, what a change in our lawlessness, in our industrial wrongs—in our unbrotherliness! If the great moral conceptions that he incarnated in himself and came to proclaim, could be followed by the members of society, what an immense change would take place! Yet this is the thing Jesus holds before us and the thing for which we work, and God knows we have never needed to have that result obtained any more than we do today. With painful clearness we now see how essential it is for the protection of society and of civilization that this moral result shall be obtained. Moral ideals form the controlling power both for individuals and the nation. When the moral conceptions of a people fall below a certain point it jeopardizes the whole stability of the commonwealth. Let me illustrate what I mean. An automobile has a power system, an engine that drives it, and a control system, the steering gear and brake, that holds it. If these are in balance we have a safe machine. If not, we are in danger. You cannot hold the power system in a Packard car with a set of Ford brakes and a Ford steering gear.

The same necessity for holding the power and control in balance is evident in the personality of a man. A man has his power system, built up of ambitions, intellectual capacity and financial resources; political influences and other factors. A man also has his control system—the body of ideals that keep him honest, just and true to the things that are fine. When these are in balance he is a safe man. When they are out of balance he is a dangerous man. The most dangerous people we have in society today are not poor weaklings no matter how bad they are, but men of influence and wealth, intellect and large capacity, who are unprincipled. The tramp may steal from the back door but the man of influence has the power to wreck the community.

The same principle holds good in a nation. There are things that make it powerful and there are the bodies of ideals that control it. When these are in balance a nation is safe for itself and for others. When they are out of balance there is a terrific price to pay. This is the thing that happened to Germany. She increased her power system and decreased her control system. She increased her army and navy, enlarged her fortifications and speeded up her fighting machinery, at the same time she put her people through a definite process to depress their ideals of mercy, of honor, and of the sanctity of their treaties. Her power system went up and her control system went down, and when she broke loose she drenched the world in blood.

The thing we, in America, need to realize today more than anything else is that our balance is being greatly disturbed. Our power system in the last ten years has increased five to ten times. We used to owe everybody, now everybody owes us. We are rich beyond compare. They used to sneer at our army but nobody does that now. They used to laugh at our navy, now it is the pride of the world. America used to be on the side lines in world questions. Today the world waits for America's nod before it proceeds. We are powerful beyond any possible dream of ten years ago.

Liberty and License

The question we need to face is this: Has the body of ideals that control the average citizen risen to balance the increased power that we have achieved? It has not. On the contrary, it is evident that we are passing through a period of lowered idealism. The present wave of crime and lawlessness staggers our officials; the dishonor as to contracts, the fraudulent failures, the illegal fires, the bogus stock schemes have left the business world gasping and fearful. The willingness on the part of supposedly good citizens to jeopardize even the fundamental law of the land for personal gratification has amazed us. The liberties demanded by youth are turned lightly into license. These and scores of other indications point to a lowered idealistic vitality rather than higher. If this continues it will undermine our credit, shake the stability of the law and threaten our civilization. Our very power will be a source of danger to us and to the world. America has no greater need today than to have her great moral conceptions revitalized.

But where shall we turn for this revitalizing of her moral idealism? Can she manufacture it in her factories? Will she dig it from her mines? Every sane man knows that no adequate supply of moral idealism can be obtained, aside from God himself, and the religion of the imperial and perfect Master, Christ. You get more and better morality as a by-product from a life lived in submission to Christ than by any attempt to create it directly without that as a source of its inspiration. Let no man deceive himself. America needs to confess her sin and turn to God today, and have a national heart searching, till a revival of religion of the plain, old-fashioned variety breaks out, that will purge us from evil, make us keep our word, honor our contracts, be true to our home obligations, and renew our faith in each other's integrity and in God. America is suffering from moral and spiritual anoxia and the only cure is a transfusion of spiritual vitality from God, the source of moral and spiritual power.

JEAN PAUL was wont to say that no day should close without a look at the stars. Likewise, no day should close without our speaking some fine, warm, generous word for God and men. Then, when the stars come out and we look up, we shall find them shining with a strange new brightness that spills down into our inbreathing spirits.—F. W. Shannon.

Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention

Held at Kansas City, Missouri, June 21-22, 1922.

ASSISTED by pianists, trumpeters, a band and two immense choirs, under the leadership of Prof. H. Augustine Smith, of Boston University, on June 21, over 7,000 delegates to the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention made Convention Hall ring as the opening hymn announced that the day when the Sunday School Council and the International Sunday School Association became one in "The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education" had arrived and the Sunday-school forces of the United States and Canada were all united for a great national program of religious education. It is the ratification of this convention that makes the merger effective.

Children of Today Teachers of Tomorrow

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, editor of the Christian Herald, in an address on "The Changing Order," spoke of the changes in economics, education, social life, morals and religious thought caused by the increasing closer and intimate contacts of nations the world over, and described some of the esoteric religious views that are now challenging Christianity on the very streets of the United States and Canada. "The surest way to make certain that we have Christian nations on the North American continent two generations hence is to have a thorough-going campaign of religious education now, so that tomorrow the boys and girls of today will be equipped to teach in an adequate manner the then rising generation. The merger of the two great Sunday-school agencies into one augurs well for the success of such a venture."

A stereopticon presentation of a survey of the field of religious education by Dr. R. E. Diffendorfer, Chicago, portrayed the vast areas of American life as yet untouched by Sunday-school teaching.

"In hundreds of communities in the United States children grow up to maturity without ever seeing a minister or knowing what a Sunday school is. The names of God and Jesus Christ are known only as curses. In the state of Washington are rural sections where public schools flourish, but no teaching about God. In the mountains of Tennessee children know nothing of religion except the 'arousements' of the occasional visit of an illiterate preacher. In mining camps and fishing villages paganism thrives. The sons and daughters of new Americans are neglected because they are 'foreigners.' Thousands of American Indian boys and girls have no religious education because denominational agencies use the Indians to advertise home missions rather than to make Christian citizens of their children. In the Southwest, thousands of Spanish-American youth hardly know what religion is. In the congested sections of our great cities, where the church has moved out because no longer self-supporting, no Sunday-school agency has moved in to save tomorrow. No end of Negro villages are without religious training, and seldom is there adequate provision made for the colored boys and girls in the North. Whichever way you turn the neglect is deplorable. Both the churches and the Sunday schools have chosen the easy fields of service, and tomorrow and the day after will come the time of reckoning. Unless the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education can raise the Sunday-school forces so that the churches will heed their demand, childhood in America has a dark future. America will not be Christian. The hopes of our fathers will turn to ashes. We will have betrayed our trust."

The Unfolding of Inborn Capacities

In discussing "Educational Evangelism" Dr. William C. Bitting, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, St. Louis, said:

"The child is entrusted to adults to unfold its capacities which are physical, social, intellectual and religious. Education is not the imparting of information, but the unfolding of these inherent, inborn capacities. In every work there are five elements, the material, the ideal, into which it is to be transformed, the energy that transforms, the instrument through which the energy works, and the time necessary for the change. The child life is the material, the filial relation to God and fraternal relation with men is the ideal. God himself is the energy, and human life with all its processes is the instrument. Conversion is the experience, gradual or sudden, reached through a longer or shorter time, when the moral, religious and ethical capacities in the human being, dominated by Jesus Christ, control the physical, social and intellectual capacities of life.

"To produce that result is the aim of all religious education. Its ideal embraces the full development of the whole being, but the control of the being by its religious, moral and ethical elements according to the standard of Jesus Christ.

"The instruments of the Sunday school in its ministry to this result are, first, the giving to the child such truth as it is able to understand and assimilate, which means rigorous gradation in the church school curriculum; second, the practice of the truth that the child has thus received, which means all forms of expressional activity appropriate to the human being at any given stage of its life; third, the constant influence of older people through example and association, which demands a Christian life on the part of those who would educate the child religiously."

Dr. Marion Lawrance, Chicago, consulting general secretary of the International Sunday School Association, in speaking on "Facing the New Quadrennium," said:

"The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education is face to face with its supreme opportunities and challenge. Failure to recognize this as we plan the program for the future spells defeat from the start. On the other hand, the adoption here of a forward looking program of enlargement and conquest, built to meet and if possible to overcome, the appalling spiritual illiteracy of our day, and check the growing tendency toward lower standards of integrity and morals (facts as glaring as the noon-day sun)—backed by great faith and a determination to do the seemingly impossible—this sort of a program will grip the churches and unite them in the common task as they have never been united before. Nothing short of this will do. I am speaking for myself, and confess to a deep conviction on the subject and also to a very grave concern.

Youth the Harvest Time

"Here at Kansas City, with a reorganization effected that brings, or is meant to bring the Sunday-school forces of the continent into a single working body we are standing in the valley of decision. It must be forward or backward. The religious organization of any kind that is content to let well enough alone and simply mark time and hold its own, never holds its own. It finds it has less to hold every time it takes account of stock. We cannot stand still. Which shall it be? Go forward or go backward? That depends.

"What are the facts? We all believe that childhood and youth is the time of harvest for the kingdom. We believe a boy or girl is worth more to the kingdom of God and to the church, than a man or woman, because they have a longer time for service. We believe the Sunday school is the whitest part of the church's great field. The records of the church prove it.

"And yet—only one church member in four is in the Sunday school at all or seems to take a vital interest in its program. Of those who are members it takes four officers and teachers a whole year to bring in one permanent new member. For every dollar spent by the average church member for the support of his local church, including salaries, upkeep, missions, benevolences, music, etc., less than two cents goes for the Sunday school and religious education, and yet notwithstanding all the fine work of the Sunday school during the past fifty years (and it has been great), there are more children and youth of day-school age not in any Sunday school than there are in all of them.

"I am not knocking the Sunday school. It is the best organized and most profitable department of the church. But what do

Gird Thyself for Each Day's Need

Convention Hymn Dedicated to the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention

By RALPH WELLES KEELER

COMES anew Thine eager message,
"Gird thyself for each day's need;
In the paths by Christ made perfect
Turn thy steps and onward speed."
Other followers of Thy precepts
Into life Thy teachings turned;
As they walked along beside Thee
In their hearts Thy Spirit burned.

Ours a heritage of courage,
Martyrs' blood and prophets' claim,
Shoulder close to shoulder pressing,
We march onward in Thy Name.
Ours to know and live for others
In such service as Christ gave;
Teaching us Thy love and justice
In our day a world would save.

Millions call! Shall millions answer?
Let our battle haste the day
When mankind the whole world over
At Thine altars humbly pray.
Give us faith, and knowledge perfect,
Help us each Thy Word to live.
Thou who givest Life abundant,
May we daily service give.

Commencement Days at Colgate University

By JOHN B. ANDERSON

THE inestimable value of Oxford," says Hugh de Selincourt in his charming book, "Oxford from Within," "was that in the rushing of modern life, rushing that is misnamed advance and mistaken for vitality, it remained a place of quiet breathing, a beautiful place; that in these days of quick cleverness and journalism and hurried notions and crazes that masquerade as ideas, there remained a place where deep questions might still be treated in the deep deliberate way which any reverence for them demands." If the author had been describing Colgate and the lovely village of Hamilton which in the memories of all Colgate men is always associated with their alma mater, he could not have chosen his words more aptly.

Equipment of College Man

Breathing this spirit of deep deliberateness was the baccalaureate address of Dr. M. S. Read delivered in Colgate Memorial Chapel, Sunday morning, June 18. The speaker set before his hearers clearly and impressively the special equipment of the college man and the part he is likely to play in the life of the nation and of the world in the years immediately before us. For special treatment he selected the field of international relations, attitude toward the civil law, and the sphere of religion. The college man will not be an extremist in international affairs, but while cherishing the ideal of the brotherhood of man will in the spirit of practicality hold to the golden mean between a pure idealism and a narrow nationalism. Disobedience to law and especially disobedience to the Eighteenth Amendment and its related laws by people who regard themselves as good citizens bodes ill for the future of the social order in our country, and it is not easy to say what will be the attitude of the college man to civil law. We may, however, believe that it will be at least more wholesome than that of the average citizen not trained in college. In religion, while the college graduates as a group will not yield reverence to dogmatic authority or value religious ritual or organization just out of deference to the prestige of age-long tradition, yet a college man will prize and promote vital religion that is not out of harmony with the intellectual world into which his college course introduced him and that will stand the test of practical benefit for the individual and for society.

On Sunday afternoon the corner stone of the Newton Lloyd Andrews Dormitory was laid in the presence of a large concourse of people by Mr. Henry A. Colgate, son of the late Mr. Richard M. Colgate, the donor of the new edifice. The address was delivered by the Dr. William M. Lawrence, who spoke in his characteristically fine way of the corner stone as the symbol of strength, progress and unity and paid a worthy tribute to the presence of these qualities in the character both of Dr. Andrews and of Mr. Colgate. He also spoke forcibly of the value of dormitories on a college campus because in them young men away from home take their first important step in learning how to live with others, the great problem in the civilization of the world today. The sermon before the Theological Seminary in the Baptist church in the evening was a most helpful, practical and inspirational address on the "Joy of Jesus" by Rev. Avery A. Shaw, of Brooklyn.

The Seminary Class Day on Monday morning in Eaton Hall was an occasion long to be remembered for its fine Christian fellowship and deep and fervent spirituality. Two members of the graduating class delivered thoughtful addresses of marked interest and power. Mr. Edwin Kautz dramatically described the cloud of witnesses beginning with Daniel Hascall and including the generations of teachers and trustees and students and friends of the seminary. Mr. Kautz is a Hungarian, greatly beloved by teachers and students. He expects to give his life to work among the people of his own race among whom he has already done much mission work. Mr. A. C. Brokaw who is a student volunteer for foreign missions, recited the history of the seminary's contribution of men to the work of foreign missions. Professor Anderson on behalf of the faculty gave the farewell message to the graduating class and plead for ministers to interpret to the world our modern complex life in the light of Christ.

The Brook that Dried Up

By ARTHUR THOMAS FOWLER

And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Hide thyself by the brook Cherith. . . . And it came to pass that after a while, the brook dried up. . . . Get thee to Zarephath.

SOME of our richest experiences and clearest perceptions have come to us, across the barren wastes of life. The arid regions of our experience have their ministries, as well as the green pastures and still waters. The faithful heart thanks God for the desert, as much as for the fertile field filled with golden grain. It is here our faith is often tried and sometimes perplexed. It is easy to believe in a providence which gives, but it is not so easy to recognize a love that takes away. "How providential," we say! When? When the brook is flowing full and free. When the life of a loved one is spared, a request is granted, and an undertaking is successfully completed. To some people God's providence is simply getting all they want. Having every wish gratified. But disappointment, pain, sorrow, loss, frustrated plans, what of these? There is a providence of loss and failing things, as there is a providence that gives. Many a hard experience may prove a wonderful blessing. God's providence is not an end in itself, but a means to an end. It is for our discipline and development. For Elijah, Cherith was the resting place, not the destination. Before he could reach Zarephath, he had to learn that God's purpose can overcome all circumstances. The ministry of the transient is that we may learn the value of the Eternal. Our failing brooks are our teachers—to have faith in God!

Dean Vichert spoke concerning the work of the seminary during the past year. The enrolment has been sixty including one graduate student at Oxford University and nine students in the Italian department. A considerable number of men who are registered in the college also took one or more courses in seminary classes. The interruption of our work occasioned by the war makes itself manifest in the small number of eight graduations already received for next year gives promise of an unusually large entering class. The year's work serves more fully to emphasize the value of the Bachelor of Theology course. It is attracting in increasing numbers students capable of doing work of the highest grade. Most of those graduating in the Bachelor of Theology course plan for further study. They chose this course as the one affording the best preparation for graduate work in theology, and they propose now to follow courses leading to advanced degrees. That is precisely the result for which we hoped in the case of the younger men who might register in this course and justifies their admission to it.

The work of the Italian department of the seminary has been conducted on the campus of the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J., and in cooperation with that institution.

On Monday evening in the Colgate Memorial Chapel, Mr. Jesse B. Davis of the college class of 1895 delivered the address before the Alumni Corporation on the theme of "The Responsibility of the American College toward the Demand of Democracy for Higher Education."

The Candle of the Lord

The university commencement address on Tuesday morning was delivered in the chapel by Professor William Henry Crawshaw, dean of the college. His central thought was that life and civilization will be successful and worth while only as the human element in everything receives complete spiritual and practical recognition. "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord" to shed light on all the phases and problems of life. Perhaps the most dangerous thing in educational method today is the lock step, the unequally yoking together of students of differing ability and, machine-like, forcing them through one and the same mold. "The spirit of man which is the candle of the Lord" needs also to shine upon our industrial life. Deep down beneath the bitterness and the greed of many laboring men is the fact that men want to feel that they are men and not machines. Science aids human progress, but not if it be allowed to deny the spiritual.

The degrees in course were as follows: B.S. seventy-three, A.B. twenty-three, B.Th. five, M.S. one, A.M. three, B.D. two, 107 in all. The honorary degrees were as follows: Mr. William J. Wiley, superintendent of the Masonic Home, Utica, N. Y., A.M.; Prof. Louis M. Dennis, head of the Department of Chemistry, Cornell University, Sc.D.; Prof. Frederick C. Hicks, Colgate, 1898, professor of law in Columbia University, Litt.D.; Jesse B. Davis, Colgate, 1895, in charge of secondary school work under the Connecticut

State Department of Education, Litt.D.; Rev. James A. Huntley, Colgate Seminary, 1907, D.D.; Rev. Alfred W. Rogers, Colgate, 1894, D.D.; Rev. Alvah E. Knapp, Colgate, college, 1890, seminary, 1899, D.D.; Rev. Bunyan Spencer, professor of philosophy and logic in Denison University, D.D.; Rev. Frederick Lent, president of Elmira College, LL.D.; Mr. James C. Colgate, LL.D.

A large and enthusiastic alumni dinner in the "gym" brought to a close the best commencement Colgate has seen in recent years. The university is doing a great work. With gratitude to God for a successful year now closed all are looking forward with high hope to the years to come under the new leadership of the president-elect, Dr. George B. Cutten, who has abundantly proved himself an able thinker and educator, an administrator of large affairs and a strong leader of men.

Carleton's Forty-Eighth Commencement

By WENDELL S. BROOKS

COMMENCEMENT festivities at Carleton College opened with the cap and gown ceremony at which Rev. David Bryn Jones, who is serving as pastor of the Northfield Baptist Church, made the principal address.

At the alumni dinner Professor Allan Hoben, president-elect of Kalamazoo College, Michigan, responded to a toast in which he expressed appreciation of the good wishes of our faculty and students for his new work. Carleton is honored in having another of its faculty members chosen president of a sister college.

The commencement address was delivered by President Coffman of the University of Minnesota who opened with comparative statistics on the status of our country educationally in 1870 and 1920. The average citizen at the earlier date received 589 days' schooling, now the average is over 1,200 days in school. The marvelous development of our secondary schools was detailed. Their attendance exceeds the corresponding enrollments of all other countries combined. "America is engaged," President Coffman said, "in a gigantic experiment attempting to provide an education for all who are qualified and willing to take it.

"You, who are being graduated today, who have received so much from our educational institutions, should consider certain outstanding duties that devolve upon the educated citizen in a democracy."

Dr. Edwin B. Dean as chairman of the board of deans presented eighty-three candidates for the Bachelor of Arts degree. This class is next to the largest ever graduated by Carleton, the class of 1920 with ninety-six members topping the list.

One member of this graduating class, J. Larry Krause, sails in August as a missionary to Fenchow, Shansi, China.

Miss Helen Priscilla Symons, who joins the Carleton faculty next year, was granted the Bachelor of Music and three Master of Arts degrees were awarded.

A distinctive feature of this commencement was the award of two honorary degrees: Doctor of Humanity to Miss Susan Annette Searle for thirty-nine years' distinguished service at Kobe College, Japan; Doctor of Laws to Lotus Delta Coffman, Ph. D., president of the University of Minnesota, an outstanding constructive educator of the Northwest.

Dr. Dean announces that registrations for our next freshman class point to another banner year at Carleton.

Bucknell University

By LEWELLYN PHILLIPS

THE seventy-second commencement, which closed the third year of President Hunt's administration, was held June 10-14. In the light of the uncertain policy of the denomination concerning education, it is almost impossible not to ask what is there of interest in the commencement of one of our denominational colleges.

First of all there was the baccalaureate sermon by President Hunt which closed with this appeal: "As you go out into life, I beg of you not to forget that the supreme problem of your life is the responsibility of determining your response to the appeal of Jesus Christ." And the whole sermon based on John 14:30—"The Prince of the world cometh and findeth nothing in me"—was replete with a personal appeal that was peculiarly evangelical.

Then throughout the commencement days there was a constant expression of feeling that President Hunt was gradually bringing into the university that spirit of Christian idealism for which he is well-known wherever there are Baptists. Alumni and friends in great numbers came to the president's reception that they might greet President and Mrs. Hunt. And those who have the opportunity of seeing inquiries concerning the college frequently come across a statement somewhat like this, "I want my son or daughter (as the case may be) to attend a college where Dr. Hunt is president."

I AM the bread of life. He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, from within him shall flow rivers of living water. I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me may not abide in the darkness.—Saint John.

Again, about 140 young men and young women were graduated. Of this number 90 per cent are professing Christians, 25 per cent are Baptists and most of the 140 have been under the ministry of Dr. Raymond M. West, widely known among Baptists. Throughout the six orations delivered by chosen representatives of the class there ran a strong note of Christian service.

Among those who received honorary degrees were well-known Baptists. Doctor of Divinity was conferred on Charles E. Goodall, acting executive of the New Jersey Convention; James Madison Hare, Senior Chaplain in the United States army; Edward C. Kunkle, promotion executive of the Metropolitan Baptist Board of Promotion of New York City; Doctor of Science on Ezra Allen, professor of biology at Ursinus College; Doctor of Letters on Homer D. Brookins, literary editor of the Watchman-Examiner.

Colby College

By CHARLES P. CHIPMAN

THE most noticeable feature of the one hundred and first commencement of Colby College was the rain. In a down-pour which began on Saturday, continued almost without intermission until Tuesday noon, and began again on Wednesday, the students and returning graduates doggedly plodded through the program, wet but good-natured.

The Senior Last Chapel, held on Saturday morning, June 10, was really the first exercise of commencement, though separated from the more formal activities by a week's interval. The address by Prof. Webster Chester, of the department of biology, was upon "The Necessity of Faith," and was a strong plea for faith in God as the basis of an efficient life.

The baccalaureate sermon, Sunday morning, at the City Hall, was preached by President A. J. Roberts. His subject was "Happiness" and his text was the portion of the Sermon on the Mount usually known as the Beatitudes. These, he said, are the complete formula for happiness, the compendium of practical Christianity. The happiness of the Beatitudes—the only real happiness—is the happiness of Jesus. And we make it ours only so far as our lives have felt the transforming influence of his.

This commencement marked the one hundredth anniversary of the graduation of George Dana Boardman, Colby's first graduate and first foreign missionary. A service of commemoration was held in the First Baptist Church on Sunday evening at which Rev. Charles C. Tilley, '76, gave the address. "He saved others, himself he cannot save," was his text, and the theme developed was that all accomplishment is made at the cost of sacrifice.

"Boardman Willows"

There was a further memorial to George Dana Boardman on Tuesday afternoon, when the so-called "Boardman willows," for many years an outstanding feature of the Colby campus, were replanted with appropriate exercises. The original willows, planted ninety years ago, are beginning to fall into decay, and to take their places a large number of young willows were planted by President Roberts and the members of the graduating class. The address was made by Professor Julian D. Taylor, of the department of Latin, who has completed fifty-four years of continuous teaching at Colby.

On Tuesday morning, at the class-day exercises of the senior class, emphasis was again laid upon the fact that Colby is a college which has sent a continuous stream of missionaries to the home and foreign fields. The gift of the class to the college was a large memorial tablet, placed upon the wall of the chapel, and containing the names of the Colby men and women whose lives have been given to the service of the Master. The address at this time was delivered by Rev. F. M. Preble, '81, of the board of trustees.

College prayers were said in the chapel each morning at nine o'clock. These services were largely attended and were of an inspiring nature. On Monday Dr. Charles F. Meserve, president-emeritus of Shaw University, was the speaker; on Tuesday, Rev. W. A. Smith, '91, spoke; and on Wednesday, Rev. G. W. Hinckley, M.A., of the Good Will Homes, gave the address.

Tuesday evening, at the Baptist Church, Dr. Edward Howard Griggs, delivered the college oration, his theme being "Present Educational Tendencies." Sixteen members of the graduating class were elected to membership in the Beta Chapter of Maine of Phi Beta Kappa at the annual meeting held on Monday afternoon.

Tuesday afternoon the new concrete grandstand, seating 3,000, was dedicated as a memorial to the more than 600 Colby men who served in the World War. This grandstand, the gift of Mrs. Eleanor S. Woodman of Winthrop Center, is not erected merely in honor of those who died in the service but as a tribute to all who

The Open Forum

THE TWO WITNESSES

There are men who seem ready to doubt one's profession of love to God if it becomes evident there is a lack of sympathetic regard for God's works. The mind is so constituted that it reverences that which a beloved hand has wrought. Our eagerness to keep in touch with the revelation of the Lord that gives us a view of his love and paternity sometimes inclines us to belittle the value of the world's marvelous creations, even if wrought with the same beneficent hand. To test the matter in your own case try an experiment. Read the book of Psalms. Make a note of all the allusions to nature. List these allusions under such titles as mountain, air, water, birds, animals and so on, at your pleasure. With the writers of the Psalms all these allusions were real observations of God's connection with nature. They were life-time notations of God's thoughts as read in nature. Take the nineteenth Psalm as a specimen. The splendors of nature are evidently exercising the writer's mind. To him the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament displays his workmanship. Day and night, in never ceasing regularity tell their story, while the glorious sun, the pride of creation, is described in the most lordly manner as a subject of divine care.

Nature witnesses for God. It tells a straight-forward story. It says I am under faultless management. My purpose is to glorify God and benefit human kind. God and nature are in sympathy. Perfect sympathy. Nature never falters in witnessing. Every strata of rock, every sea ripple, every stellar circuit, every mountain deposit, every warbling bird, each and all say, "God made me. God cares for me." And yet the sweet-toned voice of nature, charming as it is, is altogether outranked by the voicing of God in his holy Word. Here we learn not only who made the world and all its beauties and values, but who it is that loves the world and how that love is really expressed. The Word gets a hold on us in a way the marvelous works of nature cannot. The Word touches us, when nature cannot. Beyond the finger tips of creation, the Word spreads itself over our entire sensibility and impresses itself upon our deepest currents of life, with perfect ease.

Sit down and listen to the voicing of nature, when you are out in the field, where all is quiet and commanding. Listen to the tones of harmony and psychologic music that are common there.

Nature never lies to you. She never cheats. All the wealth of her life is poured out to bring you health and happiness. You may drink it all in as God's blessed gift. After this listen to the voice of God in his Word. The witnesses agree. They never tell contrary stories. They never quarrel. They are the witnesses of the same God. In both he is glorious, beneficent, and kind. How infinite is the plan of God as seen in the delicate details of a blade of grass, a fly's wing, the sunset and the sighing evening wind. All seem perfect. Everything in nature is well done, carefully done, beautifully done! Why did God make it all so? Think. Get your answer. The Word says God cares for the sparrow. The little humble bird has his infinite care. Are we not more than a sparrow? Will not God care for us also? Surely we may trust him who has so wonderfully made all we see about us.

Nature says, "Yes, dear heart, you may trust him." The Word also says, "You may trust him." In these wonderful days, when everything has a sweet song in its mouth, we see nature turning its face toward God, as a symbol of trust. Why should we not do the same thing?

A GREAT CONVENTION

It was a great convention. The greatest since Denver. It was great in numbers, 2,874 attending. It was great in its addresses. Dr. Beaven's sermon on "The Great Commission" was one of the greatest Baptists have ever heard. It was great in its prayer and dependence on God. Its theme was, "An Uplifted Christ." Its slogan, "Agreed to differ but resolved to love." Its president at the outset boldly, unflinchingly walked up to our difficulties, called them by name, looked them in the face and bade us pray them through.

The convention was great in its surprises. Some expected to hear the death knell of our denomination sounded. The God of the living was there. Some expected unsurmountable debt. We shall pay out in two years. Some expected division. We were never more united. Some moments were dramatic. None more so than when Dr. Woelfkin presented the resolution expressing our sense of honor toward Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery.

This leads me to say that the convention was great in its unity, papers to the contrary notwithstanding. We were absolutely united in a determination to go on with our task. We were absolutely united doctrinally. "We are not divided—all one body we." We love the New Hampshire confession not less. We love the New Testament more. We were absolutely united for our new officers. Never has a ticket been more nearly unanimously ratified. The rule for a printed ballot one day before, while rigorous in its exactions upon the nominating committee, is a good rule. We were absolutely united in our determination not to swap horses, not to tinker the machinery. We keep THE BAPTIST. We keep the Board of Promotion. We economize.

We emerge from this convention great in our beliefs and determinations. We believe some things tremendously. We believe in the kingship of Christ and his authority. We are resolved to have no other head of the church but Jesus Christ. We believe in the competency of the soul before God. We believe in the priesthood of all believers. We believe in prayer. We believe in the Great Commission. We have demonstrated that the Baptist denomination has a constitution which can weather a crisis. The press of the country is aware of us. The New York Times, the Chicago Tribune, the Boston Globe had their representatives there. We grew in those few days like an oak in a storm. Our roots took hold on the rock of Faith in God, loyalty to principle and sacrifice for a great cause. The future is bright. We have stood with history makers in these moments. Already we have named a commission to study what way we will take after 1924.

SEASON FOR GOOD PRAYER MEETINGS

In a former issue of your paper the question is asked, "What is the matter with the prayer meeting?" I have been a member of the Baptist church for sixty-one years. In all that time I have been a regular attendant of the prayer meeting. Have missed but few.

I have to say this that more prayer meetings are killed by the minister himself and two or three long-winded deacons than in any other way. The best meetings are often when the pastor is on his vacation. The prayer meeting is preeminently the laymen's meeting. It doesn't want any sermons or sermonettes.

One of the most successful pastors that I know seldom leads the prayer meeting.

The American Baptist Publication Society has issued a call for a special meeting. Its board of managers, on May 24, took the following action: "Resolved, That the Board of Managers issue a call for a special meeting of The American Baptist Publication Society, to be held in the Board Room of the society's building, 1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, on Wednesday, July 26, 1922, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to consider and pass upon the election of officers and other actions taken by the society at meetings held in Indianapolis, Ind., in the month of June, 1922, and to consider such other business as may lawfully be brought before it."

Interesting Children in the Church Service

How the Sermon May Be Made to Hold Their Attention

By UTHAI VINCENT WILCOX

JUST suppose that you found it necessary—in fact, you were compelled—to sit for thirty minutes, forty minutes, or even fifty minutes and listen (?) to a man talk in a foreign language, say in Greek or Russian, or Chinese. Would you enjoy yourself? Would you sit there with good grace and with pleasure, not understanding what the man was talking about?

Of course you wouldn't! You'd rebel. It would take a mighty force to compel you to do this once a week, wouldn't it?

Yet the parallel isn't far-fetched when compared to your children, or to your neighbor's children, who have to go to church and listen to the minister preach. The average sermon is to them as Greek or Russian would be to you. They do not understand or appreciate what the speaker is talking about.

But because the average boy and girl cannot understand the sermon given from the pulpit on Sabbath is not sufficient excuse for their absence from church service. The remedy lies in devising ways and means of making the church service interesting to his mind and her mind. And it can and has been done.

Most people are agreed that regular churchgoing is a most desirable habit to have. When the habit is inculcated in children it is never entirely broken in after years. Besides the influence of the church service will be of inestimable value on the character and in the training of habits and desires. That is, the right sort of service will be helpful.

It is most important that the campaigns for "go to church" days include within their scope the young people, the juniors and particularly the children. It is self-evident that if the children are started right, it will not require the effort later to break up old habits or careless indifference.

In many parts of the country there is a most commendable movement to establish "children's churches." These are places where the children will enjoy and appreciate the lesson and where the sermon is adapted to their minds. In many places a definite part of the church service is made intelligible to the little ones. This is generally the first ten or fifteen minutes. This holds the children's attention, gives them something to think about and look forward to from week to week. It gives them the "momentum," so to speak, that will carry them more easily over the part of the sermon that is given for the older ones only.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Out on the Pacific Coast one energetic Sabbath-school superintendent whose school meets before the church services, interested himself in the problem of the juniors and the children and their attendance at the church services.

He had been noting how many of the boys and girls either went home at the beginning of the preaching service, or went off on questionable trips on the Sabbath, or hung about the streets waiting for their parents to come out of the service.

To assist in remedying this difficulty he had made up at a local bindery, blank books with heavy covers. These he gave to those who would promise to stay to the church services for that day. Through the superintendents of divisions he appealed to the boys and girls up to and including the junior ages to stay to the preaching services that followed the Bible school.

Giving the little books to the boys and girls he requested them to note certain references made by the minister and to write these down in their notebooks.

For instance, one Sabbath they were to see if they could write down the texts given. On another time they were to note the number of allusions made to trees, or nature, or to events in the world, with perhaps a word or two about the thing noted. Another time, they were to write down the songs sung or at least some thought or sentiment from the hymns.

As the superintendent took an active interest in the matter each week by suggesting something that would be of general interest to all ages it stimulated attendance for the meeting following. It even had its effect on the parents. Many of the older ones were persuaded to come to church who might not have attended if it not been for the special interest of the children.

From time to time rewards were offered to those who best carried out the suggestions. These were graded according to the ages of the children. The very smallest were stimulated to trace and to draw things, thin paper being provided, together with simple outline cards for them to use.

It was most gratifying to the pastor, who was of course consulted, and who made suggestions according to the subject of his sermon. New ways and methods suggested themselves as the matter developed. It proved without question that the children were quick to respond to any simple plan by which they could relieve in ever so small a way the tedium of having to remain quiet. There is no way of estimating the amount of knowledge and inspiring moral and spiritual lessons obtained from the simple practice of having to listen carefully to the minister in order to note the particular things for which they were watching.

It may be suggested that such a plan does not consider the reverence with which the church should be held. But is it not better to instruct the lambs of the flock or even to cause them to be occupied than to have them grow up with an ever-increasing dislike for the church and the services of the Lord's house?

In another church the mothers took the matter in hand and through the church's Friendship Band they arranged to have the children file out quietly during the hymn just preceding the sermon. They would go to one of the Bible-school rooms where under the charge of an experienced children's worker they would enjoy a little talk given in a manner that they could appreciate.

Still other methods have been used with success. Small picture-books of Bible scenes that permit the adding of new pictures each week and are used only during the church services have been used with success.

Little bunches of papers given out in the Bible school have been fastened together and these used as something to add to the interest of the morning's exercise.

The children must be doing something. If they are not kept busy with something good, they will surely occupy themselves with something questionable.

With a well-defined plan for providing for the children during the church services, the older members will obtain greater

The Child

*THE world was dark with care and woe,
With brawl and pleasure wild;
When in the midst, his love to show,
God set a Child.*

*The sages frowned, their heads they shook,
For pride their heart beguiled.
They said, each looking on his book,
"We want no Child."*

*The merchants turned toward their scales,
Around their wealth they piled;
Said they, "'Tis gold alone, prevails,
We want no Child."*

*The soldiers rose in noisy sport;
Disdainfully they smiled;
And said, "Can babes the shield support?
We want no Child."*

*Then said the Lord: "O world of care,
So blindest and beguiled,
Thou must receive for thy repair
A Holy Child."*

spiritual help and benefit from the hour spent in the house of God. What a relief such things are to the parents who spend moments of torture to keep active little ones quiet during the sermon! What a relief it is to the people who are annoyed by the restlessness of the little ones! What a relief it is to the pastor and the speaker who can see everything that is going on.

Children who are occupied pleasantly and profitably during the preaching hour will soon learn to love the church—not to dread it. They will obtain the idea that the church is there for them too, for it becomes attractive and of real interest.

A habit is formed without conscious effort in such churches that in after life will carry the man and his family and possibly his friends to church with him each week. This will be of benefit to the man who attends, and will have its influence on the civil life of the community and the town in which he lives.

The effect of using a little effort in planning carefully for the children; in helping them to like the church and its services is far-reaching in its ultimate end. Its cumulative value becomes of interest even to the state and the nation.—Christian Herald.

The Young Reserves

Shoo Fly

THE naughty flies were having a regular circus. It was just as if Little Treasure's face was a giant fair-ground, and the Fly family had all gotten free passes; for two of them ran races across Little Treasure's smooth brown forehead, three more played hide-and-go-seek in his black hair, and five or six had a merry-go-round on his nose—quite exciting, for when they whisked around the merriest Little Treasure would wriggle his nose until the merry-go-rounders would suddenly collapse into a heap, and pick themselves up with a disgusted flirt of their little wings. Meanwhile other members of the family played tag around Little Treasure's lips, or blind man's buff inside his ears, and any Fly who wanted real exercise went for a brisk promenade up and down Little Treasure's bare arms and legs. Sometimes their sticky feet tickled him until he squirmed, whereupon Mr. and Mrs. Fly and the junior Flies would buzz noisily over to pester Little Nuisance.

All this time poor Little Treasure himself did not quite understand what was going on, for he ached all up and down inside himself, and felt piping hot! His mother hung over him shaking her dear brown head as she sadly cried: "Oh me, oh my! The same evil spirits that worry our neighbors have gotten into thee, Precious Apple of My Eye!" And she clapped her hands noisily to scare the spirits away, and sprinkled red pepper in his eyes so he could not fall asleep.

Then Little Nuisance moaned and the mother swooped around on her heels crossly: "Be quiet, Thou Foolish Little Always-In-the-Way; thy brother is ill with this strange sickness nobody has ever seen before, so is it for thee to fret when he lies here all too quiet and still? Come over and chatter to him and keep him awake, for I fear if he once gets to sleep the gods will steal away his soul."

Little Nuisance was not in a talking mood, but because she felt miserable and ache-y and lonesome she crawled slowly along the earth floor to cuddle beside Little Treasure, and you would have seen a strange thing if you had been there. For they looked exactly alike, two brown peas in a brown pod; the same cunning brown heads, the same little rosettes of mouths, the same comical little bumps of noses! Indeed, you couldn't tell which was which! Then you could have seen another strange thing, for their mother who saw only a nuisance when she looked at her little girl, saw a precious little treasure when she looked at her little boy. The comical little bump of a nose which seemed no sort of a nose on the face of Little Nuisance, suddenly became the most adorable nose in the world when it got over on Little Treasure's brown face!

And something dreadful had gone wrong inside Little Treasure, that she knew right well. So she wove a long garland of jessamine flowers and putting some rice into a brass bowl she hurried to the temple where the Big Stone Idol sat in stiff unblinking silence. She hung her garland around the neck of the fat old priest, then knelt before the idol and begged him to cast the evil spirit out of her little son. "Let it go into Little Nuisance," she prayed, "just let it go into her. She can stand it. And here is some nice rice, the very best I had, O Thou All-Wise and Powerful One. Oh hear my prayer, and let the evil spirit go into Nuisance." Over and over she whispered the words, and while she knelt there, other people came and mumbled prayers that sounded a great deal like hers. For in that village some one was sick in almost every hut—some one who ached and felt hot, exactly as Little Treasure did, until relatives rushed to the idols with presents begging that the evil spirits might leave their loved ones. As for the Big Stone Idol, he just sat on and on and on, and nobody ever saw his big stone hands move the tiniest inch toward any of these presents, neither did his big stone eyes ever weep a single tear at the grief of all his dismal worshippers. For after all, he was just a doll, and because he was chiselled in a sitting position with his stone hands on his stone knees, he just sat! What else could he do? Even when he heard the forlorn tom-toms throbbing all night and heard parents wailing, and saw fewer and fewer people coming to worship because they, too, had become sick—what could he do, being only stone, and chiselled to sit forever and ever?

To be sure, Little Nuisance grew hotter and ach-ier, but that did not seem to help Little Treasure any, and before long even poor old white-haired granny crumpled up into a heap, and the only thing to do was to take more rice to the idol and call in the village doctor. But he was so very busy shaking the evil spirits out of other sick people, or burning them here and there, that he did not have time to get to everybody, and meanwhile the Flies never had such a lively circus scampering around over sick faces and poor limp arms and legs.

Then you and I entered that town! For the missionary doctor was our very own, and it was our money that paid for the medicine bottles in her hands. Right and left, all up and down the sunny street, you could hear her saying the most sensible things: "Be sure to let these influenza patients sleep. It will do them good. Keep them quiet and clean and comfortable. Fan them to shoo away the flies, let there be plenty of fresh air—don't hang over them or you may catch it yourself. Then give them this medicine once an hour."

When she got to Little Treasure's mud hut she found him very miserable, with his dear brown eyes swimming in tears that kept coming and coming, because of the dreadful red pepper his mother had used. The minute our doctor looked at Little Treasure she loved him to pieces, he was just that kind of a boy; then when she turned away to get her medicine-bag, lo and behold, there was Little Nuisance, exactly as darling and not nearly so sick.

"My dear," she said kindly, "you must let him sleep, and couldn't you whisper 'shoo fly! shoo fly!' ever and ever so softly and see that not one horrid fly ever gets a chance to sit down on him all day long?"

"But what's the matter with flies?" asked the amused Little Nuisance, "do they matter?"

"Dreadfully so!" sighed our doctor, "for they not only help keep him awake, when he needs sleep so badly, but they also have disease germs all up and down their sticky little legs, and we don't want any more shifted off onto your nice brother, do we?"

"Oh no, mem sahib," Little Nuisance said gravely, "I will shoo and shoo and shoo!"

So by and by Little Treasure got well. But to this very day everybody has a different reason to give! Little Nuisance is sure it is because she kept saying "shoo fly" all the time; his mother thinks it is because the white Christian doctor had just the proper magic in her pills to scare off the evil influenza spirits; our doctor thinks it is because the Lord Jesus stood by her side to help her; but the Lord Jesus himself knows it is because you and I and other Christians in America gave money for the pills this doctor used, so that she was able to have on hand the very remedies he could bless!

The Layman Company, 35 N. Dearborn, Chicago, is offering to send a twenty-four-page pamphlet edition of "Stewardship Born of God," a convincing, brief, terse and easily understood Scriptural argument in behalf of tithing, with seven other pamphlets on tithing, all for 10 cents.

GROW
II Peter 3:18

"But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Second Peter was written to Christians. "To them that have obtained a like precious faith with us in the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ." There must be a beginning before there can be growth. For us, God, who has been revealed to us through Jesus Christ, is the source of life. Just a beginning is not enough. The writer urges something more.

1. The exhortation. Christianity is not a static religion. The Christ is ever moving on and insofar as we will allow him, he reveals to us the great truths of the Christian religion. "The backward look" in religious matters has always been the most perplexing problem in Christian work.

The man who stood up in prayer meeting and thanked God that he got his bucket full of religion twenty years ago and that it had never been more or less since that day, had a very distorted view of the real meaning of Christianity. There must be either growth or death and decay in the life of the follower of the Lord. There is not a pastor in the land but who will testify to this fact. He sees it in the church every day of his life. Gymnastics are just as vital to spiritual development as to the building of a strong body. There is no escape from this fact.

2. Growth in what? The writer states two things: (1) Grace. The writer must have meant those attributes of Christlikeness made known to us through the Scriptures. What are some of them? Love, unselfishness, honesty, truthfulness, holiness, service, sacrifice, brotherliness, patience, longsuffering, industry, kindness, prayer, etc. What an array of things to be achieved by poor sinful humanity! Yes, but he is the ideal and men must move on toward him, conquering, achieving, serving.

(3) Knowledge. There are all sorts of things to be known in the modern world and Christians have no right to close their eyes or minds to truth. Truth is of God and from God and we should search for it in all the avenues and relationships of life. Jesus said "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Notice, not some one's interpretation of truth!

The writer of this letter is concerned primarily with the "knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Knowledge is power. Knowledge comes to us through study and the use of our God-given faculties in the solution of life's problems. The sponge-like personality never gets very far. Life is not merely "absorbing" the things which come within our reach. Our personalities must react upon everything we touch. In our quest for knowledge of him, we turn to the Bible, the Christian's book. There we find the story of his life, his dealings with people, and of his sacrificial life. If we would secure knowledge of him, our minds and hearts must be open to his message.

Again, we know him through experience. It is not enough just to read about him. He must come in and set up his kingdom. Then, some of the things we read about him become understandable.

Growth must be for something! Of what good is a robust body if it is not to be used for something? We must grow in order that we may serve.

How much have you grown in the knowledge of him since he came into your life?

Summer Assembly Recreation

By HUGH THOMAS

This is a true story about recreation at the B. Y. P. U. summer assembly to be held at Asilomar, Calif., July 21-31, 1922.

Some people (who have never been to assembly) might think that eating is not properly classed as a recreation, hence the impelling picture gracing the front of the folder is to no purpose. But I am not so sure about that. Folks who have been there do say that it is very true to life, very true. They do say that eating at Asilomar is recreation, of the first order. Three times a day, they all seem to enjoy it so.

Even the rolling surf, even the famous Monterey sand, even the swimmin' at Del Monte, even the peppy hikes, even the quoits, even the tete-a-tete (whatever that is), even the maze, the baseball, the basket-ball, the tennis and late hours and the seventeen-mile drive and letters home and kodaking and night caps and—well, they all seem to arrive at dining-hall just about the right moment, regularly, and my, how they hate to do it.

Last year, for instance, Louie Denlis was punctual, prompt, on time and ever present for all meals.

Earl Raisner and Laurel Sweitzer left off base ballin' for the "soup to nuts." Harold Christensen, hiker, was hikeless at 7:30 a. m., 12 m. and 6 p. m.—always. Bernice Hight was all over the country, except at meal times. Baron McLean was never so serious as when the hot cakes were being passed. The only time Sam Swart was quiet at all was during the procession of "some more meat and—." The members of Faculty Table shone as the midday sun of summer, surrounded by savory slices of sheep, sweet scented salads, succulent segments of salmon or sole, salubrious stews and steaming soft spnds. (Shocking!)

I don't know but what eating is properly classed as recreation—at Asilomar.

Stewardship Special

If the Baptist denomination is to achieve great things for the future, the foundations must be laid now in a tithing and stewardship program that will reach all the people. We have the resources but our people must be brought to acknowledge their stewardship obligations. Mr. Benjamin Starr, of New York state, is doing a very fine piece of work along this line. We present below his suggestions for a Sunday stewardship campaign:

In our experience the following plan has been the most effective for a one-day, intensive, stewardship and tithing campaign;

First, the morning service. Abbreviate the opening period to give as nearly as possible a full hour for the address and the work of distributing the cards and getting signatures to the stewardship pledge.

Second, the Bible school. If possible arrange to give thirty or forty minutes with all but the smaller children for a discussion period. Here people will have an opportunity to ask questions or state their objections. In many churches this has been the most profitable service of the day.

Third, the Young People's meeting. Let the subject of stewardship take the place of the regular topic, with an appeal to the young people to acknowledge the Lordship of Christ by returning to him the tenth of all that he entrusts to them.

Fourth, the evening service. The closing address, showing the relation of stewardship to the spiritual life of the individual, and the spiritual power of the church.

At all services give an opportunity for any to sign the tithing cards who are ready to do so.

Fifth, an after meeting. Invite all who have signed the cards to remain for a few moments to take preliminary steps to form the tithers into a working league at once. Without such organization stewardship does not usually make any great progress in a church.

The more the pastor does beforehand to awaken interest and create the proper atmosphere the better will be the results. Such a campaign has often been the beginning of a work that has revolutionized the finances, and brought great spiritual blessing to the church. Two years after such a campaign, one pastor, who had been on his field several years, said "that day has meant more to this church than any other day of my pastorate."

Special

Send to B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, for a sample package of tithing literature.

What Our Young Folks Are Doing

The young people's session of the Chicago Baptist Association held June 1 at the First Church, Elgin, Ill., was a success. A special train carried about 300 enthusiastic "Oskies" to the meeting. The speaker, Rev. B. C. Clausen of the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y., was at his best. "The Strategy of Foch" made a lasting impression upon all who attended.

The Susanville, Calif., B. Y. P. U. has reported that it has changed its Old People's Society into a real Young People's Society. The older people have a study class and organization under the name of "Service Legion."

The Nevada-Sierra Baptist Young People's Convention met at Susanville, May 11-14. Not only did the convention elect Mr. Uel Travis as its president, but he is to attend the International B. Y. P. U. Convention as an official delegate.

The Marion County (Ind.) Federation of Baptist Young people held a great rally in Indianapolis on June 6. The main address of the evening was delivered by Rev. W. T. Dorward, of Milwaukee, on the theme "The Master Key."

The Parkersburg, W. Va. Association B. Y. P. U. is a "live wire." This association has a director of B. Y. P. U. work in addition to the regular officers. The young people are enthusiastic for the assembly and the encampment.

Cleveland Association B. Y. P. U. re-elected Perry Sherman, Jr., as president. Other officers are: Vice-presidents, C. J. Landane, Elizabeth Iverson, Lulu Davis, Louise Merkel, Elizabeth Fishell; secretary, Winifred Gilmore; treasurer, W. B. Jenkins; auditor, Oliver Freeman. Each vice-president has charge of one of the departments of work.

"The B. Y. P. U. Assembly" the official organ of the Miami Association (Ohio) of young people is one of the leading young people's bulletins published in the whole country. Will Schwemlein, 5337 Globe Avenue, Norwood, Ohio, graces the editorial chair.

"The University Baptist" reports the doings of the young folks at Ithaca, N. Y. John Fetter, university pastor is doing a wonderful work for our young folks at Cornell. The board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention should have our heartiest support in this effort to reach and hold Baptist young people in the great universities.

Oregon young people, under the leadership of Rev. G. H. Young, director of religious education, are making great plans for their summer assembly at Columbia City, July 28-Aug. 7.

General Secretary White addressed a great rally of St. Louis young people on Thursday evening, June 8 at Euclid Baptist Church. Earl Johnson, the retiring president has rendered great service to the young people and the churches of St. Louis and vicinity. Thank God for the many thousands of loyal young men and women in our churches today. So long as we can find such, this old world will not go to the "bow-wows."

President Carleton W. Atwater was the guest of Detroit young people on June 16. The steamer Britannia was chartered for the lake cruise and she was loaded from top to bottom with Detroiters. The proceeds of the "cruise" will be used in sending delegates to the big convention in St. Paul.

Ridgeview Park, Pa., Assembly will be held July 10-17. Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker, dean, announces an attractive program with such headliners as Wallace Petty, Drs. McKay, Evans, Matthews and others.

The annual picnic of the Cleveland Junior B. Y. P. U.'s was held Saturday afternoon, June 24. Baseball, games, races, oh boy!

"It needs to be written as plainly as if written across the heavens in living letters of fire, that the past standards of giving to missions by our Baptist people will be inexcusable and inadequate and unworthy for the future. We must advance, and advance greatly, and advance now, or we shall gravely sin in the face of the most strategic and commanding calls that have ever challenged our Baptist people, from the first Baptists till now." George W. Truett.

The Virginia Baptist Encampment will be held at Virginia Beach, July 6-16. Dr. George W. Truett, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Dallas, Texas, will be assembly preacher. Congratulations to the saints of the Old Dominion. Rev. H. E. Tralle of the American Baptist Publication Society will give a series of addresses.

From January 1, 1917 to January 1, 1922, "Layman" has distributed 91,058,000 pages of titling literature. From January 1 to March 1, 1922, the B. Y. P. U. of America ordered a total of 3,170,000 pages.

A friend of General Secretary White stated that he could not attend the Young People's session of the Northern Baptist Convention, held Sunday afternoon, June 18, but that he "listened in" on the service while visiting a relative. The service was broadcasted all over the United States and 300 miles out to sea. Pretty soon, the poorest of us will be worshipping in absentia.

Baptist girls of West Virginia will hold their encampment August 23-28 with Miss Luella E. Adams of New York City as their speaker.

Dr. R. M. West, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Lewisburg, Pa., will deliver a series of addresses on "Church Efficiency" before the summer assembly. West Virginians have a great meeting place on "the hilltop" at Broadus.

The Inland Empire Baptist Young People's Assembly will be held July 18-28 on Mica Bay, Coeur d'Alene Lake, Idaho.

State director T. H. Hagen will serve as dean. General Secretary White will give a series of lectures on young people's work.

The eighth annual convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America was held in Buffalo, N. Y., 1898, with a registration of 11,635. Just a little bit larger than the Milwaukee Convention of 1896 with a registration of 10,402. The days of the nineties were great convention days. So are the days of 1922.

General Secretary White will leave soon after the St. Paul Convention to fill assembly engagements on the Pacific Coast, East Washington and North Idaho; Oregon; West Washington and Northern California.

The number of church vacation schools continues to increase with each summer. Many young people are finding these schools an unusual opportunity to render a very large and effective service to the boys and girls of the community. Why not?

The Northern Baptist Convention has voted to put on a great stewardship campaign during the month of October, 1922. Of course, the young people will have a large share in this very necessary educational work. The time to begin preparation is now!

It is estimated that there are over 275,000 tithers in Baptist churches in the United States and Canada. Every possible effort must be made to enlist young and old in the stewardship of money.

"It Pays to Advertise!"

"It pays to advertise!" This is the slogan of the publicity department of the Tacoma District B. Y. P. U. Our district has seven departments of work—all organized to foster the district work and to help the local union.

At its first meeting the publicity department adopted the following seven point objective for the year's work—

1. Meetings at least quarterly.
2. Quarterly letters to
Y. P. Service
Young People
THE BAPTIST
The W. W. Messenger.
3. Advertise state assembly.
4. Advertise annual New Year's rally.
5. Have at least one open meeting.
6. A publicity committee in every local union.
7. Cooperate with district officers.

And we are going right after this objective! Already we have accomplished part of it! As we make the points, we check them off! Aim somewhere! You get somewhere!

Ever try this plan? It works! Try it!

"The B. Y. P. U. Bulletin" published by Pittsburgh young people carries the slogan, "Let's all attend church Sunday evenings. Back your pastor up." The young people have been putting considerable stress upon stewardship in recent months. President Cobner says: "Recognition of the stewardship principle means the salvation of our denominational program."

Religious Education

Grandfather's Sunday School

By HENRY EDWARD TRALLE

Grandfather's Sunday school may not have been a very good one, but it made possible our Sunday school. It laid the foundation of modern religious education in the local church.

Grandfather's Sunday school was the forerunner of the modern Sunday school, with its departments, its graded lessons, its classrooms, its educational apparatus, its week-day and church vacation school features.

As a matter of fact, grandfather's Sunday school was not at all bad for its day. It compared very favorably with the public school of the time. The public school also was ungraded and poorly equipped.

Indeed it may be seriously doubted whether the Sunday school of today is as good comparatively as was the Sunday school of grandfather's day. It has been said—and I think the statement has not been questioned—that the Sunday school of today is twenty-five years behind the public school of today.

Practically all of our public schools have classrooms. In none of them will you find seven or seventeen classes going at the same time in the same room. Probably nine-tenths of our Sunday-school teachers must compete with the needless distractions of near-by classes in the same room, and yet the pupils bring the same eyes and ears to the Sunday school that they take to the public school.

In practically all of our public-school classrooms there are blackboards, maps, pictures, libraries, desk-chairs, and other educational equipment, and these are not found in one Sunday-school classroom in ten. If any book needs these aids it is the Bible.

Probably there are no public schools that do not use graded lessons. More than half of our Sunday schools have no graded lessons at all, even in the elementary grades, and nearly all of them use the uniform lessons in some classes. And yet God has graded the Sunday-school child just as truly as he has graded the public school child.

All public school teachers have had some technical training. Not one Sunday-school teacher in ten has had technical training. If any subject needs to be well taught, needs skilful handling, needs the trained teacher, it is the Bible and the other materials of religious education.

There are very few public schools where all the pupils of all the grades and ages are brought together regularly in one general assembly, but this is done, and without shame in at least three-fourths of our Sunday schools.

"But," some will say, "the Sunday school has to do with religious education." Yes, and that is just the reason why it should be the best education in the world. It is the most important, and it should be the best. The Sunday school should have the benefit of the best in psychology and in pedagogy. It should have the best in equipment and in management.

Ought we not to do as well in our day as grandfather did in his day? May we not hope that the church will arouse itself to an appreciation of the importance of religious education, and that it will see to it that the Bible has at least an equal chance educationally along with algebra, English history, and Latin?

Evangelistic Activities of Redlands

These various activities consisted of evangelistic teams led by Harold Doty and Jesse Smith, Berlyn Stokely with the Y. M. C. A. of Sherman Institute, Louis Rankin superintending the Highlands Bible School and Gene Stuart with the Mentone Bible School. Fred Wight and Cecil Stewart conducted meetings at the Riverside church during a month this spring.

Mr. Doty had charge of meetings at San Bernardino, Orange, Colton and Highlands. The B. Y. P. U. as well as the evening services were taken charge of by this group. Those assisting Mr. Doty in this work were: Lois Cole, Thelma Stovall, Olive Gibson, Cecil Crowe, Wm. Olson and Leonard Stokely.

The places visited by Mr. Smith's team were Mentone, Highlands, Garden Grove, San Bernardino, Fullerton, Sherman Institute, Del Rosa Colton and Yucaipa. With Mr. Smith were the following, some going on one trip, others on more: Geo. Brown, Cecil Crowe, Raymond Stannard, Thorwald Jensen, David Sellards, Wardrip, Hooper, Leonard, Stokely, Cooper, Olson, Gromer Tugby, Stewart Taylor, Yokoi, Pettibone, Backund, Manning, Andrus, Dwight Smith, Clark, Strang, Verona Gibson, Vera VanLoan, Marion Boulette, Rozella Christianson, Marjorie Putman, Virginia Barrett, Ruth Beardsley, Thelma Stovall, Lois Cole, Elizabeth VanGuysling and Iris Haufpower.

Mr. Berlyn Stokely makes the following report: "Have spent every Saturday and Sunday at Sherman Institute since school opened last fall. We have a Senior Y. M. C. A. of ninety members, Sunday school class of eighty-five members, average attendance of eighty. Wednesday evening Junior Bible Class fifty boys, average attendance of forty-eight. Prayer circle for older boys Sunday afternoon. Five hikes conducted, groups as large as 100. Two encampments in the mountains. Nine of the older boys taken to the Hi Y Conference at Santa Barbara last fall. Two

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 23

DANIEL AND THE LIONS

Lesson: Daniel 6:1-28. Golden Text: Hebrews 11:33.

Setting

Though his own death so soon followed Daniel's interpretation of the handwriting on the wall, Belshazzar did not forget his promise to Daniel, but upon his revelation of the dream at once made him "third ruler in the kingdom." When Belshazzar was slain, Darius the Mede made Daniel one of the three royal ministers over the 120 satraps. Daniel was now an old man. His home was probably in Babylon.

Lesson

Because Daniel found favor with the king so that Darius contemplated setting him over the whole realm, the jealousy of his two companion ministers was aroused. They wished to set the king against him, but there was nothing in his past that they could hold against him, nor in his present life unless he could be trapped into doing something contrary to the king's mandate. To this they resorted, asking the king to pass a law that for thirty days no one should make a petition either of any god or man save the king alone, and whosoever should violate this decree should be cast to the lions. The unsuspecting king "signed the writing and the interdict" and the law of the Medes and Persians "altereth not." The mandate influenced Daniel not a whit. With his windows "open toward Jerusalem" three times a day he prayed and gave thanks, and who would might know it. The tricksters were on the watch and at once reported Daniel's violation of royal law to the king. Reluctantly, but because the written word of a Mede had gone forth, the king commanded that Daniel be cast into the den of lions. And to Daniel he said, "Thy God whom thou dost serve continually, he will deliver thee." What faith for Daniel he had in the God Daniel served! A stone was laid against the mouth of the den and it was sealed with the king's own signet. The king passed a sleepless night fasting. The next morning he went early to the lions' den and cried while yet far off: "Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?" Daniel's reply came: "My God hath sent his angel and hath shut the lions' mouths and they have not hurt me."

Thoughts

1. Courage, faith and innocence are too much for any of the lions of life. 2. Jealousy is always a boomerang—the sufferer from it hurts only himself. 3. A brave man has little fear for his life; a clear conscience is his chief concern.

Our Own Folks

What the New World Movement Has Done for the Baptists of Wisconsin

By ROBERT W. SHAW

In a recent communication the Wisconsin correspondent for THE BAPTIST stated that one of the tests of the success of the New World Movement was the effect which it had produced upon the churches which had cooperated in it. This article is written to give a survey of what this great movement of Baptists has done for Wisconsin.

After the Denver Convention, the Wisconsin Baptists shared in the general denomination enthusiasm and conviction that now the Northern Baptist Convention was about to do something to demonstrate to the world that the Baptists were no longer a despised sect nor an enfeebled people, but a great denomination facing heartily a great world task. They entered into the making of surveys and budgets, and began the laying of plans for cooperation with a genuine enthusiasm. After the shock which came with the announcement of the quotas, most of the pastors and churches settled down to the conviction that they would do their best in this piece of cooperative work.

Our Baptist population and churches are not so numerous in Wisconsin as in some other states but for genuine consecration and heroism they are not to be excelled anywhere. A large number of the churches went into the campaign determined to raise their quotas. There was one little country church of sixteen members, eight of whom were non-resident. They over-subscribed their quota. On the other hand, there was a large and prominent city church, which also over-subscribed its quota. And between these two extremes eighty-three churches out of 181 Baptist churches in Wisconsin went into the campaign and increased their giving many fold. Twenty-two of these churches reached or exceeded their quotas.

Of course there was the same opposition to the movement in Wisconsin which manifested itself in other states, but as the months passed this opposition has steadily decreased until with the closing of the fiscal year April 30 this year it was discovered that 176 churches out of 185 had made some contributions to the denominational work. And today its success is apparent to every one who will give any consideration of its results.

The Results

There has been much gain to the local churches. During the autumn months following the campaign a strange new spirit began to manifest itself among most of the churches which had entered into the movement, and when the Easter period came around there was the largest ingathering by baptism in years. For 1919 the baptisms were 711. For seven months in 1920 they were 736. For 1921 they were 1,106. They will be correspondingly large for 1922.

And strange to say, instead of bankrupting the churches as some thought the financial campaign would do, it only helped the churches to see how little they had been doing for the work of the kingdom. Since that time salaries have been increased, new buildings have been erected, material improvements have been made, and our churches have had a material and spiritual prosperity which they have not known in years. The benefit to the associations was very large also. The story of this increase to the Walworth Association has been told in the columns of the press several times, and does not need to be repeated here.

One of the outstanding advances was made in the city of Milwaukee. For a number of years this city has tried to gain a city mission consciousness. The spirit was willing, but the money was lacking. It was a painful experience to try to stretch $500 over $5,000 worth of need. On every hand there were opportunities, but how to finance the work was a problem. With the campaign out of the way our leading workers began to demand that our city work be undertaken in some adequate way. A plan of cooperation was agreed upon, and today we have a first-class work, and one of which none of us is ashamed.

Today we are incorporated and have a departmentalized organization of work, with an operating budget of approximately $10,000. We are now supporting five workers, including a city missionary, and are planning to reach out and do a constructive work in this great city of half a million people.

When the New World Movement was inaugurated our state convention was facing a deficit of upward of $25,000. Twice before it put aside its own plans for caring for this deficit in the interests of the larger denominational movements. This was in the interests of the Million Dollar Campaign and the Victory Drive. Again we were asked to set aside our plans in the interests of the larger campaign, and again we did it.

Prior to the New World Movement the operating budget for the state convention was approximately $18,000. In 1919 for the first time in many years the treasurer reported the year closed without a deficit. That was a wonder of wonders for Wisconsin Baptists. The convention rose and sang the doxology.

For the five years prior to the New World Movement the Wisconsin Baptists averaged about $36,000 per year in collections for state work and the national societies, but the reports for the past two years show an average of $115,500 for the same objects.

In addition to raising this amount of money we have cleared away our indebtedness and strengthened our work at Wayland Academy, besides making a beginning with the Wayland Foundation at the State University where we now have some good lots and a suitable building to house our student work.

Five years ago we were compelled in the interests of economy to retrench in our field work, but today we have besides our state superintendent of missions, a religious educational director, three field workers, a business manager, an office secretary, and two stenographers. In addition to this we have one worker who gives part of his time to the cities of over 25,000 outside the city of Milwaukee. We are paying larger salaries to our missionary pastors, and in every way our work is commensurate with the advance made in financial ways.

A New Spirit

Of course Wisconsin Baptists have had their difficulties the same as other states have had. Most of us have been restless at times, and all of us have been impatient when we did not see at once the results that had been promised.

But Wisconsin Baptists have tried to live together as brothers and to respect one another's views in doctrine and polity. As a result of this at our last state convention meeting Wisconsin Baptists came quite close together, and today the knocker must keep his hammer covered, though constructive criticism is welcomed by every one.

In Wisconsin we are brethren and believe that we belong to a great brotherhood. We have our divergent views, but we have confidence in each other's purposes and integrity and seek to work together to advance the Master's kingdom.

Wisconsin Baptists are compelled to believe that the New World Movement is a success.

Awards of Successful Essay Contest

By WILLIAM J. SLY

Early in the year 1922 the New American's Division of the Educational Department of the Publication Society opened an interesting essay contest. Its purpose was to encourage young people of foreign-birth or parentage in our Baptist Sunday schools throughout the land to turn their thoughts to a higher Christian education. This contest was opened to those between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one who wished to submit an essay of 1500 words in English. The subject was "The Value of a Higher Christian Education to Foreign Language Young People in the United States." Awards of $100, $50, and $25 were to be presented for the best three essays respectively, judged on the basis of argument, expression, illustration and age of the writer; the money to apply on a scholarship in some educational institution. Dr. and Mrs. Augustus H. Strong, just before his lamented death, sent a check for $175 for these awards with their wishes for the success of this contest. The judges appointed were Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, secretary American Baptist Publication Society; Dr. C. A. Brooks, superintendent of foreign work of the Home Mission Society and Dr. F. L. Anderson, president of the International Seminary of East Orange, N. J.

The contest registrations were 268 persons, representing fourteen states, fifty-three foreign-language churches and sixteen nationalities as follows: Italian (129), Hungarian (69), Slovak (15), Spanish (12), Roumanian (9), Lettish (6),

Finnish (6), Swedish-Finnish (6), Czech (5), Poles (3), Russian (2), Estonian (1), French (1), Swedish (1), Danish (1), Mexican (2). The number of essays submitted were fifty-four, representing fourteen states, thirty-eight churches, and thirteen foreign-language groups. Many of the essays were of such high grade that it was difficult for the three judges to decide. The separate vote from each judge, however, resulted as follows:

The first prize of $100 was awarded to Anna Overfors, Swedish-Finnish Sunday School, Negaunee, Mich., age 19; essay 1600 words. The second prize of $50 was awarded to Fred J. Cech, First Bohemian, Chicago, age 19; essay 1800 words. The third prize of $25 was awarded to Bella M. Luhks, Lettish, Philadelphia, age 19, 1800 words.

Those who received honorable mention were: John A. Scipione, Italian, Camden, N. J., age 17; 1900 words; Pauline E. Bednar, Slovak, Philadelphia, age 19; 1900 words; John Ogria, Italian, Bridgeport, Conn., age 17; 2270 words; Julia Bene, First Maggar, Cleveland, age 15; 1760 words.

Among the first seven it will be seen that these different nationalities were represented: Swedish-Finnish (1), Bohemian (1), Lettish (1), Italian (2), Slovak (1), Hungarian (1). Six states were represented—Michigan (1), Illinois (1), Pennsylvania (2), New Jersey (1), Ohio (1), Connecticut (1). Among the winners were four girls and three boys. Efforts will be made to follow up these contests by professors of the respective groups in the International Seminary, who will have a list of those registered, those submitting essays, and those who were the successful contestants. All who registered have been communicated with and words of encouragement given. The first seven essays will be printed in Our Young People in full, together with a picture of the writer and a short story of his life. Our foreign-language Sunday schools and others should order extra supplies of these numbers of Our Young People from the society so that all the young people may see these excellent essays on this important subject. In this way the good work may spread and many more young people in all the groups may be encouraged to seek a higher education for useful leadership in Christ's great cause in the world.

Religious Education in Northern California

Eighteen men and women—tried and true—will make up the faculty of the Summer Assembly of Baptists to be held at Asilomar, July 21-31, 1922. This is the official assembly for the Baptists of Northern California and Nevada, held under the auspices of the Northern California Baptist Young People's Union.

Faculty members and special speakers for this ten-day gathering include President M. L. Askin, of Tulare; Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, general secretary of the Publication Society, Philadelphia; Dr. C. W. Brinstad, executive secretary of the Northern California Baptist Convention of San Francisco; Mrs. A. Watson Brown, Sunday-school expert from Sacramento; Mrs. Sallie Burgess of San Francisco, state superintendent of Junior B. Y. P. U. work; Rev. Henry W. Davis, student pastor at the University of California for the Baptist denomination; Miss Helen E. Hobart, special field worker for the Women's Mission Society; William E. Lippard of New York City, representing the ship of fellowship; Miss Myrtle M. Love, Sunday-school "doctor" of the Publication Society, Philadelphia; Mrs. Carrie A. Robinson, San Francisco, just returned from an extensive visit to Baptist missions in China and Japan; Rev. Ralph N. Rowe, California pastor who will direct the music of the assembly; Dr. Charles R. Shepherd, director of Oriental work for the Pacific Coast. Dr. John Snape, president of the Northern California Convention and pastor of First Church of Oakland; Hugh W. Thomas, director of young people's work, Oakland First Church; Dr. Millard L. Thomas, director of religious education for Northern California and Nevada, and dean of the assembly; Uel J. Travis, president of the Nevada B. Y. P. U.; Dr. James Asa White of Chicago, general secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of America, and Rev. Arthur J. Willey, superintendent of evangelism for the Northern California Convention.

Assembly classes will be held each of the ten days, except Sundays, from 9 o'clock a. m. until 12:30. Popular platform and beach programs are scheduled for the evenings of the assembly as follows: Friday night, July 21, California-Nevada "Get-together-frolic"; Saturday night, at present open; Monday night beach bonfire and associational stunt night (always a wallop); Tuesday night, reports from the St. Paul Convention of B. Y. P. U. of A. by presidents Askin and Travis; Wednesday night inspirational convocation of the assembly; Thursday night illustrated report of the famous "ship of fellowship"; Friday night, assembly musical festival under the direction of Rev. Ralph N. Rowe; Saturday night, the "kick" of the assembly, the glorious, rollicking, climactic annual banquet.

The fast moving fun and recreation of the assembly will be in charge of Laurel Sweitzer of the "Vallejo Booster" with Vic Bowen of Santa Rosa and Tommy Thomas of Oakland pushing from behind.

Saturday, July 29, the annual convention session will be held at which time reports will be made covering the work of the past year on membership, finances, stewardship, evangelism and visitation. At this session the policy for 1922-23 will be announced and discussed, and officers for the new years will be elected by the convention.

The Baptist summer assembly for this year starts a new three years' course which will cover courses known to all Baptists including the mission study class, the school of missions, missions in the Sunday school, missions in the B. Y. P. U., teacher training courses, organized class methods, church vacation school methods, the week-day church school, the Sunday school, the young people's society, the church school of religious education, correlation of educational and social activities in a church, stewardship, intensive training schools, convention and associational rallies and programs, the trained leaders' course, volunteers for missions and the ministry and study by correspondence. The three years' course, therefore, makes possible a complete survey of all educational projects of our large denominational program for young people, in every department of the church's activity.

Another group meeting with the assembly will be the California-Nevada Volunteers, now numbering over fifty young people of these two convention fields who have declared their decision to enter definite Christian life work. Miss Agnes Dowdy, of Modesto, is the president of this group. The California-Nevada Volunteers was organized at the Asilomar Assembly last year, with a charter membership of twenty. Others have been added during the year as a result of special effort in this direction by the state B. Y. P. U. Plans will be discussed at the assembly this year looking toward an endowment fund of $10,000 to be held in trust and to be used to assist in the education of members of the California-Nevada Volunteers.

Altogether it looks like a very large year for the young Baptists of Northern California and Nevada. Dean Thomas and his committee have accomplished a significant educational program for the assembly of this year and gathered instructors and special speakers of sufficient calibre to assure a ten-day period of wholesome, constructive value to growing Christians.

Post Chapel at Ft. Leavenworth

The Post chapel at Fort Leavenworth is sometimes referred to as "The Little Westminster Abbey of the Middle West." Its interior furnishings include about half a hundred memorial tablets erected to officers and soldiers who have laid down their lives for their country, the majority of whom were killed "by hostile Indians" in the days of the country's settlement. There are also many battle-scarred flags and regimental colors which have found a permanent home in the chapel. Perhaps the most unique of all the furnishings are half a dozen howitzer cannon of brass which are imbedded into the walls. These are obsolete American ordinance of the Civil War, and were placed in the chapel for safe keeping. The beautiful stained-glass windows of gothic design and the altar with brass railings, lectern, cathedral candelabra and other furnishings give to all a beauty scarcely found elsewhere in the entire country.

Largely through the efforts of Chaplain Frank C. Rideout, who entered the Chaplaincy service during the war and was detailed to Fort Leavenworth shortly after his return from France, a new pipe organ has recently been installed. It is a two-manual, electro pneumatic instrument of the latest design, manufactured by the Reuter Organ Company of Lawrence, Kansas, and cost in the neighborhood of $5,000. The money has been raised among the families of the 500 officers now stationed at Fort Leavenworth, most of whom are on duty as instructors or student-officers at the general service schools of the U. S. Army which is located at that station.

Dr. J. Q. A. Henry—World Evangelist

By J. W. WEDDELL

John Quincy Adams Henry's work as pastor, temperance advocate and world evangelist, a truly remarkable work, is ended. We were very close together. He was my classmate in the Seminary at Morgan Park in 1880 and subsequently my brother-in-law, when he carried away into his western pastorate on the Pacific Coast our Margaret, a rare and radiant spirit, loaned to us for a while from the skies. She preceded him into the glory, and now, finishing his varied ministry, at Missahicken in Philadelphia, his body has been taken by kind hands to rest with hers in God's acre at Los Angeles—till he come.

I shall not forget when Brother Henry came upon our vision at Morgan Park, fresh from a deep spiritual experience that wrenched him from old associates and denominational connections and joined him with the new circle of faith called Baptist. He was a man of intense conviction and of as intense utterance from the start.

He was ordained as student pastor at Forty-seventh Street, Chicago. I think I was clerk of the council. Then he was off to Sacramento, San Francisco, Portland, Chicago, Denver, which in succession he served in the high tide of spiritual power. At San Francisco he fought valiantly with the wild beasts of a papal Ephesus, and later, called to do battle for temperance in New York and afterward over all England, he won such trophies for the cause of total abstinence as were counted well nigh unprecedented. Evangelism summoned him to a broader work for souls, and in England, Australia and New Zealand, he appealed to thousands who responded in large numbers to his burning messages, a campaign which Drs. Torrey and Chapman, co-workers in the same domain of evangelism, declared to be of phenomenal efficiency. Of late years, owing to difficulty of hearing and other infirmities, Dr. Henry has confined himself to assisting his brethren in local church evangelism, and, true to the old gospel which he preached, he has left the churches served, established and strong in the evangelistic faith.

In recent years he married Miss Levering of Roxboro.

He was the youngest man in his class at Morgan Park, but there was one man younger there, his teacher and mine, whom we loved, the man who came with that class to assume the chair of Hebrew at Morgan Park, Dr. W. R. Harper. Great days those of our quiet suburban retreat with Northrop, Morgan, Boise, Justin A. Smith, Cheney, and others.

Our lifetime friend, Dr. John Gordon of Philadelphia, conducted Dr. Henry's funeral services, with the aid of Dr. John Haines, Dr. Miner, Dr. Robt. McGowan, his son-in-law, and others. He sleeps until the sun-rising.

At the National Capital

By M. W. MILLER

At the last meeting of the Baptist pastors a resolution was adopted requesting the executive committee to extend an invitation to the Northern Baptist Convention, to hold its next meeting in Washington. One reason for this action was the assurance by those in charge of the erection of the new city auditorium, that it is expected the building will be ready for use by the first of May next. This will be one of the finest auditoriums in the country, and will be especially adapted for the holding of large conventions.

Most of our churches held Children's Day exercises June 11, and notwithstanding the extreme heat on that particular day the attendance was large and the programs rendered above the average, if that given in the church your correspondent attended was a fair sample.

At Bethany Pastor Stevenson is making large plans for holding a daily vacation Bible school this summer. The church is well located for such a work, being surrounded by a large population, with a multitude of boys and girls. The expenses have already been guaranteed, and Pastor Stevenson is looking for good results from the effort. At a special business meeting held June 8, the church voted directing the trustees to purchase a three-manual pipe organ that was being offered for sale here in the city. Parts of the present small organ will be used in the rebuilding of the new one. An addition to the present church building to care for the growing needs of the Bible school is a prospect of the near future with this progressive and wide-awake church and pastor. The church and pastor are finding cause for rejoicing in baptism nearly every Lord's Day.

churches, Rev. E. O. Sebolt has resigned to become pastor at Charleston and Cherry Flats.

THE CHURCH AT GLENSIDE has called Rev. Percy E. Wilmot, of the First Church, Passaic, N. J. He has accepted and expects to begin work on the new field October 1.

THE WATSONTOWN CHURCH, Rev. W. H. Savage, pastor, sets an example for other churches in that it has had its fire insurance increased to the required 80 per cent of its value.

H. H. McELROY was ORDAINED by the Center Union Church at Huntington May 25. Dr. H. F. King of Tyrone was moderator and H. K. Bower, clerk.

EDWARD CAPEN DUNBAR of the graduating class of Newton was ordained by the First Church of Littleton, June 15. Rev. E. B. Dolan was moderator and Rev. A. G. Warner of Fitchburg, clerk. Prof. Woodman Bradbury, of Newton, preached the ordination sermon. Mr. Dunbar, who served as acting pastor at Littleton while in the seminary, has accepted a call to the First Church, Norwich, Conn.

REV. MAURICE A. LEVY HAS COMPLETED three years with the First Church, Pittsfield. This period has been notable in the church's history, culminating in the year just closed. Last spring when the pastor's services were desired outside the state the church met the crisis by pledging $150,000 payable in five years for a long-needed new meeting house. This, with the sale of the present site, would afford $300,000 for the new building in a convenient location. No pastor could resist such an appeal and Pastor Levy remained in New England. The fall witnessed a united gospel crusade which manifestly quickened the spiritual life of the city. Associate Pastor, Rev. Harold F. Stoddard, who came from Colgate, entered upon his work in September and was ordained on February 22, 1922, the sermon being preached by Dean J. F. Vichert. In May the Woman's Missionary Society observed its fiftieth anniversary with fitting exercises which came to a climax in a pageant, composed by Mrs. Levy, which enlisted 125 people in costume with probator, processional, march of the decades, spirit of missions and missionary local scenes against a background of achievements on home and foreign field, concluding with "The World's Children"—the whole symbolizing "Out of the Night—Into the Light" and concluding with the impressive and beautiful recessional with its triumphant "amen." Sixty-one have been baptized during the year. The church is now anticipating the celebration of its one hundred fiftieth anniversary in October.

TAKOMA PARK CHURCH, Washington, has lately completed the erection of a parsonage. Work was begun on March 15, and on June 15, the pastor, Rev. William E. La Rue, and family moved in. The building is located at 6811 Piney Branch Road. It cost nearly $10,000 in addition to the lot. A "house-warming" party was held on the evening of June 23, and a great

THE FIRST CHURCH OF BUFFALO is making preparation to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary in October. Mr. Volney P. Kinne, who has been a great factor in the work of this historic church, is the chairman of the anniversary committee. The mortgage on the church property has been reduced the past two years from $26,000 to $12,500. The pastor, Rev. Samuel Russell, has recently been honored by the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary with the Doctor of Divinity degree. Dr. Russell has been eminently successful in his ministry at the First Church and has the whole hearted cooperation of the entire membership.

REV. A. FRANK HOUSER begins his work as pastor of the First Church, Olean, July 1. His former pastorate was with Calvary Church, Davenport, Iowa.

MRS. KERR CREAMY passed away at her home, the Baptist parsonage in Alabama, on April 18. The neighboring ministers acted as pall-bearers in her home town and Rev. H. C. Hayward, of Shelby, preached the funeral sermon from the text, "She hath done what she could." Interment was at Thornbury. Mrs. Creamy leaves to mourn her loss her husband, mother, three brothers and three sisters.

BETHANY CHURCH, SCRANTON, Rev. W. G. Watkins, pastor, has taken advantage of the miners' strike and shopmen's suspension and engaged a force of its own men to make improvements in the church property. The Lee Park Church, Wilkes Barre, adopted the same plan to get the cellar dug and foundation started for its new building.

REV. HAROLD D. GERMER, who graduated from Crozer this year is continuing work on the Lykens and Wiconisco fields. A parsonage is being built at Lykens. The suspension of the mines enabled the men of the church to devote much time to working on the new building so that hundreds of dollars worth of labor has been contributed in this way.

REV. ELMER E. DRESSER has received a unanimous call to the Luzerne Avenue Church, Pittston, and begins his pastorate July 9.

ON A RECENT WEDNESDAY NIGHT the First Baptist Sunday School of St. Paul celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary. In 1847 Harriet E. Bishop, a young woman from Vermont, opened the first school in the Northwest. Out of this humble beginning in a log cabin the great public school system of this city sprang. The Bible school accompanied the day school, and out of the Bible school came the First Baptist Church of St. Paul, the first Protestant church in all the Northwest. The church was organized in 1849 but the Bible school was started in 1847. One of the unique features of the celebration was a birthday cake made in the form of a pulpit Bible twenty-eight inches long, fourteen inches wide and four inches thick and weighing seventy-five pounds, and presented to the Bible school by the dining-car department of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. The cake was cut by the sole surviving member of the first Sunday school, Mrs. E. D. K. Randall. More than 300 guests partook of the cake.

IOWA

SUNDAY, JUNE 25, WAS A DAY of rejoicing for First Church of Manchester, Rev. Charles G. Wright, pastor. The occasion was the reopening services after many weeks in which the work of remodeling and repairing had been going on. Inspiring services were held morning, afternoon and evening. The music led by a large chorus was an enjoyable feature of the day. Dr. G. P. Mitchell, director of state missions of the Iowa State Convention of Des Moines was the preacher morning and evening and gave timely and important messages. In the afternoon addresses were given by pastors of neighboring churches of the city and congratulatory messages were read from many friends in other places. The changes made in the building provide a modern equipment and the newly decorated interior presents an attractive and beautiful appearance. The church is blessed with fine substantial people. The equipment now secured will greatly enlarge its usefulness. Since this pastorate began last February the work has been moving rapidly forward and pastor and people look hopefully to the future for fruitful results.

ILLINOIS

THERE HAVE BEEN 125 additions to the church at Winchester in a little more than a year. The attendance at the various services shows an increase of over 100 per cent. Rev. W. R. Johnson is pastor.

MICHIGAN

CALVARY CHURCH, HARBOR BEACH, E. Shepard Bramble, pastor. Sunday, June 25, marked the passing of the first year of the present pastorate. Church attendance has increased from an average of thirty-five to more than 500 each Sunday; Sunday school has doubled in attendance; from a membership of twenty-five the B. Y. P. U. has grown to 231 active and associate members. Twenty-five have been taken into fellowship of the church. A Brotherhood has been organized and there are sixty-six active men enrolled. All bills are paid in full; and in this time the church edifice has been completely rebuilt, but now it is far too small to accommodate the crowds. The church is now entering into a two weeks' series of meetings with Gypsy Simon Smith.

REV. T. H. CAREY, who recently closed a three-year pastorate at Otsego, is making his home in Kalamazoo. Mr. Carey rendered good service at Otsego and is ready to do supply work as opportunity offers.

REV. GEORGE E. WOOLCOCK has closed a long and fruitful pastorate at Ovid and has begun his work as the pastor of the church in Traverse City. While in Ovid, Mr. Woolcock maintained one of the best lists of subscribers to THE BAPTIST in proportion to the membership of his church of any church in the state. Good things will be reported in the near future at Traverse City.

MR. NORMAN F. DOUTY was ordained at the South Church, Lansing, June 5. Rev. George M. Bercoe of Flint was moderator and Rev. H. J. Hamilton Laingsburg was clerk. The ordination sermon was by Prof. Jacob Heinrichs of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary. Mr. Douty has accepted a call to the First Church, Gilman, Ill.

REV. H. P. HOSKINS, of New York, former pastor in that city and during the past season engaged in evangelistic work is acting as stated supply for the church at Portland until October 1.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE WASHINGTON NORWEGIAN-DANISH Baptist Conference met with the Nor-Dane Baptist Church of Seattle, June 15-18. Rev. A. M. Mehus of Bellingham, president, presided. The entertaining church provided royal hospitality. All the churches in the conference were represented. The attendance was excellent. The reports showed a splendid year's work and an encouraging outlook. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. O. M. Jorgensen, of Tacoma. Addresses, sermons and Bible studies were given by Rev. A. M. Mehus, of Bellingham; Rev. Erling Monnes, Seattle; Rev. and Mrs. T. O. Wold, general workers; Rev. O. M. Jorgensen, Tacoma; Rev. C. Larsen, Everett; and Dr. G. F. Holt, representing the Western Washington Convention. The following officers were elected for the coming year: Pres. Rev. A. M. Mehus; vice-pres., Rev. Erling Monnes; sec., Rev. T. O. Wold; asst. secy., Rev. O. M. Jorgensen; treas., L. M. Forland, Seattle. Mission committee: A. M. Mehus, Erling Monnes, O. M. Jorgensen, H. V. Christensen, L. M. Forland, A. J. Wallacker, H. Pederson and S. Carlson. Rev. E. Monnes was elected to represent the conference on the Western Washington Convention Board. The next meeting of the conference will be held in Bellingham, June, 1923, annual sermon to be preached by Mr. Monnes.

QUARTERLY RALLY OF SEATTLE DISTRICT B. Y. P. U. was held at Bremerton Friday evening, June 16. Over 600 young people were on the special boat that went over from Seattle. There were 60 from Charleston and a large number of the Bremerton people. The rally was held in a theater building that was crowded with young people, and many of the Bremerton people were turned away. The address was delivered by Dr. Gabriel R. Maguire, of Vancouver, B. C. This was considered one of the best rallies ever held by the Seattle District.

DR. C. A. COOK, who has been acting pastor of the West Side Church, Seattle, has accepted a unanimous call to become pastor. Under his leadership during the past year, the church has made gratifying progress in members, benevolences and all departments of activity.

REV. FRANK B. MATTHEWS, pastor of University Church, Seattle, was the Baptist representative at the College Boys' Conference held in Seabeck, June 16-26.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

AT AUBERRY JUNE 9-11 was held the annual meeting of the Indian Baptist Church of that section of California. Owing to the fact that a great many of the Indians are employed at permanent work, the attendance was not so large as in previous years. Rev. J. G. Brendel and his collaborators—Misses Swenson, Strange and Boynton—had the direction of the conference. Those who have read the story of Alfred Lord in "Old Trails and New" will be interested to know that he is still in the work at Nipinnivassie. The local missionaries were assisted by Mrs. R. D. Licklider of Powis Memorial Church, Fresno, Rev. V. H. Cowser of Clovis and Rev. E. E. Dudley of the Publication Society. The Wright Bill was explained to the Indians by Rev. Mr. Clark of Clovis who spoke through an interpreter. The changes wrought in the lives of these Indians is a monument to the consecrated and thorough work of our missionaries. The simple testimonies of these people impress one with the genuine character of their faith.

THE FOWLER CHURCH is showing its appreciation of the work of Rev. E. C. Sloan. On a recent Sunday morning one of the officers handed the pastor the key to a new Dodge touring car provided by the congregation. In addition to the above generosity the church has also made it possible for the pastor to become a beneficiary of the M. and M. Fund.

AT FRESNO THE POWIS MEMORIAL Church is represented in the City Church Baseball League by a team of players that stands well to the top and is a strong contestant for pennant honors.

CLOVIS CHURCH IS GRANTING ITS PASTOR, Rev. Vernon H. Cowser, a two-months' vacation. Mr. and Mrs. Cowser will visit old friends in the South and East.

DR. J. N. LACKEY OF HARTFORD, Conn., is supplying the First Church of Fresno at the invitation of the pulpit committee. Dr. Lackey comes highly recommended and if located with the Fresno Church will be a valuable accession to the splendid corps of workers in the San Joaquin Valley.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

EAST SAN DIEGO CHURCH, Rev. J. D. Page, pastor, called a council of delegates from the Southwestern Association to consider the propriety of ordaining Mr. B. Henry Blanchard to the gospel ministry. The council met June 22. Rev. L. P. Valentine, pastor of Scott Memorial Church, was chosen moderator, and Rev. Rolla E. Brown, pastor of Ocean Beach Church, was chosen clerk. Six churches were represented, and seventeen delegates were present. The candidate gave a clear statement of his Christian experience, his call to the ministry, and Bible doctrine. It was voted as being entirely satisfactory to the council and the church was advised to proceed with the ordination. The ordination services were held the same evening. Among those who participated in the council besides those already mentioned were Rev. R. B. Whaley, pastor of the church at La Mesa; and Rev. F. O. Belden, pastor, and Deacon A. Ray Palmer, of the First church of San Diego. Mr. Blanchar was born in Wisconsin, educated in the public schools of that state, in the university at Madison, and at the Bible school at Los Angeles. For a few months past he has been serving the church at Julian, and will now become its permanent pastor.

THE CHURCH IN VAN NUYS, Los Angeles. F. Nelson Baker, pastor, closed a series of special meetings of two weeks' duration on May 16. The pastor was assisted by Rev. J. G. Carmichael, pastor of the Jefferson Street Church, Los Angeles, and Mr. A. L. Miller, harpist and soloist, also of Los Angeles. Twelve have been baptized and six others await the ordinance. Twenty-four came forward at the last service and dedicated their lives for definite service on any field to which they may be called.

answered their country's call. Following the dedication of the stand, the class of 1892 presented to the college with appropriate exercises a towering flagstaff and a handsome flag.

Wednesday morning the academic procession formed in front of Memorial Hall and proceeded to the City Hall, where the commencement exercises were held. Addresses were delivered by three members of the graduating class and by Prof. Nathaniel Butler, Jr., '73, of the University of Chicago. Doctor Butler's theme was "Education and the Time Spirit." It was a scholarly presentation of present educational problems. Eighty young men and women received the Bachelor's Degree, and one graduate of the college received the degree of Master of Arts upon examination. Honorary degrees were conferred as follows: Master of Arts, upon John Francis Sprague, editor of The Journal of Maine History; Doctor of Letters, upon William Smith Knowlton, of the class of 1864, teacher and author; Doctor of Divinity, upon Prof. James P. Berkeley, of the Newton Theological Institution, and Rev. Robert L. Webb, of Boston; Doctor of Laws, upon Edward Howard Griggs, of

New York, teacher, author and lecturer.

The alumni and alumnae lunches on Tuesday, and the commencement dinner on Wednesday, were large and enthusiastic gatherings. One visitor remarked that they seemed more like big family reunions than any similar gatherings which he had attended, and the comparison was a just one. For the Colby men and women are one big family where all distinctions are forgotten and the spirit of devotion to a common mother pervades the entire college body.

Linfield College

By WILLIAM R. FRERICHS

LINFIELD COLLEGE closed its sixty-fourth year with the graduating exercises on June 4. The services were especially pleasing in view of several outstanding events during the academic year. The magnificent gift of Mrs. F. E. R. Linfield, consisting of property worth a quarter of a million dollars; the change of the name of the college to honor the memory of Mrs. Linfield's husband, and the payment of the last debt with the impressive ceremony of the mortgage burning on March 17, were all fresh in the minds of the people interested and created an enthusiasm which was prevalent throughout commencement week. Likewise the fact that upon a recent examination by Dr. G. F. Zook of the U. S. Bureau of Education the institution was again classed as standard added further confidence in our Baptist college of the Northwest. Perhaps no commencement in the past forecast a brighter future than the one of 1922.

Several exercises of the week were of unusual interest because through them came a spontaneous expression of the spirit permeating the institution. It is the spirit of devotion on the part of all to the college and the spirit of loyalty to Him in whose name Linfield College functions. The latter attitude was plainly revealed when on the evening of Thursday the "farewell prayer meeting" was held in the Baptist church. This is a meeting always looked forward to by college and church alike. The subject announced for the evening was "Reason, Rationalism and Religion." Whatever thoughts this alliteration may have suggested, the young men and women, and especially the seniors, spoke in no uncertain tones of the spiritual uplift received during their college career and of the vision of service which they had caught in the spiritual atmosphere of their alma mater. Perhaps we cannot illustrate in any better way the Christian ideals with which our graduates go out into the world of service than by quoting a paragraph from the oration of the valedictorian of the class, who discussed the present problems of education: "True service cannot be rendered until Christ is recognized as the leader and guide of our educational program. He is the crown and consummation of all. It is only through him that education can play its rightful part in the world's drama." As long as Linfield College sends out as its product men and women with such ideals to guide them the trustees and faculty need not feel anxious in regard to the service they are rendering for the kingdom.

The appreciation of their alma mater and its past was manifested by the graduating class in the gift of a granite memorial stone on the campus, the inscription upon which is indicative of its purpose: "This stone marks the spot where the board of trustees met August 2, 1881, and took action which resulted in moving (McMinnville) Linfield College from 5th and C streets to its present location actuated by the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cozine. Presented by the Class of 1922." The entire student body and faculty were present at the unveiling of the stone. The impressiveness of the ceremony was enhanced by the presence of Doctor A. J. Hunsaker, who is the only living member of the committee through whom the action mentioned on the stone was consummated. The story of the transaction as recalled by Dr. Hunsaker was greatly appreciated by all who had the privilege of witnessing the ceremony.

The graduating class numbers twenty-eight, the largest which has ever left Linfield College. In presenting the diplomas President Riley urged the young men and women in entering upon their life's work to remember three things; namely, to identify themselves at once with Christian work in the communities to which they were going; to have a conscious fellowship with God, and to be always willing to do more than they are paid for.

In addition to the degrees conferred upon the members of the class Doctor Riley announced that the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity had been given by the board of trustees to Doctor Kenneth Scott Latourette, and the degree of Doctor of Laws to President Clark W. Chamberlain of Denison University. Dr. Latourette is a graduate of Linfield College and is the first one whom his alma mater has recognized in this manner.

Our account would not be complete without mention of the excellent messages delivered by invited speakers at the commencement festivities. Rev. J. C. Austin, the newly elected field secretary of the college, spoke to the young men and women who finished the courses of the preparatory department. Rev. A. F. Colver, Mrs. Linfield's pastor, of the Grace Baptist Church of Spokane, delivered a searching message before the Christian Associations at the Baptist church, drawing helpful lessons from the story of the withered fig tree. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Dr. Thomas J. Villers of the White Temple, Portland, Ore. From the story of the rich young ruler he drew lessons of help and inspiration for the followers of Jesus Christ.

All who were present during the final program appreciated a brief glimpse which President Riley gave them into the new year opening in the fall. He announced that the budget for next year provided for an expenditure of $8,000 more than during the past year; that several new courses would be introduced and that three new professors would be added to our faculty. To fill vacancies and occupy new chairs the following will begin work in the college next fall: Rev. William J.

Sly, Ph.D., now expert in religious education with the American Baptist Publication Society, Dr. George R. Varney, A.B., of the staff of the Oregon Agricultural College, Miss Delos A. James, A.M., of the Baptist Missionary Training School, Chicago, Kenneth W. Ray, A.M., of the University of Indiana, Richard C. Spencer, A.M., of Pacific University, Miss Alice Clement, B.Mus., of Northwestern University, and Miss Anna L. Beebe, B.Mus., of Chicago.

Denison University

Overshadowing every other feature of commencement day this year at Denison University came the announcement, made by Pres. Clark W. Chamberlain at the close of the academic exercises, that thanks to the munificence of Dr. Ambrose Swasey, president of the board of trustees, the university was to have a new chapel. Although Dr. Swasey's intention has long been known, news of the definite gift came altogether as a surprise. The building of the Swasey Chapel, to be started as soon as possible, and completed, it is hoped, by September, 1923, will mark the beginning of the realization of the "Greater Denison Plan." According to the terms of the gift, Dr. Swasey will provide "sufficient funds to erect and equip a chapel of ample capacity, designed and located in conformity with the plans prepared by the architect of the university and approved by the buildings and grounds committee." Such "sufficient funds" will amount at least to $2,500,000. The chapel will be Georgian, or "Colonial," in style, and will stand between the Swasey Observatory and the president's house. Other gifts announced on commencement day are as follows: From the estate of J. Ernest Woodland, '91, $5,000 for prizes in chemistry; from the estate of Edward G. Roberts, '80, $5,000 for the E. G. Roberts fund; from H. B. Curtin, '88, $8,000; from John A. Chamberlain and Clark W. and Jessie H. Chamberlain $7,500 to add to the Wells and Cynthia Aldrich Chamberlain fund; from the class of 1916, $145 to add to the endowment fund; from George H. Olmstead, $6,000 to the current expense fund; from Mrs. Elizabeth Bell Whistler, for the construction of the Helen Whistler Memorial Hospital, $27,000; from the general education board, for increasing salaries of the faculty, $20,000; from the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention, to be equally divided between the endowment and the building fund, $128,000; from Col. E. A. Deeds, for the completion of work on Deed's Field, $80,000. These gifts total $280,000, and with the Swasey Chapel represent more than $500,000 added during the current year. The commencement address, "Interpreting This Time," was delivered by President Clarence A. Barbour, of Rochester Theological Seminary. The graduating class numbered 117, and were candidates for the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, or Bachelor of Philosophy. Among the latter was Mrs. Clara T. Brumback, principal of Shepardson College. John Horace Nunemaker, of the Granville College Faculty, received the degree of Master of Arts. Three conservatory diplomas were awarded. Honorary degrees were conferred upon the following: Edwin E. Wood, president of Cumberland College, Doctor of Laws; Rev. Thomas G. Field, of Granville, Doctor of Divinity; Helen B. Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Doctor of Laws; Clarence A. Barbour, president of Rochester Theological Seminary, Doctor of Laws.

A novel feature of the commencement was the commissioning of six graduates of the Denison R. O. T. C. as second lieutenants in the Reserve Corps, U. S. A. With a simple and dignified ceremony Col. Charles B. Clarke, in charge of the R. O. T. C., administered the oath to the young officers. This is the first group to be graduated under the present plan at Denison, and the first time such a ceremony has been made a part of commencement exercises. The lieutenants are: Edwin Lincoln Roe, Adolph Talbot, George H. Gleiss, August Jones, Howard G. Lindeman, Lawrence E. Smith.

In addition to the promotion of several members of the faculty and the retirement of Mrs. Kate S. Hines, librarian, the following elections were announced: George Platt Knox, professor of Christian education; Charles S. Gewehr, of Morningside College, professor of history; Frederick G. Detweiler, transferred from professor of Bible to professor of sociology; and Bunyan Spencer, transferred from professor of logic to professor of philosophy.

Commencement week began with Senior Chapel on Wednesday, June 7. That evening advanced students of the Conservatory were heard in recital. Class Day exercises were held on Thursday. Saturday, Alumni Day, was given over to business meetings, reunions, and luncheons. Both men's and women's associations reelected their officers of the preceding year. At the Shepardson Alumnae luncheon the speaker was Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, who took as her subject: "The Challenge to the College Graduate of Today."

The baccalaureate sermon, on Sunday, was preached by Rev. W. S. Abernethy, of Calvary Church, Washington, D. C. He discussed "The Two-Talent Man."

In the evening Mrs. Montgomery addressed the Christian Associations on "The Uplifted Christ, the World's Need," emphasizing the ideas of brotherhood and service.

Other exercises included the decoration of Dr. Shepardson's grave, at 9:30 a. m., by Shepardson alumnae.

entertainments put on by Y. M. C. A. boys through which some $65 was cleared. On a number of evenings small boys were entertained with pictures thrown on a screen with stories and in other ways. Forty-five visits were made to the hospital. Books, magazines and Testaments were supplied wherever needed. Seventy-five personal interviews with the older boys about the Christian life. Twenty special visits with students to talk over personal problems. Eight boys accepted Christ as their personal Saviour as a result of the interviews.

"Twelve reclaimed Christians and several others have taken the upper trail and an added interest in Christian things as a result of these talks. Service in Sherman has meant joy all along the way. It has meant that obstacles were meant to be overcome, and that difficulties are only gymnasium opportunities for the soul. It has made real that, 'Prayer changes things.' It has been a most wonderful opportunity to give God a chance to work through human agency."

The Imperial Commission

Never in our history has the Christian church faced graver responsibility nor more imperial opportunity. Whatever friend or foe may say in criticism of the church, nevertheless it is the institution in society which alone is intended and equipped to rise and meet this need. Our imperial commission from the Christ is to preach the gospel and teach people to observe and to do the things he commanded. And only as we rise in new power to fulfil this duty will the danger be averted.

It is time for the church at large in the nation to summon all Christ's followers to forget differences and address themselves to this tremendous need. We, as Baptists, have a great share of that responsibility. We have always contended for the separation of church from the government. We have fought to prevent the teaching of religion by the state. We have done this in spite of the fact that a democracy above all other forms of government, depends for its stability on the high moral standards of its citizens. We have done this in spite of the fact that we knew that the Christian church constituted the one great factory in which that necessary morality could be produced.

"Let Us Tend To It"

I am not objecting to the separation of church and state, but I am saying that if we as Baptists, say to the state, "You keep your hands off religion, we will tend to that," then, in the name of common decency, let us tend to it. As it is now, half the children of the next generation are growing up without any religious instruction whatsoever. The need of the nation as well as the command of Christ should send us back to every city and village of this fair land determined by God's grace, and the power of his gospel to produce new quantities of Christ-like character in the men and women, boys and girls whom we can reach and thus avert the danger which threatens our national safety.

We have a senseless optimism in this country which can be expressed by the paraphrase "God Almighty takes care of children, fools, and the United States." But there is a deep law which says that the nation that forgets God shall be destroyed and this nation has no exemption from that rule. We need a new recession for America and its theme should be "Beware, America, lest you forget God!"

And, last of all, we need to rededicate ourselves to the carrying out of this imperial commission because in a whole-hearted determination to respond to it we shall find a real platform upon which we shall achieve the denominational solidarity that we should have. It is a platform of action in loyalty to the command of our common Lord, and of cooperation with him in his redemptive purpose to save the world.

In a series of studies in the teachings of Jesus and his apostles, by Dean Bosworth, which came under my eye as a student in college, I remember this sentence: "The things that bind men together most closely are to have in common an intimate friend, to share deliverance from a common peril, to share a great common hope and to share a great common task."

Historically, also, it is on this basis of a common task that we have been brought together and developed. Our great societies were organized around the idea of carrying out this commission. Ultimately it was this missionary motive and the desire to better accomplish its ends that drew us into this cooperative relationship known as the Northern Baptist Convention. Our entire structure has been erected with this purpose in mind.

I am not unmindful of the ends many desire to accomplish by creating a platform of similarity in doctrinal belief upon which we may stand, but I cannot find myself looking with hope to that conception as the real basis for our unity. In the past, as I read it, it has not been the emphasis on uniformity of belief that has compacted us as a body. Indeed, in that quotation from Dr. W. J. McGlothlin, made use of lately in the Watchman-Examiner, it would appear that the emphasis on doctrinal uniformity among the English Baptists in 1888 caused the Spurgeon disaffection under which he withdrew from the Union, producing more differences rather than less, whereas the emphasis on a great task drew them together again. I quote: "Then came the work of Carey and the beginnings of foreign missions, with the rise of the practical tasks of the Sunday school, Bible societies, tract societies and similar organizations. Men's minds were turned to the practical side of Christianity, and their horizon was suddenly enlarged to include the whole world in the vision of their obligation and opportunity. They turned away from theological controversies and formulas. The Arminian and the Calvinistic wings by degrees approached each other. The rancors and contentions of former years were gradually forgotten in the presence of the great thrilling tasks of the nineteenth century. Finally, in 1888, the great majority of both parties dropped party names and united in a working compact for the furtherance of the king's business."

My brethren, we are facing another year of denominational life. We are going back from this place to our fields. I to my task and you to yours. We will meet our people and what will be the word that we shall carry? Is it to be a message of controversy? Are we to go back to chuckle and claim victory for one side, or to go with depression because of defeat for the other? My brethren, if the main message that goes back to our churches from this convention is of victory of a party then both sides have lost. Neither of us has gained unless out of this convention can come a new unity for the real basis of the kingdom that we both love. What is the real, genuine platform on which we all do stand? Is it not that we love the Saviour and know that the world needs him, and we are eager to bring his saving power into the world? I have talked with men on both sides of this theological controversy, but there is one thing I find common to us all. We do love Christ. It is that Name above every name; the One altogether lovely, that warms the heart, whether we call ourselves "liberals" or "conservatives." Can we not, ere we separate here, stand together again in his presence, looking upon his face with the glory of its love and then go back knowing that we have been with him?

Let us go knowing not only that we have been in his presence but that he goes with us, back to our tasks. It is his promise; "Lo, I am with you always." I know we shall face difficulties. The forces of evil will be against us; the tendency to suspicion and fear of faction, and doubt of each other will come upon us, but with his presence we need not fear.

As a Child to Its Father

When my little lass, my first-born, who has since passed on into the presence of him who said: "Suffer the little ones to come unto me," was but two years of age, at that independent age when they feel so capable of taking care of themselves, and when she did not want to be carried, I took her with us on the train. When we got into the trainshed of the station the train was not in. She insisted on getting down and running around, so amply able to take care of herself. But when the "Empire State Express" came thundering down the track with shrieking of whistles and grinding of brakes, after one look she fled in terror to me and put up her hands for me to take her. She nestled in my arms with a sense of safety and said as she looked at the train "Daddy no let it hurt baby." And, my brethren, whatever may be the difficulties and enemies that face us this year let us always be conscious that there is One near us with a form "like unto the form of the Son of God" to whom we can go as a little child goes to its father and there, in his presence, we may find that calm, quiet confidence that he will not let it hurt us.

Let us go back in the spirit of prayer to our common Master. Let us pray for each other; particularly let us pray for those on the other side of this controversy, that our confidence in that Master may be strengthened that our suspicions of each other may be allayed, and that the spirit of our common love for the Master may crowd out every unworthy word and thought. Let us go back to bring our people such a message as shall hearten them; make them bow at the feet of the Master and thrilling to the challenge of yielding time and strength to carry out this commission so long as it is his will. Let us go back determined that so far as the field of each of us is concerned the record written this year shall be of a year of increased turning to Christ and advance in the work of the kingdom. Each one is to determine his share of the record to be written. Will it be a further retreat this year? Shall the flag fall back again? By every power of our being let us say "No" to these questions and we shall come back at the turn of the year having recorded a time of unprecedented victory.

Sunday School Convention

all these things mean? To me they mean that the rank and file of the church does not believe in the Sunday school, and that the Sunday school, as a whole, does not believe in itself.

"Now if the new merger is to succeed it must 'sell' the Sunday-school idea to the church. The agencies of the past have not done it—and that thing must be done if this world, or our part of it, is to be won to the Lord Jesus Christ. My conviction is that God has called this new merger into life 'for such a time as this' and to do this very thing.

"God's people are not enticed to action and large giving by small undertakings. It is easier to put over a large worthy, compelling program, than a small one. Let us not forget the condition we confront; let us not forget the wonderful opportunity we have; let us not forget the great constituency we represent and what they are expecting of us; let us not forget this gracious leading of God, who has brought us to the very entrance of the promised land, and dishonor him by turning back.

"I am sure this great convention will demand that we go forward. Unless the program we have adopted along community lines of Sunday-school work contemplates far more than has been accomplished in the past by all these agencies concerned, we shall have lost our opportunity and been untrue to the vision we have had.

"May our Lord, 'whose children we are and whom we serve,' give us a fresh glimpse of his face as we build our program for the future, and a fresh grasp of his conquering hand as we take up the tasks awaiting us."

Our Book Shelf

Irrigation and Religion, by Edmund DeS. Brunner, Ph. D. and Mrs. Mary V. Brunner. New York: George H. Doran Co. $2.50.

This is the latest volume in the Church and Community Surveys Series. It is a report of the surveys of Orange and Stanislaus counties, California, both of which were made rich and fertile by irrigation, and may be considered typical of all those communities in the United States where at the touch of water, the desert was transformed into a garden. The results of the survey as far as possible, have been tabulated and charted and illustrated with maps and photographs and suggestions are made as to new policies and diagrams which will be of value to ministers and Christian workers in similar communities.

The Return of Christ, by Charles R. Erdman, D. D. of Princeton Theological Seminary. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.00.

The author says, "The purpose of these brief pages is to deepen conviction and to promote harmony of belief concerning the return of Christ. The chapter titles are "The Doctrine," "The Visible Coming," "The Preceding Events," "The Events to Follow," "The Millennium," "The Perfected Kingdom," and "The Present Duty."

The Churches of the New Testament, by George W. McDaniel, D. D., Pastor First Baptist Church, Richmond, Va. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.75.

This volume consists of ten papers or essays on the churches mentioned in the New Testament. The author affixes a descriptive title or appellation to each one marking a distinguishing characteristic in its history. The church in Jerusalem is the mother church, at Colosse the heretical church, at Rome the renowned church and so forth. The first paper is a definition of the meaning and nature of the word church as used in the New Testament. A historical sketch of the locality and the church introduces each essay accentuating the features of its descriptive attribute. The author in a wonderful degree has been able to congest into the work discussions of theology, ecclesiology, ethics, history and practical religion. While the diction is never provincial and "common" it is simple, plain Anglo-Saxon as if he had studied the phraseology of Bunyan or F. W. Robertson. Preach, professor, layman and student will equally enjoy and profit by the book. Its trend is strongly pro-Baptist and its theology of the type the Southern pulpit is noted for. 'Tis a book of exceptional merit and is deservedly popular.

"It Is to Laugh"

Mr. Gladstone used to tell how an English lady, a friend of his, chartering a cab for the day in Dublin, said to the driver: "You won't mind if I take you for the day?"

"Is it me mind, me lady?" was the gallant reply. "Sure, I wouldn't mind if ye tuk me for life."

"Why, Tommy!" exclaimed the Sunday-school teacher. Don't you say your prayers every night before you go to bed?"

"Not any more," explained Tommy. "I used to, though, when I had to sleep in a folding bed."—Judge.

A child adopted from an orphan's home was being ridiculed by the other children because he had no real parents. The conversation went about as follows:

"Aw, you haven't got any real father and mother."

"Maybe I haven't, but the ones I have got love me as much as yours love you."

"They do not. Ours are our real parents."

"Well, mine love me more than yours do you, 'cause mine picked me out of a hundred other babies, and yours had to take what they got."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

OUR EXCHANGE TABLE

One of the drawbacks of trying to run an up-to-the-minute music corner is the fact that the two weeks or thereabouts required for the printing of my copy after it leaves my hands often makes me seem to review a musical journal at a somewhat stale date. For instance, this month I had made up my mind to give a little space to brief mention of our valued musical exchanges—The New Music Review, The Diapason, The Musical Observer, The Choir Leader, and others—and when they are all assembled on my desk, ready to handle for the proposed column, I find that mention of them will be in time for the July issues of our paper. It is no one's fault—simply a conflict of publication dates. So we will do what we can!

The Choir Leader for June, published by Lorenz, Dayton, O.: This increasingly more valuable choir journal appears in an unusually interesting guise this month. Headed as "Patriotic Number," it well lives up to that designation. Besides the pungent suggestions contained in the editorial notes, it contains good articles by Baltzell and Silber. The anthems are up to the usual standard—they will no doubt find wide use over the country.

The New Music Review for June, published by H. W. Gray Co., New York: Fundamentally, this excellent journal is intended for the organist and choir-director, rather than the general reader. But the valuable articles contained therein, and the high ideals of the musical art expounded in the monthly columns by Dr. Stubbs and others make it of definite value and interest to all with a leaning towards music, or with any appreciation of the value of the musical side of divine worship. For the professional is the monthly series of service-lists, suggesting and analyzing suitable music for the successive Sundays, the pages of news-notes concerning the doings of members of that fine fraternity, the American Guild of Organists, the reviews of new publications, and the technical articles having to do with the questions involved in voice and choral-training, and similar subjects. Then there are always several well-written articles of general interest in this issue, notably an anonymous contribution on the point of the influence of Beethoven's deafness on his compositions, and a column or so by Orlando Mansfield on "Some Vocal Anomalies and Abnormalities." A wider circulation for both the New Music Review and The Diapason would do much to raise the standards of our church music. For better music is largely a question of better education along that line—if you will simmer down the oft-repeated declaration of dislike for "classical music" you will almost always find it to be an expression of prejudice alone—a lack of familiarity with the good.

The Diapason for June, published by S. E. Gruenstein, Chicago. Lest I may be accused of unfair discrimination in any way between the New Music Review and The Diapason, I want to make it clear that because of space limitations I intend to make the notice of the latter intentionally brief, which fact is no indication as to any comparative merit in the two publications. While they both appeal to the same field, and outwardly till like ground, there is a definite individuality to each which sets them widely apart. Each stands for the best in church and concert music, each preaches the need of the best—but the Review is more interested in general topics and subjects, while The Diapason affects more the news side of the field. Personally I want both. I should dislike having to dispense with either; they are complementary. Besides newsy notes of the doings of our concert-organists, new organ specifications, church programs, reviews of new music, straight-from-the-shoulder editorials, and general items of interest, there are the regular valuable features including the sections devoted to the activities of the American Guild of Organists, its more democratic brother, the National Association of Organists, the "Free-Lance" column of clever side-lights by Hamilton MacDougall and the church-music section handled by Harold W. Thompson—this month containing a varied list of anthems for the use of quartet-choir—a list which should be in the hands of every such organization in this country.

The Musical Observer published by Carl Fischer, New York. The June issue of this interesting monthly is of the usual high character to be expected of this journal. The various departments covered, edited by experts, and containing contributions from some of the greatest authorities along the various lines, are all of extreme interest and value. To catalogue the many good things contained in this issue would take up more space than we can spare—suffice it to say that every musician or music-lover should read the Musical Observer month by month; the most technical expert will always find much of positive worth to his profit; the man on the street can likewise read with interest and entertainment.

The Good Shepherd.....Songer ($0.50)

Two effective new sacred solos, reverent in tone, easy in grade, and pleasing in effect. The second is the better of the two—I may be prejudiced, but "ballad-type" of songs for service use do not rank overly high in my estimation; there are plenty of people, however, who actively disagree with me on this point—else the publishers would not find it profitable to issue this sort of sacred song in such fluent plentifulness. The Songer text is a lyric based upon the twenty-third psalm. The music is smooth and pleasing, cast for a medium voice, the accompaniment will be equally effective on the organ or the piano. It displays a contrapuntal feeling too much absent from most of the material studied for review. Not that this feeling for parts is the ne plus ultra of composition—it is a means to an end; but its presence proves the backing of good solid technical training, and a mastery of the technique of statement.

A SITUATION

The accumulated deficits of the Four National Missionary Societies—Home and Foreign—at the close of the fiscal year 1921-22, as reported to the Finance Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, were as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society	-	-	$914,262
Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society			398,000
Total for the Foreign Societies			$1,312,262
American Baptist Home Mission Society	-	-	176,326
Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society	-		182,340
Total for the Home Societies			$ 358,666
Total for the four Societies			1,670,928

This constitutes a very serious situation, which must in some way be met if our great missionary work is not to be crippled.

A SUGGESTION

One Dollar and a Half given by every Northern Baptist designated toward the deficits would lift this Depressing and Distressing Load, with something to spare.

But since we cannot get at them all, and help must be had speedily, who will send a better suggestion—accompanied, say, by a check for $25,000, $50,000 or $100,000—over and above?

Civic Fundamentalism

“OUR representative form of constitutional government is responsible to the will of the majority, responsive to the expression of deliberate public opinion. It must be so to endure. Majorities, restrained to the protection of minorities, ever must rule.

“The constitution and the laws sponsored by the majority must be enforced. It does not matter who opposes. If an opposing minority has a just objection, the rising tide of public opinion will change the law. There is no abiding liberty under any other plan.

“I mean to sound no note of pessimism. This republic is secure. Menaces do arise, but public opinion will efface them. Meanwhile government must repress them. The eighteenth amendment denies to a minority a fancied sense of personal liberty, but the amendment is the will of America and must be sustained by the government and public opinion. Contempt for the law will undermine our very foundations.

* * * *

“America will go on. The fundamentals of the republic and all its liberties will be preserved, and government must maintain the supremacy of law and authority. Under these liberty has its fullest fruition, and men attain to reveal the glory of liberty's institutions.”

—President Harding, Marion Address, Independence Day, 1922

Fresh from the Field

President Clifton D. Gray, of Bates College, Lewiston, Me., formerly editor and publisher of The Standard, Chicago, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at the recent convocation of the University of Maine.

Council of Reading Baptist Association met with Memorial Church, Reading, Pa., to examine for ordination to the gospel ministry Mr. D. R. Kulp. Rev. M. C. Wiant, of Reading, moderator; Rev. T. D. Morris, of St. Clair, clerk; ordaining prayer by Rev. M. C. Wiant; charge to the church by Rev. E. Judson Barnes, Ashland; charge to the candidate by Rev. A. K. Stockebrand, Pottsville; sermon by Rev. J. R. Humphreys, Berean Church, Reading. Rev. D. R. Kulp is a graduate of Crozer Theological Seminary.

The Board of Conservation and Advance of the Methodist Episcopal Church reached a decision at a conference in Chicago, June 28, to enter upon a campaign for $2,000,000 to be raised by October 31 this year in order to prevent a 30 per cent cut in appropriations for home and foreign missions. Bishop Fred B. Fisher of India and Bishop Edwin Hughes of Boston will devote their whole time to the leadership of this movement. If this campaign is not launched and its goals achieved "the monument to the Methodist Centenary will be a circle of cellar holes around the globe," said one member of the conference. We admire the Board of Conservation and Advance because true to its function it does not propose to meekly accept a 30 per cent reduction in the great missionary task of their church.

The proposal for Biennial Sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention was tabled without division at Indianapolis on the advice of the corresponding secretary, Dr. W. C. Bitting. Our report stated erroneously that the proposal had been approved.

Acting on an overture from a local presbytery asking that the revised version of the Scriptures be discarded in Sunday-school literature, the Presbyterian General assembly at Des Moines refused by a unanimous vote to grant the request. The Continental says editorially: "The General Assembly has faithfully represented the best judgment of the church in again saying that the revised Bible is the Bible that the children of today ought by all means to learn—'Learn by heart,' just as far as possible."

The calendar for June 11, of the First Church of Ypsilanti, Mich., Rev. C. S. Burns, pastor, has a list of fifty-three members who have been received into the church since Children's Day, 1920.

A meeting of the Council of the Wayne Baptist Association, New York, was held at the Marion Church recently for the purpose of considering the propriety of ordaining to the ministry Rev. Lester W. Bumpus, who was recently called by the Marion Baptist Church as its pastor. The council was satisfied with Mr. Bumpus's statement of his call to the ministry, with his views on Christian doctrine and with his Christian experience and it unanimously recommended to the Marion church that it proceed with the ordination. The prayer of invocation was given by Rev. A. S. Lowrie, of Newark, and after Scripture reading by Mr. Karn, of Rose, the ordination sermon was preached by Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of the Rochester Theological Seminary. The prayer of ordination with the laying on of hands was given by Mr. Kneeland, with Dr. Barbour, Rev. J. C. Cann and Rev. A. S. Lowrie, assisting. R. J. Cann, of Ontario, gave the right hand of fellowship. The charge to the candidate was given by Dr. Nixen of Rochester. The charge to the church was given by Mr. MacNinch, of Lyons, who was pastor of the Marion church twenty-five years ago after he graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary.

The Maranatha Church of Detroit, Rev. C. E. LaReau, pastor, has laid some definite plans touching the work of the church. First, it aims to assist the young people in their effort to organize for work in the church; second, the church aims to have an absent members canvass in order to locate members who have removed from the immediate field or for other causes become inactive. The church also will undertake a thorough canvass of its great field block by block in order to secure members for the Sunday school and discover places where the church may minister.

Pictures from the Stereopticon Department of the Board of Promotion have recently appeared in The Literary Digest and Travel.

The supplies of the First Church, Indianapolis, for July and August are Rev. J. B. Witherspoon, Louisville; Rev. O. R. McKay, Indianapolis; Rev. Carl D. Case, Oak Park, Ill.; Rev. J. J. Ross, Chicago; Rev. A. H. Gage, Chicago, and Rev.

The Great Lockout

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

HE stands! He knocks! Such is the attitude of Christ in his approach to the soul of man! What a significance Christ at the door should have for each one of us. He knocks! In a multitude of ways he would make known to us that he is not far away. In health, happiness, and home; in the friendships, opportunities, and achievements of life; in the sorrows, disappointments, and losses he was knocking at the door of your heart. He girded your life with his care, and crowned your days with loving kindness and tender mercies, so that you might know he was there. He knocks in that deep unrest of your soul which you have sought in vain to satisfy. He knocked when you had sinned and a sense of its shame came upon you. In all the attitudes he takes toward us, there is none so profound as this—Christ at the door! He stands infinite in mercy and patience, invested with the authority of heavenly glory, the yearning Christ, and the all-sufficient Saviour. In that lies our hope and our salvation.

Oh, lovely attitude! He stands
With melting heart and loaded hands;
O, matchless kindness! and he shows
This matchless kindness to his foes.

The opportunity for every man to attain unto the holiest and highest is close at hand. God is not inaccessible. His saving grace is round about us; Christ is near, and more ready to bestow his gift of life than we are to receive. To his knocking we must respond. To open the door of our heart is the one condition of blessing, and the wonderful thing about it is, that the moment we do so, something happens—he comes with his saving power and heavenly peace into our lives.—ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

E. Y. Mullins of Louisville. Dr. Taylor will be back in his pulpit September 10.

Rev. Thomas W. Gales, formerly pastor of the First Baptist Church of Appleton, Wis., has for nearly three years been on the field force of the Wisconsin Anti-Saloon League. He has just been appointed superintendent of the newly organized "LaCrosse District" and will probably make his headquarters in LaCrosse.

Mizpah Bible Class of the West Somerville, Mass., Church, Frank M. Swaffield, pastor, sent the following telegram to the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis: "Beloved: Have the faith of Jesus. Though the storm rages, and we seem likely to perish, and Jesus seems to sleep on a pillow; we refuse to fear, we refuse to doubt, we believe he cares, and will command the winds and the waves. Though he tarry long, and our fondest hopes sicken and die, we refuse to question, we believe we shall see the glory of God."

Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur, notable for his historic pastorate at Calvary Church, New York, has recently concluded a ministry of two months with the University Baptist Church of Baltimore. The church adopted resolutions expressing the highest appreciation of his inspiring service in pulpit and prayer meeting.

A few months ago the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society arranged to send two of its members, who are also able and successful pastors, on an evangelistic preaching tour in Czechoslovakia. The men chosen for this special missionary task are Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis, and now president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and Rev. Carter Helm Jones, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Philadelphia. Their two churches have most generously released them for this highly important service. The Baptist churches in Czechoslovakia welcomed the suggestion, and Drs. Taylor and Jones sailed from New York last week. In many directions there is a strong reaction against formalism in religion, and perhaps that reaction is as strong in Czechoslovakia as in any part of Europe. A new Reformation seems to be taking place and the extraordinary conditions in Czechoslovakia suggested the need for such a fraternal visit. An itinerary has been made for them which includes the principal cities and towns in Czechoslovakia. It will thrill the weak but growing Baptist churches in the land of John Huss to have these American Baptist pastors with them, conducting services every day. Moreover, large crowds of people without regard to denominational affiliations will be attracted to the meetings which are being arranged. For several months Baptist brethren in Czechoslovakia have been preparing for this visit.

Four hundred fifty-three members have been received by the First Church of Columbia, S. C., during the two years in which Dr. T. Clagett Skinner has served as pastor.

The New York State Baptist Summer School for pastors is in session at Cook Academy, Montour Falls, July 10-21. Rev. F. W. Tomlinson, of Syracuse, is director. Twelve attractive courses are included in the instruction offered.

The new chairman of the Continuation Campaign Committee is Mrs. H. E. Goodman who succeeds Mrs. George W. Coleman.

The Baptist For Sale

We are ready to sell THE BAPTIST. We honestly believe it should be sold. In fact we are devoting all our powers to that end. We are doing our best to find buyers and to effect a sale. We are trying hard to produce a paper worth buying. We are also trying hard to induce Northern Baptists to promote the sale of it. Worse papers are sold for less money, every week. We offer this representative and official organ of the Northern Baptist Convention for sale at the fixed price of $2.50 per year for single subscriptions. In clubs including 10 per cent of the church membership the rate is $2. We do want to sell THE BAPTIST. We want every one of our 30,000 Baptists who have already bought it, to help us to sell it to another 30,000 who ought to have it. Help us to find buyers for THE BAPTIST. THE BAPTIST must be sold!

Killam's Kollum

And Before We Are 100 Years Old

"Just a word to tell you that I read with interest, instruction, and new inspiration each week our splendid paper, THE BAPTIST, and I carefully go through the ——— first. May it never grow shorter . . . If all the forces will keep right on boosting we will have the greatest paper in the United States and Canada." This is from a letter from Rev. E. M. Jeffers, who is at present sojourning in Florida. Just give us time, brethren. We do not ask a hundred years.

All Ironed Out

Rev. A. P. Howells of Jacksonville, Ill., writes: "I was impressed at one session of the convention by a statement of the president, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, who during a parliamentary tangle turned to her audience, after consulting with several brethren on the platform, who were conservatives and liberals, and said, 'You will have to wait a moment until we have ironed this out.'"

"Faith in the North in the grand old Book,
We believe it from lid to lid.
We may differ, 'tis true, in the way we look,
For the doctrines that there are hid.
But the rank and file of the Baptist host
Will scatter every doubt
That the old Book stands, unscarred, uncreased,— Since Helen ironed it out."

"Canning" The Drummer

Perhaps we should have said "ditching" the drummer, for we have a peculiar antipathy to slang in this Kollum. Our chief concern just now, however, is to be understood for we are to relate a Parable of the Improbable. A great business corporation, with a business running into millions annually, struck a slump, and suffered a serious decline in receipts. The enlightened general manager at once called in all the sales force and paid them off, to cut down expenses. Of course the board of directors and the stockholders unanimously elected him as president of the Boob Club.

When the slump comes in a great enterprise like the New World Movement, the short and easy way to meet the disaster is to "can" the drummer. Cut off the promotion organ and close the chief channel of information and influence for the work of the Board of Promotion. Northern Baptist stockholders chose a better way, and the future will, we believe, vindicate their judgment and reward their courage.

Thirty-first Anniversary Convention, Baptist Young People's Union of America, St. Paul, June 28-July 2

WEDNESDAY morning, June 28, found hundreds of young people from all over the United States and Canada either in St. Paul or on their way to the big convention. Owing to the fact that the Minnesota delegation had planned for conferences and organization a large number of young people from the Gopher State assembled at the First Baptist Church of St. Paul. In addition to this state organization work Twin City and Minnesota people served as hosts in entertaining the arriving delegations. Before the opening of the evening session it was announced that over 7,500 had registered.

The Opening Night

Mr. George H. Fairclough opened the service at the auditorium on Wednesday evening with an organ recital. The opening devotional service was led by Dr. G. A. Hagstrom, president of Bethel Institute. The Honorable J. A. O. Preus, governor of Minnesota, in a most delightful manner welcomed the delegates to the paradise of the Northwest. The governor recounted the great contribution of Baptists to religious liberty.

Convention Music

The convention chorus for all evening sessions was under the direction of Mr. E. T. Clissold of Chicago. The great audience heartily enjoyed Mr. Clissold and his great company of helpers. Special music was provided by the choirs of the various churches of the Twin Cities and proved an attractive feature. Mr. Theodore Bergman, organist of the First Baptist Church, Minneapolis, assisted at the organ and piano. Mrs. J. G. Briggs of the Woodland Park Church, St. Paul, presided at the piano during a great deal of the chorus work.

Illustrated Lectures

Rev. Sumner R. Vinton of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, was one of the headliners of the convention. He illustrated in a wonderful way the subjects as follows: Wednesday evening, "God's Beautiful World: A Study in Contentment"; Thursday, "East and West: A Study in Contrast"; and on Friday evening, "Co-Workers with God: A Study in Achievement." The impression gained from Mr. Vinton's pictures will unquestionably last throughout the years, and will be a great factor in fashioning the lives of hundreds of young men and young women. A brief outline of Mr. Vinton's lectures follows:

"A correct interpretation of the world in which we live is an essential to both happiness and progress, and no religion that fails to give such an interpretation is adequate to meet the needs of humanity.

"There are countless millions of people in the non-Christian world whose sole religion is Animism, a belief that peoples all nature with innumerable evil spirits. When crops fail, cattle die or sickness breaks out in the home, the universal explanation is that these invisible spirits of earth, air and water have become peeved over slights offered them and are taking their revenge. Such a belief creates an atmosphere of fear in which real progress is impossible.

"To the hundreds of millions of Hindus and Buddhists the world is 'Maya'—illusion. 'Unreality — impermanence — suffering': this has been the condensed creedal statement droned interminably through the ages. It is not difficult to understand the stagnation of the East when we have in mind this basic conception.

"The Christian conception of the world as the handiwork of a great and loving God of righteousness and truth is one of the prime factors in bringing about the progress of western nations. Poets, musicians and artists have vied with one another in expressing the beauty and the grandeur of God's world. Reverent scientists have delved deep into its mysteries, knowing that the more we know of the world, the more we shall want to know, and shall know, its Creator.

"The marvellous beauty of God's world is due to what some one has called 'God's passion for perfection.' No fabric of man will compare with the texture of the flower's petal! The edge of the sharpest razor blade, when magnified, looks like a cross-cut saw! But the highest-powered microscope reveals no flaw in the crystals of the snow flake!

"No modern statement has surpassed the words of the Psalmist: 'The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork.' 'My help cometh from the Lord who made heaven and earth.'

"The difference in the interpretation of the world made by Christianity and the various ethnic faiths of mankind is only one feature of the striking contrast between East and West. This contrast has long been an accepted fact. We take it for granted. The houses we live in and the tools with which we work; the clothes we wear and the food we eat; the language we speak, in sound and form and construction of sentences, and, even in the thought life these languages represent, are all different. Serious students and casual travelers alike, on their return from foreign travel, quote with unction Kipling's lines,

*Oh East is East and West is West
And never the twain shall meet,*

as if that settled the matter. No need to wait for the decision of the judge or the verdict of the jury. But it is by no means so simple as that. There are, indeed, differences. Not alone in superficial things, but in ideals and objectives, East and West are very far apart. Nor is it simply that one has attained what the other still seeks. Rather the one counts holy what the other disdains. The one bends all its energies toward the accomplishment of that which the other regards as utterly valueless.

*"The East bowed low before the blast
In patient deep disdain;
She let the legions thunder past,
Then plunged in thought again."*

"But however great the differences, keener students of life recognize that they do not represent the whole truth. Kipling did not stop with the oft-quoted lines already referred to. He added the lines,

*"But there is neither East nor West,
Border nor breed nor birth,
When two strong men stand face to face,
Though they come from the ends of the earth."*

There is a common humanity. There is a brotherhood of man, not actual yet, but potential and ideal.

"Brotherhood is a matter of spirit and ideal more than accident of family or race. Blood brothers are sometimes less brotherly than those of different family or even of alien race. The missionary program of the church has given the world the most eloquent demonstration of the deeper unity that underlies all the superficial differences. From among the most savage of tribes and from the most cultured of ancient races have come strong Christian characters that have demonstrated the only real brotherhood of man, through Jesus Christ. Ebara, of Japan, noted educator, made life member of the house of peers by the emperor, gives much time to Bible classes and personal evangelism. His life is more eloquent for real brotherhood than scores of essays on socialism. So men like Ding Li Mei and C. T. Wang, of China, or George Gordon and the Saddhu Sundar Singh, of India, and hundreds of others, equally faithful, but not so widely known are demonstrating the possibilities of achievement in the realm of the soul as co-workers with God."

The President's Address

This was delivered by Rev. Carleton W. Atwater, pastor of the Lincoln Park Baptist Church, Cincinnati, on the subject, "The Christ That Leads Onward." Mr. Atwater took as the basis for his theme the keyword or keynote of the convention, "Forward with Christ." The address in full appears in this issue of THE BAPTIST. It was one of the great deliverances of the convention.

The Quiet Half-Hours

These services came at 12 o'clock each day and were in charge of Rev. C. W. Gilkey, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago. For three days he spoke in his own unique way to the thousands of young men and young women on some of the most practical problems of their lives. Mr. Gilkey's personality so impressed itself upon the delegates that he will always have a big place in their hearts. He unhesitatingly brushed aside superficialities and dug deep into their souls, speaking the first day on "Work and Prayer"; the second day, "Things New and Old"; and the third day, "His Own Garden." One or more of these addresses will appear in THE BAPTIST.

Morning Addresses

The program for each day was built around the keynote, "Forward with Christ." For the first day, "Forward with Christ in our study life." After the presentation of the study course program of the B. Y. P. U. of America by the general secretary, Dr. Emory W. Hunt, president of Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, delivered a great address on "The Young Christian's Equipment." Dr. Hunt said:

"Two words should always be kept together—religious education. Either one of them is imperfect, incomplete without the other; each of them is deserving of careful consideration.

"Some of our friends have come to fear education. They have known here and (Continued on page 755)

The Baptist

The Spirit of Youth

PAUL the apostle would have rejoiced to witness the recent gathering of nine thousand young people in the American city which bears his name: nine thousand young Christians from American Baptist churches, assembled from the vast territory lying between Hudson's Bay and Panama.

There is a real danger that in our feverish (and indeed timely) concern for the insipid "flapper" and the wanton boy, we become sceptical of the power of Christ over youth; appraising too lightly the wealth of grace which is in the young life of our churches, the noble resolves which stir our growing lads and lasses, the fine and absolute devotion to the living Christ which possesses a multitude of our young folks who are the men and women of tomorrow.

What else save a conscious experience of Christ as Saviour and Lord can account for those really wonderful hours in the St. Paul Auditorium, when such themes as prayer and stewardship and life-work held the attention, the interest, the deep desire, of thousands of American boys and girls.

What else save a dominant purpose to know Christ better and to satisfy his heart by the full consecration of life to his service, can explain the creation of an atmosphere in that body of Christian youth, which would bear its beautiful fruit in the public enlistment of nearly five hundred for Christian service as a life-work?

Mazzini, the heroic prophet of Italian liberty, staked his cause and the future of his loved people on the youth whom he gathered to him and to whom he imparted his own passion for freedom. Meredith attributes to him these bold words: "My faith is in the young. Through them Italy lives. What power can teach devotion to the old?"

The young people are the hope of the world. They are also the hope of the church. For, be it remembered, the most desperate enemy of the church of Christ is not worldliness, nor heresy, nor civil oppression. The church has lived, will always live, despite these age-long enemies of Christ and his cause. Paul recognized the most potent foe of Christianity when he said of the five hundred witnesses of Christ's resurrection: "some are fallen asleep." These could no longer witness, nor toil; and with their passing the church was poorer and its testimony less effective, unless from the young life of the new generation recruits could be secured to fill their vacant places.

Hugh Walpole wrote for an English magazine a year ago an article on "National Ideals for 1921." In that article he said: "It is foolish to take our view of the future from the middle-aged and old. Of course they are pessimistic. Their Age is dying in pieces around them, and they have only old theories for putting it together again. The only generation that matters at all now is the young generation and the generation younger than that. Our past will not be their past. They will scarcely be conscious of all the things that seem to us so tremendous. We on our side can tell them some things, give them some warnings, but we must never forget that we are no longer of any importance at all."

Americans in middle life will hardly consent to Mr. Walpole's extreme view of their worthlessness; but we do need to be jolted out of the complacency and self-confidence so tantalizing to inquiring and adventurous youth. Charles Wagner, author of "The Simple Life," declares that we bring up children either for ourselves or for themselves. He insists that they should be brought up for life. If this ideal is to be realized, and if our children are to be educated and inspired for noble and spiritual living, it is necessary that we recognize their worth, and that we fully assume our responsibility for their early conversion and for their adequate training in Christian knowledge and service.

The spirit of youth is peculiarly congenial to the appeal of Jesus. There is a necessary affinity between the spirit of youth and the essential Christian life; and we are false to our Master and to his gospel as well when we become pessimistic of the young life of the community.

Youth needs and demands leadership and coordination around an inspiring ideal and program in order to achieve its destiny. Such an ideal and such a leadership are revealed in Jesus Christ, who in the halcyon days of the beginning of the gospel gathered about himself five young men, his first disciples, and formed them into a league of youth.

The distinctive qualities of youth are intimately related to the qualities of Christian discipleship. Youth is the period of great adventures. It is the time when rich and lasting friendships are sought and given. It is the era of whole-hearted devotion and tenacious adherence to causes and leaders. Faith, fellowship, and fealty, are the watchwords of youth. Adventure, comradeship, devotion: the giving of confidence, the giving of companionship, the giving of service; these are the qualities which we perceive inherent in young life.

The Christian life in its essential nature possesses these same qualities of adventure, comradeship, devotion. The life begins with the great spiritual adventure of confidence in Jesus which entrusts the soul to him for pardon and renewal and moral power. It has its unfolding and its increasing joy in a conscious fellowship with the living Lord which becomes the sweetest and most abiding of all friendships. It has its manifestation in a life-long career of loyal and passionate devotion to his service which humanizes the employer, ennobles the lawyer, makes any honest calling sacred; and leads those to whom he brings the challenge, to assume the ministry of the gospel and even carry his name to the ends of the earth.

Faith in Christ; fellowship with Christ; fealty to Christ: these are the watchwords of Christian discipleship; and they summarize passions, experiences, ideals, peculiarly congenial to the heart of youth. The St. Paul Convention,—indeed the whole young people's movement of our time,—is a vindication of the claims of Jesus upon the faith and service of boys and girls. Moreover, it is a fresh reminder of our inescapable obligation to evangelize youth, to educate youth in the word of God, and to enlist youth for the service of the Son of God.

Have You Heard from Maine?

IN the days of our fathers the state of Maine was considered in the field of politics a sure index of the trend of national sentiment. The Maine elections were held in September, and with remarkable regularity the results pointed to the national verdict two months later. In the campaign of 1840, when General Harrison of Tippecanoe fame was a candidate for president, his followers improvised a campaign song after Maine had voted and assured to him her electoral vote: "Oh, have you heard from the state of Maine? How she went * * * * (we omit the profanity) for Governor Kent,—For Tippecanoe and Tyler too!"

Are the Maine Baptists destined in the providence of God to assume a similar role in relation to the Northern Baptist Convention? Is their recent significant action in state convention at Saco (June 29) a forecast of the trend of settled opinion and prayerful desire and determined purpose on the part of our churches to have done with strife and confusion and consequent disaster to our missionary enterprises?

The convention adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the United Baptist Convention of Maine in convention assembled that the controversy, so long continued in both THE BAPTIST and the Watchman Examiner should be discontinued."

Christian courtesy, marked reserve, and superb wisdom, attended the drafting of this resolution. It judges no man or group; it is silent concerning blame for the past; it has no words of eulogy or of rebuke for men whose conscience or whose connections have involved them in the "controversy so long continued"; it refuses to betray partisanship.

Christian passion and loyalty to Christ saturate these few lines. They are pregnant with resolute purpose to abide by the unquestioned will of the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention as indicated in the decisive vote on the main question at issue at Indianapolis. They plead for the conservation of the vital forces and the powerful resources of our churches, so long depleted and so long unhappily devoted to fraternal strife. They urge the consecration of those forces and of those resources unimpaired, to the fulfilment of the imperious command of the imperial Christ.

Is Maine's courteous proposal a forecast of a new trend in our denominational life, indicating a swift response of our churches to the Indianapolis declaration and a renewed committal of our churches to the New World Movement as ratified anew at the Indianapolis convention? Does it indicate a new spiritual impulse which, accumulating all the scattered and disjoined resources of our Baptist people, will impart a momentum to the movement sufficient to insure for it ultimately a larger success even than we dreamed of at Denver? With God all things are possible: why not even this amazing finale after five years of distress and anxiety and heartbreak?

The Maine resolution refrains from any demand or ultimatum. It is simply the frank expression of the conviction and the earnest wish of Maine Baptists. THE BAPTIST, as the organ of the Northern Baptists, takes this expression seriously and responds sympathetically to the desire indicated. Whenever, and as soon as, the long-sustained attacks, covert and open, upon the program and policies approved by the Northern Baptist Convention, are denied the use of the columns of other Baptist papers, the chief occasion for our taking part in further controversy will have been eliminated. So long as those attacks are continued and endorsed, THE BAPTIST as the organ established specifically to promote and interpret the New World Movement and the interests of the Northern Baptist Convention, cannot evade its solemn responsibility to tell the truth and to expose fallacy and to rebuke error.

The Tonic of a Great Task

ON the eve of his departure for Europe on an important mission, President W. S. Abernethy, of the American Baptist Foreign Society, was asked for a message to the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention, which follows:

"A prominent Canadian not long ago said, 'What Canada needs is the tonic of a great task.' There come times with nations as with individuals, when a condition similar to what the athlete calls 'staleness,' comes on. At such times nothing but the 'tonic of a great task' will suffice. Churches and denominations find themselves similarly affected, and again there is need of the 'tonic of a great task.'

"The Indianapolis convention is history. Are we still going to discuss doctrine and theology or have we had enough of that for the time being? One thing is certain,—no great denominational advance has been made while we have been talking about creeds. The convention just held will be remembered as the time when we fell back. We are in debt to the extent of several millions of dollars and our work must suffer as a result. That debt sooner or later has got to be paid. A million of it at least ought to be taken off before we come to Washington in 1923. I make bold here and now to suggest that the month of November be designated as 'Debt Reducing Month,' and that we ask every member of every Baptist church in the land to benefit through the 'tonic of a great task.' For thirty days suppose we deny ourselves our favorite amusement, hobby, indulgence, or whatever it may be. Let us omit the movies, the pleasure rides, the chocolates, the extras on the table that we can just as well do without and then on the last Sunday in the month bring in the money that we have thus saved. Who says that a million and a quarter Baptists cannot save a million dollars in a month's time? The tonic of a great task can easily put new life into the whole denomination.

"Respectfully referred to the Promotion Board for their careful consideration."

Germany in Collapse

PRESS dispatches to July 8 indicate a new financial crisis in Germany which involves the almost inevitable fall of the existing republican government. On July 7 the mark had declined to eighteen-hundredths of a cent (about 560 marks to the dollar, or 1-132nd of par) and was falling steadily. The Allied Governments are in conference over the situation, which concerns not merely the stability of the German Republic but the peace of Europe and of the world.

Premier Lloyd George said last week, "The German crisis has more potent dangers than the Irish situation during its gravest period." The French and Italian foreign offices are profoundly alarmed at the prospect of the overthrow of the existing German government with the dread alternatives of Monarchist Restoration or Red Commune.

America and the Allies face a condition and not a theory, to borrow the classic phrase of a great president. A paper treaty, however amply signed, is of doubtful value financially to France and Belgium, if the party of the second part goes bankrupt and is wiped off the map of Europe by the fires of anarchy.

Whether the reparations stipulated by the Versailles Treaty and the Reparations Commission are a maximum or a minimum, neither amount will ever be paid unless a stable government can be maintained in Germany and her once-prolific industries rehabilitated. Turnips yield little blood, and par values vanish in the atmosphere of social and political anarchy. The real question now is, not whether France will get all she claims from Germany, but whether she can get anything at all. Russia is not paying her debts at present, as France well knows to her sorrow.

The current crisis might have been averted, or at least deferred, if the Morgan bankers' committee had not been blocked in their recent attempt to arrange for the floating of a loan to stabilize German finances. Sir Robert Horne, British Chancellor of the Exchequer admitted last week in Commons that Germany is insolvent and that the powers are helpless to aid her since the failure of the bankers' committee to find a way out.

Russia has 1,500,000 men under arms, of which one-fourth are massed on the Polish and Roumanian frontiers, possibly as a persuader to influence the Hague Conference. If the existing German state goes crashing, that Red tide may sweep across Middle Europe and carry material and social desolation to the Rhine or even to the Bay of Biscay and the English Channel.

America has a heavy stake in the affair, even though our historic policy of non-intervention and exclusion theoretically excludes us from active sharing in negotiations and overt interference. America is the embodiment and exponent of the ideal of democracy and of civil and religious freedom. Every germ of liberty growing anywhere in all the world is of interest to us. Every nascent democratic state appeals to our sympathy and our generous friendship. Germany the Imperial seeking her place in the sun we tolerated until in the providence of God she found her place elsewhere. Germany the Republic commands our interest and our cooperation because the principle of democracy is at stake for her smitten and disarmed people, and along with these, for all the peoples of central and eastern Europe.

Finally, the German crisis concerns America because until a solution is reached, vast economic and moral resources remain tied up in a state of siege which should be released for the work of redeeming the world from its misery and despair and bondage. Asia, Africa, and to a less extent South America, wait for the moral and spiritual leadership of the Christian nations of the West to secure to them deliverance and the freedom which is in Christ. The subtle menace of Islam, the recrudescence of paganism in China, the seething fires of unrest in India, the blight of a decade of war in the Balkans and the shame of the Near East; these weighty problems, these colossal tasks, can find solution and achievement only when all the forces of our Christian civilization can be set free to meet them. Our sympathy for France, our horror of the Crime of Imperial Germany, must not blind us to the exigencies of the present hour with new conditions to meet and new tragedies to avert.

Prophet Honored at Home

THE Indianapolis Star, leading daily of Indiana, said editorially, following the election of Dr. Taylor as president of the convention:

"The election by the Northern Baptist convention of Dr. Frederick E. Taylor as president of the organization was at once a deserved compliment to that gentleman and a gratification not only to the congregation of the First Baptist Church, in which, as pastor, he has long served acceptably, but is pleasing to Indianapolis people generally. As the head of this large and influential church he has of course been associated in many ways with citizens of all classes and creeds and has established himself as a man of fine quality and character, in whom every confidence is placed.

"Dr. Taylor has made many friends in Indianapolis outside of his parish as well as within it in the years of his residence here, and this recognition by the conference, a real honor of which any minister might properly be proud, is regarded by them as well earned and as a just appreciation of his abilities and deserts. Dr. Taylor has gone his way in Indianapolis quietly and without self seeking and has won his way to popular esteem by sheer force of character and steadfast devotion to his labors."

A Good Platform

GIFFORD PINCHOT, Pennsylvania gubernatorial nominee, states plainly his attitude on the liquor issue: "If I am elected I will work to put the state in line with the Eighteenth Amendment and with the national legislation in support of it and to put an end to the partnership now existing under the Woner law between the state of Pennsylvania and the criminal combination of bootleggers and corrupt politicians. I will do my best to drive all saloons out of this commonwealth."

The Uplifted Christ in the Conquest of the World

The gospel cannot be changed and it cannot be given up without darkening the one and only hope of the world. "Bengal is the Verdun of Hinduism. Leave it in our rear untaken and the work of all India is in jeopardy."

By J. C. ROBBINS

I HAVE just returned from months of hard work and rich experience with our missionaries in the great foreign mission battle fields of India and Burma. I return to America more than ever convinced that the gospel of Jesus Christ is all sufficient for the individual, the nation and the world. The gospel cannot be changed and it cannot be given up without darkening the one and only hope of the world. We have been in the strongholds of the three aggressively militant non-Christian religions—Hinduism, Mohammedanism and Buddhism—and I come to you tonight simply as an eye witness to report what I have seen of the conquest of the world by the uplifted Christ.

The sub-continent Empire of India including Burma, with its population of 319,000,000 is today undergoing stupendous changes and is the most interesting country in the world.

The future of this mighty empire is of compelling interest and is one of the major problems of world politics. The very magnitude of the country and the central position which it will hold in the future, makes the question of India one of supreme international importance in the development of the brotherhood of nations, world peace, and the advancement of the kingdom of God. India is such a huge slice of the earth, and contains such an immense population that no person interested in world affairs can ignore its importance. Historically it is the pivot of the Orient. Religiously it occupies a wholly unique place in Asia because it is the home of Hinduism, the birth place of Buddhism, the most important field of Islamic activity.

The Oldest and Largest Field

Our Burma Baptist Mission, the field of Judson, Boardman and Cushing, is the oldest and largest field of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in the non-Christian world. The history, extent, triumphs and solid worth of our Burma Baptist Mission is one of the outstanding achievements of the Baptists of the world. In Burma we have more than 1,000 Baptist churches, 77,000 Baptist church members and nearly 800 schools with 30,000 pupils. These Baptist churches in Burma made up of ten different races, are organized into the All-Burma Baptist Convention. There were 2,300 registered delegates present at the annual meeting of this convention that I attended in October, 1921. The convention is entirely independent and self-supporting. Its president in 1921 was Saya Ba Te, one of the outstanding leaders of Burma. The convention has invested funds of Rs. 84,500 and the income last year was Rs. 16,937.

One of the Chief Glories

The convention supports in whole or in part, evangelists in fifteen fields and in addition, the Baptist churches of Burma support the Burma Baptist Orphanage where there are eighty children and a budget of Rs. 6515. One of the chief glories of our Baptist work in Burma is the Christian influence of the large educational work we are doing. These schools are Christian schools and from the governor of the province to the humblest Burmese and Karen parents, the Christian character and object of these schools is clearly recognized. The schools for girls of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society at Morton Lane in Moulmein, Kemendine in Rangoon and Mandalay, are schools that are an honor to that society and to our denomination. As I visited these schools, I was impressed that here we have one of the greatest forces for leavening and elevating the home and individual life of Burma. In the foreground of our educational work in Burma is Judson College, the one Christian College of the province. Judson College has a faculty of 22 men and women, young, enthusiastic, well trained, thoroughly Christian and whole-heartedly devoted to their work. There are 138 students in the college, thirty-two of whom are women. The success of Judson College has been made possible through the realization that true education is Christian education and can be imparted only by Christians of the highest ideals. The college church, composed of students and teachers of Judson College, Cushing

High School and our Baptist Normal School, maintains a strong organization with the Bible school and weekly prayer meetings. Last year this college church contributed Rs. 900 for the support of one of its own graduates who is working as a missionary in a far frontier district.

The Karen Baptist Mission in Burma is one of the great triumphs of the foreign missionary movement and one of the outstanding miracles of modern missions. It is generally recognized that the Karen race owes its marked development and the leading place it holds today among the races of Burma to the American Baptist Mission.

The Best Organized Mission

The Sgaw Karen Mission in Bassein is probably the best organized and most successful mission of any denomination anywhere in the world. The Sgaw Karen Christians of this mission are organized into the Bassein Sgaw Karen Baptist Association with 150 self-supporting churches with an average membership of 100. From the beginning of the Bassein Sgaw Karen Mission under Dr. Abbott, later under Dr. Carpenter and now under Dr. Nichols, these Karens have had as missionaries men of vision and ability who have led them through great undertakings, both for themselves and for others, and from the beginning these Karens have been developed under lines of self-support. The churches of this association maintain 170 village schools. They also have a boarding school at Bassein with an enrollment of 760 boys and girls from the lower standards through the high school. Because of their endowment and voluntary contributions the Karens of this field are able to offer a full high school course to Karen boys and girls no matter how poor, at a nominal cost of Rs. 22 per year. The finest school and chapel building in the province is the new Ko Tha Byu Memorial Hall just completed at a cost of Rs. 432,000. There is no American money in this building. The building includes, in addition to twenty-two large class rooms, offices and library, an auditorium seating 1,500. In the block tower is a set of American chimes. The entire building is lighted with reflecting electric light from the school's own power plant which supplies electricity for all the buildings on the compound. Two thousand people were crowded into the building when I preached the dedicatory sermon Sunday evening, February 5, 1922. Sunday afternoon many of the pastors and laymen told in their simple way how the money for the building was secured. I have never heard more interesting stories of faith, consecration and stewardship.

The vision, faith, and missionary passion of the missionaries, together with the zeal of the Christians of Burma, especially the Karens, have pushed our Baptist work to the far frontiers of Burma, and hundreds and thousands of Shans, Kachins, Chins, Lisus, and Lahus have been won to Christ and brought into the church.

In February, 1922, we visited the Lahu and Wa Associations in far Kengtung on the northeast frontier of Burma and across the border in Yunnan Province, China. There were 1,300 delegates present at the association at Bana village in Yunnan. The Wa and Lahus of this district are accepting Christianity by the hundreds and thousands. Our missionary, Mr. Young and his two ordained preachers, Thra Mg Bu and Ainan, baptized 2,507 in January and February, 1922. Thra Mg Bu on his graduation from the Theological Seminary ten years ago, worked among the Lahus on the Kengtung field for several years. Then he returned to lower Burma as pastor of the Karen church in the Henzada field. In response to a call for him to assist Mr. Young, this church of less than one hundred members voted to give him a year's leave of absence, at the same time continuing his salary and paying all his traveling expenses to and from this distant mission field.

The Lowest of the Low

The South India Mission has a long record of missionary achievements that places this mission to the forefront of the foreign mission fields of the world. From the first, the work has been almost entirely among the outcaste Madigas, the lowest of the low. Considering the character and the deplorable needs of these depressed, and degraded people and the almost insurmountable difficulties of the field, the numbers brought into the church and their spiritual, moral, intellectual, and social development under the influence of Christianity is a most striking evidence of the divine origin and character of the foreign missionary enterprise. The missionaries here are convinced that in addition to the classes which have already been reached in such large numbers by the gospel in our Baptist fields, there are millions of caste people to be won. Many among those are giving unwonted attention to the word of Christ and there are indications in some quarters that a mass movement among the Sudras may not be very far distant.

We spent Christmas day with our missionaries at Madras, being the

Today

LORD, give me strength, I pray,
To live my life this day:
To live it right,
With all my might,
Without mistake,
And for Thy sake.

When fear besets my way,
Let me the question lay
Before Thy throne,
Where all is known:
Where what is best
Will pass Thy test.

Should my day be drear,
Keep Thou me near
To hear Thy voice,
And thus rejoice
That Thou art mine,
And I am Thine.

So when my day is done,
Then to my Home I come,
In Thee my trust,
For Thou art just:
With me Thou art,
And ne'er will part.

guests of Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Ferguson. I preached Sunday morning at 8 o'clock to our English-speaking Baptists and again at ten o'clock to the Telugu church, 400 people crowding the building. At the conclusion of the service, twenty-seven Telugu young men and women were baptized and received into the church. The Telugu pastor of this church is a graduate of Madras Christian college, a man of outstanding ability and marked qualities of leadership. The Christmas offering of this congregation was Rs. 104, representing 208 days' wages.

There is no subject of more consequence to Christianity in India than that of the independence of the India church. In these days of intense nationalism there is a growing desire on the part of the Indian Christians to manage their own affairs independent of the missionary. The question of the transfer of responsibility from the mission to the church is one of the major problems of foreign missionary administration. In this matter the South India Mission has taken commendable action, and has transferred all the work of the Kandukur field to the Home Mission Society of the Telugu Baptist churches. The Telugu churches have accepted this responsibility with deep seriousness, and are carrying on the work in this field in a most acceptable way. This movement toward self-government has justified itself and undoubtedly another field will in the near future, be transferred to the convention. The comprehensive scope of the work of the Telugu Mission, its solid character and the influence of the institutions organized in the mission, together with the growing independence and initiative of the South India churches and the Telugu Baptist Convention, make us most hopeful of the future of this work. The kingdom of God is advancing in the Lone Star Mission.

Gaps in Our Line

The Christian work in the rich, undeveloped province of Assam with its many tribes and races is largely in the hands of the American Baptists. We occupy the field from one end of the province to the other and have mission stations in both the valley and the hills. There are many gaps in our line, however, that must be closed within the next few years if Northern Baptists are to measure up to their high and sacred responsibility. In this province, our most notable work is in the Garo Hills. Here we have nineteen well organized central churches and each church has as many as fifteen or twenty branch churches. Six hundred and thirty-four members were received into these churches by baptism in 1920 and 932 in 1921. These Garo churches are organized into an association with a yearly attendance at the association meetings of a thousand or more people. At one of their last association meetings, one matter was considered somewhat unusual in its character and it is doubtful if any other Baptist association was ever called upon to consider a matter of such a nature. It was found necessary to take action in regard to the depredations of man-killing tigers in the Garo Hills. In one single section of the hills more than 140 people were killed by man-eating tigers during the two preceding years. The association petitioned the government to take more active measures to get rid of these tigers. The government responded by contributing fifty more guns in this section and the situation has been relieved.

In the Naga Hills there are forty-six organized Baptist churches and thirty-eight village schools. There are 4,000 Christians and these churches are organized into a strong association. These former head-hunters contribute more than a thousand dollars annually to Christian work in this district. There is every reason to hope that within a few years this work will be entirely self-supporting.

The latest mission station to be opened in Assam, is Kangpokpi in the native state of Manipur, located in the northeast part of the province and about as large as the state of Massachusetts. Manipur State is ruled over by a native prince or Maharajah. The state constitutes a fertile plain surrounded by mountains. The people in the plains are Manipuris or Hindus while those of the hills are Tangkul Nagas and Kukis. The hill people were wild head hunters, but have recently accepted Christianity in large numbers. In addition to our education and evangelistic work within the state, at Kangpokpi we are building a central school for boys and girls, a hospital and a leper asylum. In 1915, after twenty years of work in the field, there were sixty-three church members. When I was in Assam in 1918 there were still less than 300. Today there are 1,435 church members, 569 having been baptized in 1921. Five hundred and fifty-five representatives from twenty-five different villages of the state were in attendance at the association meetings.

India is the most difficult mission field in the world and Bengal is the most difficult field in India. It has been well called the Verdun of Hinduism. Baptists in Bengal-Orissa hold one of the most difficult and at the same time one of the most important sectors in the great foreign mission battle line of the church of the living God in the non-Christian world. As Bengal thinks today, India thinks tomorrow. Bengal is the first province in intellectual attainment in India. The poet Tagore and many of the Indian nationalistic leaders are natives of Bengal. Bengal has been the home of the Swaraj movement, which is now sweeping India. The people of Bengal have had until the present at least, more national pride than any other province, and hence they have clung most stubbornly to Hinduism, their national religion. The Bengali is probably the most conceited Indian. His education, social position, Aryan blood all combine to make him feel superior and make him most difficult to reach with the gospel message. When the day comes that Bengal shall have been won for Christ, the conquest of India will then be at hand.

Baptists of the Bengal-Orissa field have a home mission society and the churches are organized into a yearly meeting or the Bengal-Orissa Baptist Convention. All the evangelistic work of this mission has been transferred to the evangelistic board of this convention. This board is composed of nine members, six of whom are Indians, and recently a prominent lawyer at Balasore, a graduate of our Christian schools, has given up his law practice and a large income to accept appointment as the first Indian Christian in this mission to be placed in full charge of a mission station. This gentleman, Mr. Mohopatra is now in charge of the work at Santipore and has already been greatly blessed in winning a number of Hindus to Christianity. Dr. Murphy, our veteran missionary of the Bengal-Orissa Mission concluded his address at the annual mission conference with these words: "For a century we have been trying to arouse India, a somnolent giant. We had almost despaired of even quieting his snore, but behold, today that giant is sitting up. Caste, the unquestioned social order of India for a thousand years, while still in the field, is denounced or condoned by the masses. The priests are frantic in the realization of their waning power. We of only twenty years of service have witnessed miracles. The impossible has come to pass. As a result of their contact with the missionary and his life in India, unnumbered thousands enumerated as Hindus possess a new outlook on life. They have turned away from degrading customs and are seeking for more light from Christianity. The little leaven is in very fact leavening the whole lump. Bengal is the Verdun of Hinduism. Leave it in our rear untaken and the work of all India is in jeopardy. We must take Bengal at all costs."

Christianity is firmly established and deeply rooted in Assam, Burma, Bengal-Orissa and India. Throughout the entire empire the churches of all evangelical denominations are growing in independence and self-support and are becoming a steadily increasing influence in the life of the people. From a former state of indifference and lethargy there is everywhere in the Indian empire an awakening and eagerness of life, and India makes a tremendous appeal to the Christian who is eager to bring light and truth and the redemptive message of Jesus Christ to the hearts of men and the life of the world.

Little Kindnesses

IF you were toiling up a weary hill
Bearing a load beyond your strength to bear,
Straining each nerve untiringly, and still Stumbling and losing foothold here and there,
And each one passing by would do so much
As give one upward lift and go their way,
Would not the slight reiterated touch
Of help and kindness lighten all the day?

If you were breasting a keen wind, which tossed
And buffeted and chilled you as you strove,
Till, baffled and bewildered quite, you lost
The power to see the way, and aim and move,

And one, if only for a moment's space,
Would give you shelter from the bitter blast,
Would you not find it easier to face
The storm again when the brief rest was past?

There is no little and there is no much;
We weigh and measure and define in vain.
A look, a word, a light responsive touch
Can be the ministers of joy to pain.
A man can die of hunger walled in gold,
A crumb may quicken hope to stronger breath,
And every day we give or we withhold
Some little thing which tells for life or death.

President Taylor's Message to Northern Baptists

THREE incidents at the convention made a deep impression on my mind. So deep indeed that many things very important and necessary to the work of our denomination have taken a minor place in my memory.

The first incident was at the close of a long afternoon session. The weather was torrid, the audience had dwindled until not more than one-third of the delegates were there and most of these were doubtless staying more from a sense of duty than from great interest in the proceedings. Everybody was tired and ready for adjournment when a man from Russia was granted an opportunity to make a few remarks. He could not speak English well enough for public address and so spoke through an interpreter. I do not remember anything in particular that he said, but I shall never forget the passion with which he spoke. He not only spoke with dead earnestness but his whole being seemed to be on fire with his message.

The tired audience awoke. They forgot to use their fans. They broke into applause again and again. He spoke for perhaps twenty minutes. As I said, I do not remember what he said, but I shall never forget what I saw. I saw the great masses of the people in Russia as Jesus saw the multitudes in Palestine—as sheep without a shepherd, and I think that everyone who was present felt moved with compassion for the Russian people. At the close of the address men crowded around that man to grip his hand—to thank him—to encourage him. One of the delegates whom I do not know said to me, "That's what we need more than theological agitation. We need heart interest." That delegate was right. What helped us most at the convention? Was it not that which appealed to our hearts?

The second incident that made a lasting impression on my mind came one day when one of our beloved missionaries called me away from the platform. Literally crowding me into a corner under the stage he poured out his heart to me, the burden of his plea being that I should use any influence I had to have him sent back to the foreign field. The financial crisis of the Foreign Mission Society made it seem necessary to detain several missionaries in America.

Here was a man who had given forty-one years to foreign service, a veteran with the marks of the toil of years in a hot country, actually pleading to get back on the firing line, at a time when one would think he would be seeking retirement and rest. I shall never forget that plea. It made me see what the failure of the year's program meant.

I had been thinking of it in terms of budgets, of deficits, the societies in debt, and so forth. Now I began to realize that a new responsibility was on me as a minister of the Gospel. If I had done my best no one would be kept home. The question is not, had the program failed, or had the Board of Promotion failed? But, rather, had I failed? Was I responsible in any way for the failure of our program?

Well, the missionary is going back, thank God! He will undoubtedly finish his service out there where he longs to be, but if we had all been doing our best to send the gospel of Christ to a lost world that missionary would never have spent half of his furlough time worrying about being sent back. Heart interest again, you see. This is thinking in terms of life.

The third incident that I shall never forget happened Sunday morning. Thousands were in the tabernacle and all who were there were thrilled by the sermon of Dr. Beaven. He came into an atmosphere that had been cleared of controversy. He came knowing that thousands would be praying for him and he came in the power of the Spirit of God. And the message? Not a discussion of theology, but a note of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world." For nearly an hour he spoke to our hearts. We heard our Master's voice; we saw these restless millions as sheep without a shepherd. He made us see and feel the need and then he called us to a new dedication of life and money and talent. How our hearts burned within us as he spoke!

When we rose to sing "The Son of God goes forth to war" some of us could not sing very well but we promised ourselves that God helping us we would follow in his train. In that hour we were one, we thought as one, we felt the love of Christ in our souls.

Oh, that the spirit that filled our lives that Sunday morning might possess every minister and every layman and every editor for one year. Shall it not be so? Can we not, shall we not say that for this year, yes and for the next one, we shall preach and talk and write with only one purpose in view, the completion of the task which God has laid upon us as our part in the cause of Christ at this time?

The missionary is going back, the Russian's plea has made some of us think as Jesus thought about the multitude. God grant that the vision of that Sunday morning may not fade. "The Son of God goes forth to war." In genuine humility, with prayerful boldness and in a sacrificial spirit let us follow in his train.

"The Christ That Leads Onward"

President's address delivered at Thirty-first Anniversary Convention of Baptist Young People's Union of America, at Saint Paul, on June 29.

By CARLETON A. ATWATER

INTO whatever sphere of divine control we look we find that "Forward" is a keynote. As God looked upon this earth, formless and void, with darkness upon the face of the deep. He seemed to cry "Forward until Thy face shall be covered with light and beauty, and thou shalt be the dwelling-place of intelligent and happy beings." All through those creative ages God was moving forward until at last the earth was suitable for the dwelling-place of something higher and better than mere plant and animal existence. With that forward impulse surging in his being God created man, and placed him on earth amid its beauty and its comforts, with the promise of dominion over all else in God's creation.

The Summons

Immediately man was summoned forward into the knowledge and service into which God desired to lead him. And the whole history of God's relationship to man is the unceasing and patient endeavor to bring man into a higher and better state. Into man God put ideals, before him he set a path, around him placed influences, all of which were able to encourage and help men forward. But not until God came in the person of Jesus Christ, walked this earth, mingled with men, met situations which all men meet, and mastering them, did men feel the great thrill of the watchword "Forward." By his life he showed us what our life ought to be. By his death on the cross he broke the fetters of sin that hold us back from the things we ought to reach. By his resurrection he showed us that nothing, not even death, can hinder the progress of the soul. God is ever through Jesus Christ summoning us to go forward.

How fitting, therefore, is the keynote of this thirty-first anniversary convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America—"Forward with Christ." It is the prayer of many friends who are interested in this significant gathering of young people that every session will witness our going forward with the Christ who is here to lead us onward. Do you recall that afternoon of the first resurrection day? Upon receipt of a report that Jesus had risen from the dead, two disciples had hurried from the little suburb of Emmaus to Jerusalem, expecting to see their risen Lord. After hours of watchful waiting and no Lord appearing, with hopes crushed and faith sorely tried, they were on their way home. They were talking of all that had happened, and just when they had stirred up each other's grief to the breaking point, a Stranger joined them, and spoke to them with a tenderness as if he understood. "What communications have ye one with another?" he asked. They stood still, looking sad. After a few moments one of them told him their experience—how One, Jesus, had come into their lives, opening to them new and vital truth, strengthening them and filling them with hope of the establishment of God's kingdom on earth, but that he had been crucified by his enemies, and was buried in a tomb. They told him of the remarkable message of the morning, and how much grieved and disappointed they were that it apparently was untrue. Then this Stranger spoke to them, opening to them the Scriptures bringing to their attention that there had always been a promise from the side of God and a hope in the hearts of God's people that one day there would come into this world of ours One who would reveal to men God and his purposes, who would save men from sin, and at last give up his life as an atonement for the sin of the world, yet on the third day rise from the grave triumphant over the last enemy, death, thus giving assurance and promise of eternal life with God to the believing soul.

They went on in sweet communion, unaware of the rough way until they reached the village and their home. But this Stranger, who later revealed himself to them as their Jesus, "made as though he would go further." And he would have gone on, telling them about God, weaning them from sorrow, thrilling them for service. But for these two disciples who were but men it was "toward evening and the day was far spent" they were tired and hungry. Yet they felt this Stranger drawing them on. They felt he wanted to go further, that he had something more to say to them, that they had something more to learn from him.

No one has ever come in contact with Christ without feeling the onward pull. Indeed if we walk with him a short way, he stimulates us to go further, and the direction he leads is always onward and forward. He never looks back nor wants his followers to do so. Indeed no one is fit to be his follower who once having put his hand to the plough, looks backward. Paul had not gone far with Christ when he cried, "One thing I do, forgetting the things that are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ."

The great artist Sir Joshua Reynolds could not look at any picture remaining in his studio without wishing to retouch it here and there. Though he had worked to have that picture be his very best, yet back in the painter's mind there was always a vision fairer than the completed forms upon the canvas. No one who is trying to pattern his life after that of Christ, will ever be satisfied with the goal of goodness he reaches. For when he has reached that goal there is always another higher up awaiting his effort. In Christ there is that "high calling" ever summoning one onward and upward.

To all men Christ calls "Go forward from sin to righteousness. Accept my death as an atonement for sin, and through faith in me as Saviour and Lord, you shall have the mastery over the world, flesh, and the evil one. Follow me and ye shall not only have life but have it more abundantly, the energy of which will never be exhausted, and the range of which has no limit."

As we have gathered here in the sessions of this significant convention we feel assured of Christ's presence. We have prayed that he might meet with us. We are met in his name, and we claim his promise "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." He is here to talk with us, and to lead us onward into a knowledge of God and his word, into a deeper communion with him and acceptance of his will, and into the giving of our substance and self to his cause.

I. Christ is seeking to lead us onward into a knowledge of God and his manifold revelations.

"That I may know him," cried the Apostle Paul. Of course Paul knew Christ. At any rate, he had begun to know him. He knew him far more intimately than most of us here do, and yet he was conscious that there was a great depth in God that he had not sounded.

A few centuries ago, when Spain was one of the great world powers, she struck on her coinage a Hercules and the words "ne plus ultra"—"No more beyond." She regarded herself as the end of the world. But there was one man who didn't feel satisfied with what he knew about this earth. So he went out from Spain across the trackless ocean and came to this land and made all its treasures available to the whole world. Spain has learned better since that time and on her coinage now she has "Plus ultra"—"More beyond."

During this past year as young people we have gone forward in the time and effort spent in the study of the Bible and those subjects that make for Christian culture. We feel that we have advanced in our knowledge of God and his revelations, yet most of us are conscious of vast treasures of spiritual truth still undiscovered. We feel that there is "more beyond" for us in the knowledge of God and the experience of his power.

The Mountain Top

Many have prayed that these convention days shall put us on the mountain top of vision and revelation, and that Paul's prayer for his Colossian converts might be answered for us "That ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding." Indeed, Christ is here to open to us the Scriptures, to disclose the purposes of God for us his children, to impart that wisdom so vital to religious experience and service. May we put ourselves into the attitude of attention and meditation that shall enable Christ to speak to his messengers the word of truth and life, that shall cause our hearts to "burn within us on the way."

II. Christ is seeking to lead us onward into deeper communion with God.

Such has ever been his purpose for his followers. He was constantly endeavoring to draw his disciples into such communion. By example, by teaching, by model prayer, by exhortation, and by command, he sought to have his disciples draw nearer God. Finally through his great sacrifice upon

IF the educated and influential classes in a community either practice or connive at the systematic violation of laws that seem to them to cross their convenience, what can they expect when the lesson that convenience or a supposed class interest is a sufficient cause for lawlessness has been well learned by the ignorant classes.—Benjamin Harrison in Inaugural Address.

the cross he made possible for every believer an unhindered approach to God. Through that death there is cleansing from the guilt of sin, and power to conquer sin for every believing soul. Through that death there has been provided an access to God. Through the power of the ancient ritual sacrifice the high priest of Israel once a year went through the veil into the Most Holy Place, and prayed in behalf of the people. But when Christ came in human flesh, it was to dedicate a new and living way for us, to God. His flesh became the veil, and through its rending upon the cross, there was opened to every believer, a path that leads to the very heart of God.

Would that we could all realize this privilege through Christ, especially now in the sessions of this convention!

1. For we are seeking in a most critical time in the affairs of the kingdom. The forces of unrighteousness are making a most determined stand against the forces of good. Encouraged by the necessity of retrenchment in many and vital lines of Christian activity, evil is seeking to gain the advantage. The god of war that we thought dead has only been sleeping, and there are agencies now that are trying hard to awaken him to his deeds of slaughter and death. Our cherished free institutions are being attacked. Foundation principles of good government are being assailed. Constitutional laws are being openly violated. Heathen and false religions are taking the offensive. A tremendous world struggle between evil and good is going on. Often it seems as if the forces of evil were triumphing. While in this great convention our forces do not seem small, yet back at the stations of duty from which we have come it sometimes looks as if only a mere handful is struggling in vain to keep righteousness in the earth and hope alive in the human heart, while evil has tremendous resources at her command. Like the servant of Elisha, when he saw he was surrounded by the large army of Syrians seeking to capture him and his master we cry, "Alas, what shall we do?"

Winning His Spurs

2. Oh, we need to get into such communion with God that above the forces of unrighteousness we shall see standing the armies of God ready to come to our help when we call! We need to have our spiritual eyes opened that we may see him standing by. Though the battle may go hard, yet to know that standing by ready to help when we have done our best, is One who is able to bring victory, is a source of inspiration and strength. At the battle of Crecy we are told that the forces under the Black Prince were terribly pressed by a charge of the French cavalry and some of the prince's officers, taking alarm, speeded to the king with the message that his son was hard pressed, and begged for his assistance. The king asked "Is my son dead, or so wounded that he can no longer fight?" "No," was the reply, "but he needs your help." "Return," the king replied, "to those that sent you, and tell them not to send to me as long as my son lives. I command them to let the youth win his spurs." Upon that the forces of the prince charged again and a great victory was won. The presence of the king and his reserve forces gave courage to those who won the fight. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." Through prayer one beholds God and his reserve forces standing by, and he knows that if he will do his best, there will be no defeat, for God is there ready to help him.

3. Christ is here to show us the way to the Father. "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me." During the past year there have enlisted many thousands of young people in the Dally Devotions League, whose purpose is communion with God and his word. But in the face of the needs and critical situations of the present day it is hoped that the privilege and duty of prayer may be so deeply imprinted upon our conscience at these sessions that we shall not only ourselves come into deeper fellowship with God, but shall go back to our respective fields with a desire burning in our hearts to bring the whole church

A Prayer

(Written by members of the Junior High Department of the Lake Ave. Church, Rochester.)

OUR Father in heaven, we thank thee for the world of childhood in which we live. It is so full of wonderful things. New and unexpected pleasures come to us each day and all the time there lies before us the great future with all its unknown dangers and delights.

Bless us as little children who come unto thee this day seeking thy blessing. Help our mothers and fathers to teach us thy will, O God. Help us to find the right paths and keep them forever. May we go out into the world and do thy work wherever we are. Help all the missionaries everywhere who are trying to make the world better. Help all who are discontented and unhappy. Make them happy. Bless all who are sick. Be with those in trouble. Guide the little ones who have been dedicated to thee today so they may grow up to be good men and women. Bless our teachers. Help us to be loyal to our school and church. Forgive us that we so often take for granted the faithful service of those who care for and help us in anyway. For all children everywhere we ask thy gracious and loving care in the name of him who in his gentle strength took the little ones in his arms and blessed them. Amen.

to its knees in prayer and communion with God.

III. Christ is seeking to lead us onward into the full consecration of our substance and self to God.

If we are to give Christ any place in our life, he will soon ask for himself a larger place. Sooner or later we come to see that we will either have to go all the way with Christ or break off companionship. If we are to follow Christ then he will never be satisfied until he can get us to go all the way with him and for him. He wants us to keep nothing back from him.

1. For our Baptist young people no year has witnessed greater progress in the matter of the giving of our substance to the Lord. Other years may have brought a larger amount of money, but no year has seen more real sacrifice. Though a year of financial depression and hardship, yet the record our young people made in their giving is the cause of great rejoicing. While there is no complete record of the actual number of young people tithing, yet there has been a great advance this past year. If other groups of our denomination would show as large percentage of tithers, there would soon be no lack of sufficient funds to carry on the various forward movements in our churches and our conventions.

Christ is here to lead us onward in our giving. He is here to speak through his servants. Certainly with the promises of blessing God has made to those that are faithful in their giving, no young person can afford to give less than his tithe. And yet when once one has come to give his tithe he will find such joy and satisfaction in going that far that he will go onward to lay all his resources and talents on the altar of service for Christ and his kingdom.

Come and Help

2. And yet "the gift without the giver is bare." God would have us give ourselves.

During these days we will be impressed anew with the fact that the greatest need of the world is for that which Christ alone can give. Upon the screen will be thrown scenes of actual conditions of the non-Christian world. Messages will come from lands of ignorance, vice, and suffering. Some will hear the direct call from Macedonia, "Come over and help us." All of us will see fields white unto harvest and realize the need for laborers. What's going to be our response?

When Jesus looked out on the multitude, seeing them as sheep without a shepherd, "He was moved with compassion" which means his love moved forward to help them. If we are walking with Jesus and trying to see the world as he sees it, and to do the things that we feel that he wants done, then there is no question but that our hearts too will be filled with compassion, and we will move forward to help Christ save and heal this world. Certainly we will not behold three-fourths the world unsaved, one half untouched by medical relief or healing, two-thirds in ignorance, vice, superstition, longing for a revelation and experience of him whom instinct declares but does not disclose, without moving forward with our Christ in pity, love, and sacrificial service to help them. That vision is our call. And if we do not go, we will have to admit that after all we have just been following our own convenience, not the Christ who would lead us onward.

Over 1,700 Baptist young people have already enrolled themselves in the Life Service League, pledging themselves with God's help to prepare for and enter some special line of Christian service—some into the Christian ministry, some into missionary work as teachers, evangelists, social service workers, doctors, nurses—all of them ready to make whatever sacrifice Christ shall require and go where he wants them to go. Some have already gone. In fact, for many years, most of the missionaries going out from the homeland to foreign fields, received their first impressions of real service, heard the call, and took the initial training under the influences of the Baptist Young People's Union. These annual conventions have been times when young people have seen the vision of the world's needs, heard Christ calling them to give themselves to special service to him, and have answered that call.

A few years ago there went out from the church of which I am pastor a young woman to a great young people's convention at Toronto. She had but a meagre education, a factory worker with little opportunity for culture, a mother to support. But while listening to the great missionary pioneer statesman, William Ashmore, to China, she beheld a vision of China's needs, heard Christ calling her, obeyed that summons, and gave herself and all upon the altar of missionary service. Coming back home for awhile she studied at night school, found some Chinese and gathered them into a Sunday-school class, then later went on to the Baptist Missionary Training School. Today she is considered one of the most efficient and effective missionaries representing our denomination, a woman of great spiritual influence and power—Melvina Sollmon—Swatow, China—a very direct product of the influence of our Young People's Union.

He Would Go Anywhere

During my first two years at Denison University it was my privilege to be closely associated (one year as my roommate) with another product of the young people's movement. At one time he was a ragged newsboy on the streets of Cleveland. Through the influence of a Sunday school in the slum district he was brought to Christ. He came to Christ fully surrendered and yearning to know all he could about God. Later he united with the First Baptist Church and came in contact with many men and women that were great in intellect and heart. He studied hard his books at school and his acquaintances at church. He spent time in communion with God. His rapid development was marvellous. A yearning for a higher and better education took him to Denison. Lack of funds didn't discourage him. He had unusual business ability. No young man could go out in college vacation, and honestly make more money to support him during the year. He became a good football player, and a leader in the various organizations of college life. While not brilliant yet he was a faithful student. Everybody loved and respected him. No one in college had as many friends as he. Many fine business opportunities were offered him. But all these he turned aside as there was a deep conviction that he ought to be in the Christian ministry. It was while in attendance at one of our great young people's conventions that he seemed to have been unusually impressed with the opportunities and needs of the heathen world. In fact Christ came to him and called him to that consecration that would go anywhere that God wanted him. Graduating from Rochester Seminary, excellent openings for service in prominent churches came to him. But he felt God wanted him in China. How well do I remember when he and his beautiful wife—a Christian nurse—put out to sea. His grasp of the language came quickly. His generous, happy disposition and unselfishness won the love of the Chinese even before they could talk with him. An awful famine and the plague broke out in a nearby province. People were dying by hundreds, even thousands. My friend looked out on that multitude of suffering people who were sheep without a shepherd, and he "was moved with compassion." Though not required by our board or anything but "love of Christ constraining him" he left home, and went to the relief of this stricken people. Time will not allow me to tell all he did for them. At last worn and weary, he turned homeward for a brief rest. But upon arriving there he found that the pestilence was already sweeping into that city, so it was deemed best that the missionaries for their own welfare and the future of the mission work leave that region. But he had not gone far when the ravages of black small-pox laid him low, and after terrible suffering, though most heroically borne, and cared for by a brave wife, alone up on a mountain under a mere thatched work for covering, he went on into the homeland.

At a later fraternity reunion, in speaking of the deep loss we felt in our brother's going, I recall how some said, "It's not right to sacrifice such men as John Cherney for the sake of such a degraded, unappreciative people." But John Cherney did not think so. He had been with his Master, had met him face to face, had seen humanity through his Master's eyes, had heard Christ's call, and had denied himself, taken up the cross, and followed him. Neither did those stricken Chinese feel that his life had been unwisely spent. Indeed through his sacrifice that whole region became interested in the Christ he served, and many of them saved.

As Christ comes to you in the sessions of this great convention I plead with you to listen to him. He knows what is best for you. Then follow him as he leads you onward into a knowledge of God and his manifold revelations, into a deeper communion with God and acceptance of his will, into a full consecration of your substance and self to his cause.

In closing let me repeat a few verses that meant much to me as I stood face to face with Christ and heard him calling me forward with him.

*"I had walked life's path with easy tread,
Had followed where comfort and pleasure led;*

*And then by chance in a quiet place
I met my Master, face to face.*

*With station and rank and wealth for a goal,
Much thought for the body, but none for the soul,*

*I had entered to win in life's mad race,
When I met my Master, face to face.*

*I had built my castles and reared them high,
Till their towers had pierced the blue of the sky;*

*I had sworn to rule with iron mace,
When I met my Master face to face.*

*I met him and knew him and blushed to see
That his eyes, full of sorrow, were fixed on me;*

*And I faltered and fell at his feet that day,
While my castles melted and vanished away;*

*Melted and vanished, and in their place
I saw naught else but my Master's face;*

*And I cried aloud: 'O make me meet
To follow the marks of thy wounded feet!'*

*My thought is now for the souls of men.
I have lost my life to find it again,*

*E'er since alone in that holy place
My Master and I stood, face to face."*

The Rod of Their Ability

An old debt stood between this church and the Promised Land.

By COE HAYNE

DURING fourteen years "that debt" had been the means of blocking all progress in the First Baptist Church of —, a fairly prosperous town in the Middle West. It readily can be understood how this might happen. At first there had been a conscientious and very creditable desire on the part of the leaders of the church to assume no obligation before the old one was discharged. But gradually "that debt" became an established institution as well recognized as the annual meeting and the ladies' aid society. The old rattle trap was brought out on all sorts of occasions to be used as a vehicle to give all progressive measures free rides to oblivion. The church membership, as a whole, became confirmed in the conviction that it could not be paid. Then on a certain Sabbath morning the congregation, at that time without a pastor, found in the pulpit a broad-shouldered, genial stranger who represented the missionary society that has stood back of many churches in their early struggles.

At the close of the sermon the man in the pulpit said: "Your trustees told me last night that they were ready to deed your church property to the society I represent because the mortgage of $3,000 which this society holds cannot be paid.

"I do not wish to receive the deed of this property and the reason for my reluctance is clear to me.

"I am told by some of your members that a mistake was made when the church borrowed money to erect this meeting house. I do not believe that a mistake was made. It is a good building and was constructed at a reasonable cost.

"Now, my friends, are you ready to say with me that any move in behalf of the kingdom is a move in the right direction provided it is made under God's command? I believe that you were guided by our Heavenly Father when you built this church and I urge you to pay the interest on the loan and renew the mortgage.

"I am told that inasmuch as the loan can never be repaid it will be foolish and useless to renew the mortgage. My answer to this objection is to state once more that nothing under God's direction is either foolish or useless.

"The Red Sea stood between Moses and the Land of Promise and Moses had nothing but a rod with which to divide the waters, but he did as God directed and made use of what means he possessed. It seems to me that you have allowed this old debt to stand between you and the Land of Promise.

"I attended your Sunday school this morning and looked into the faces of 113 boys and 100 girls. I had a view of the Land of Promise. Nothing can shake my conviction that God was directing you when you built this church. All that I ask of you is to raise the rod of your ability and let God do the rest."

In less than fifteen minutes the interest money was in the hands of the visitor. This accomplished, a leading member of the church stood up and stated that he was willing to give $500 on condition that the entire debt was discharged within a year. Hardly was he seated when an ex-gambler jumped to his feet.

"I'll give $100 if this debt is raised by tomorrow night," he said.

Others followed. Within thirty minutes $1,800 in checks and currency was collected. Before the end of the following day, $4,000 was in one of the local banks to the credit of the church.

Annual Convention, B. Y. P. U. of A.

there teachers who have become so much absorbed in the specialty to which they are devoted that their religious life has wilted. This observation has sometimes suggested that if they knew more they might believe less, and they are unwilling to take that risk.

"But the fault is not with education. There is no conflict between mentality and spirituality. Our Lord is king of the truth, and nothing that is true will alienate us from him.

"We had better note that whether we fear education or not, our young people have decided that they are going to have it. These last years have given tremendous emphasis to the need of technical training, and the most ambitious, independent, and resourceful of our young people will seek better equipment for life. All of our institutions of higher learning are crowded with them.

"The only choice which is left us is to see that if possible they secure that education in an atmosphere which is favorable to the things of the spirit.

"It is important to note that in religion especially is education needed. No other department of our thought is so full of 'isms' and vagaries. Religion lies so close to the center of our being that there is danger that we will be interested in any alluring and impressive novelty which is presented to us.

"It should be noted also that in these days there is need of more education than ever before. There are more things to be known. It requires more to be a 'well-informed person' than it did years ago.

"Moreover, there is a higher level of intelligence in our country than in that in which our fathers and mothers lived. There is more competition of better equipped young people along every line of human endeavor.

"Nowhere is this fact more significant than on our foreign mission fields. There was a time when it was thought that if a young man was real good, he might be a missionary. We have learned that more than this is necessary. Men of the keenest minds of our day are to be found among the orientals. The best mental equipment of which we are capable is none too good for the demands of the foreign field. A text which all of our young people should hold constantly before them is Paul's advice to Timothy: 'Study to show thyself approved unto God.'

The Morning of the Second Day

The keynote for this day was "Forward with Christ in our giving." The speaker was Miss Jessie Burrall, director of religious education, Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., and teacher of the famous "Burrall Class." Miss Burrall not only belongs to the young people of Missouri but to all of us throughout the United States and Canada. She burned into the hearts of the delegates the need for a great program of tithing and stewardship as the only solution for the missionary and benevolent programs of the Baptist denomination. Outline of her address on "Joyous Stewardship" follows:

"Jazz is not a vital force in itself. It is only the noise of the flood of the youth power of our land sweeping over the country without the guidance of idealism.

"Our boys and girls are innately decent. They are as fine a lot as earth ever saw. Do not let the antics of the 3 per cent who are the froth on the waters blind you to the power of the 97 per cent who make up the body of the stream. But their innate idealism must be used in great tasks or it, too, will evaporate in jazz.

"Joyous stewardship! We have advertised the Christian life as a blank and a blot long enough. Let's tell the truth for once: That the spiritual life, taught by Christ, is actually as he said it would be, a fountain of joy, of achievement, of love.

"Stewardship? Tithing? Ugly words? No, they are keys to unlock this fountain. Thousands of our B. Y. P. U., young men and girls, are singing over the country to the stirring chorus of 'Are you from Dixie?'

'Are you a tither?

A happy tither?

Do you turn one-tenth back unto the Lord?

Well, you should be one,

Your duty's not done,

Until you share your income with him!

For blessings without number he will shower on you,

Pressed down, running over, in his promise true.

Are you a tither?

A happy tither?

Come, be a tither, too!

"Tithing does not mean a long faced sacrifice, giving up of a whole tenth of a meager income just for stern duty. It means a good participation in the great work of telling to others the joy of the Christian life.

"The tither takes whatever he finds in his pay envelope. He rejoices over it. He blesses it as Jesus blessed the loaves and fishes. Then he breaks it. If it is $25 a week, he takes out $2.50 out first for his Christian work. Then he uses the rest as he sees fit, letting the joy in his heart flood over with here a dime and there a quarter and often a five-dollar bill for this or that church need—over and above the tithes.

"Have you ever tried it? Have you ever entered your money in the great world program of Baptists?

"Tis a program deserving your highest allegiance. It includes eyes for the blind, physically in hospitals, spiritually in missions, mentally in schools and colleges. It is even now functioning stupendously the world around for world peace, economic prosperity and universal brotherhood. Through stewardship and tithing you can have a share in the sweep of it. You can feel the throb of a world enterprise.

"And you will feel a new vitality, an unexpected sense of being alive, flooding your being. If you bless and break joyously enough you will grow younger, handsomer, richer every day!"

Saturday Morning

The day's thought was "Forward with Christ in our devotional life." Dr. Hunt again spoke to the convention on "The Stewardship of Prayer." Dr. Hunt stated that: "Prayer is the supreme opportunity and privilege of the human spirit. It belongs to us all. Everybody prays. Man has been defined as a 'praying animal.' All pray 'in a pinch.' When the storm gets bad; when the doctor comes two or three times a day and there is little encouragement to give; when we are about to 'go over the top' in the cold clammy gray of an early morning and are wondering whether we shall ever come back; then we all pray. It is the universal refuge of the children of the Father. It will be obvious that if we are in right relations with the Father, we shall share his purpose (1) for ourselves and (2) for the world." Dr. Hunt called attention to some of the hindrances to prayer: 1. Little sense of need. 2. Mental puzzles. 3. Chattering wrong purposes. 4. Indifference.

In discussing "helps" to prayer Dr. Hunt said: "When the little child begins to reach out his hands to father and stumble toward him, he may be sure of help. And, the Father does not lose interest in the appeal because it is awkward and untaught. It is encouraging to hear even such a man as Paul say 'The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. We may not feel that we know the syntax and grammar of heaven, but that is not essential to real prayer. As our experience in the spiritual life grows, our prayer life will develop also. The experience of others will help us in our training to pray. It is only as we come into relation to him that he can give things to us."

Special Note

The Young People's topic for May 20, 1923, will be "The Stewardship of Supplication." The B. Y. P. U. of America plans to put this great address of Dr. Hunt into pamphlet form for use among the young people's societies throughout the United States and Canada. Announcement will be made in due time.

The topic for February 18, 1923, will be "Stewardship of Substance." The B. Y. P. U. of America plans to publish Miss Burrall's address on "The Dynamics of Stewardship," for use in the young people's societies on that date.

Sunday Morning Prayer Meeting

This was held at 7 o'clock Sunday, in the First Baptist Church, St. Paul. The audience practically filled the great auditorium of the First Church. Mr. E. T. Clissold led the singing. The service was in charge of Rev. G. A. Clarke, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Edmonton, Alberta. This is one of the great services of the convention. The young people gather, not to hear addresses, but to pray, and pray they did. The very power house of heaven seemed to be running at full capacity. Surely all heaven must have been listening in as the young people broadcasted the deepest desires of their hearts.

Evening Programs

In addition to Mr. Vinton's illustrated lectures there were other attractive features. On Tuesday evening, preceding the opening of the convention, the choir, under the leadership of Mr. E. T. Clissold, broadcasted several numbers over the radio. Later reports indicated that radio fans enjoyed the program.

On Wednesday evening, General Secretary White gave a brief address over the radio, announcing the opening of the convention, outlining various features of the program, etc.

All evening addresses were of an inspirational nature and were delivered by men of note from all parts of the country.

RELIGION AT TWENTY-ONE

This was the subject of an address Thursday evening by Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y. Mr. Clausen is in a class all by himself. As usual, he

"I Was in Prison and Ye Came unto Me"

The friendless man in prison finds a friend who evinces faith in him.

A REPORT issued by the Chicago Federation of Churches contains a heartening account of the work maintained by the churches of Chicago in the bridewell and the jail.

A Reporter on Prisoners' Needs

A Chicago newspaper man who lived in disguise as a prisoner in the Cook county jail writes: "The insidious propaganda that is spread by the prisoners in the jails attacks a man's mind not so much as his soul. It destroys his convictions and sets up a philosophy of self-defiance to society. One gets the habit of thinking the way a crook thinks. 'Try a new line,' was the urgent invitation. 'Try this here stunt o' mine when ye get out.' The average crook is not primarily evil. I found none who were repellent in every respect. In nearly all I found a glowing friendliness, good humor, even gentleness. They remind me of nothing so much as rude, untamed, passionate, self-centered savages. What they need is a new Messiah to carry the gospel of civilization among them."

A Burglar Tried a New Line

There is a story of a highly skilled burglar of another city who resolved to try a new line. He picked up a Bible. Gazing at its printed lines as some sort of a fetish or leading through the pages as if turning some sort of prayer wheel, he exclaimed, at length, "God help me! I don't know how to pray, but God help me! That's what I want you to do, help me!" After this, he rushed out * * * and felt that some power was helping him. Next day he went to the Dudley Street Baptist Church and was inducted into a Bible class. They made him feel as much at home as if he were in prison. It was the first time outside of prison he had ever been so integral a part even for an hour of so large a social group of men. He made good. He tried another line and succeeded.

The Story of Lucky Baldwin

After a criminal career of twenty-five years, on a cold night in November, 1907, one who had a national reputation among his fellows as "Lucky Baldwin" tried a new line. He drifted into the Jerry McCauley Mission of New York City "for a cup of coffee and the solace of religion." There he found Christ. He was cold, hungry, thirsty for drink and penniless. He could not read. He could not write. He could scarcely speak English intelligible to a world outside of crookdom. The lure of the coffee brought him into the presence of those who were in possession of something which was foreign to his soul. He realized that they were different and asked what he might do to come into possession of this new life. The way was pointed out. With resolute purpose and iron will he set out upon it and to this day has never turned back. Such, in brief, is the early life history of Christopher J. Balfe, the representative of the Chicago Church Federation at the House of Correction, popularly known as the bridewell.

Pulling Others Up to His Level

Speaking of Mr. Balfe's work in the bridewell, Mr. MacFarlane, in a book entitled "Those Who Came Back," observes: "The preacher on his part knows those men, many of them personally. He knows the stride in which they think, he knows the rhythm of their lives and he skillfully turns the story of the prodigal son or the crucifixion account by John into the weird underworld and drops it into the minds of these prisoners. * * * He knows that amid the viciousness and depravity and cold suspicion of these men, there are rare simplicities of character, and not only men of occasional good impulse, but men of iron will, of unbreakable spirit, who, if once started right would go right to the end of their days. The bottom streak of Lucky Baldwin's character was loyalty. He had climbed out of the depths. He had got his feet upon the rocks. He wanted to spend all his days pulling others up beside him."

This Poor Man Cried

"Arriving in Chicago, they took me to the Harrison Street Station, then to the Cook County Jail, where I was kept three months awaiting trial. It was in this place that I first heard and saw Lucky Baldwin.

His story impressed me. Here was a man who had been like me, and God saved him. He knows how to sympathize, help and advise. He believes God is love and salvation is real. 'This poor man cried and the Lord heard him and saved him out of all his troubles.'

"For the friendless man in prison, to find a friend who evinces faith in him and his ability for success is truly one of the big things of life. I cried out for purity and for a regenerated character. Jesus responded with a tender commiseration. I want a chance to prove that I am not a monster of wickedness after my bitter experience. I would rather starve than to touch what is not my own. This bitter lesson is bound to make me scrupulously careful to shun my past peculiar temptations. Our worthy chaplain gets all the praise for showing me to Jesus."

A Mother's Thanks

"I am writing again to thank you for the interest you have taken in my son and for all the good you are doing him and all the rest of the boys there. I know there has been a change in him by the way he writes me and I can lay it all to your good advice and endless prayers."

Statistics for 1921

"Of a total of 225 prisoners interviewed," Mr. Balfe reports, "129 were married and ninety-six were single, and of this number I was able to obtain the release of sixteen, either by influencing friends of the inmates or by acting as mediator between husband and wife." He obtained jobs for nineteen, converted twenty-seven, and was able to influence forty-three to become members of a pocket testament league—the inmate signing a pledge in the front of the Testament, promising to read a chapter a day. He also informs friends of the prisoners as to their circumstances and permissible wants; also writes letters for those unable to do so, as well as acts the part of agent for many an anxious mother. * * * He made 140 outside visits concerning prisoners' affairs, made eighty-nine phone calls, wrote and sent ninety-one letters, united fourteen families, received visits from forty women interested in either their sons or husbands who are inmates, was the direct influence in bringing forty-three men back to their church and distributed approximately 1,800 tracts of spiritual literature and New Testaments.

Visits to the Jail

Once a week for a day or less, Mr. Balfe visits the prisoners in the county jail. He gives especial attention to those who are there waiting to be executed. The officers and employees show the same appreciation and respect for him there as at the bride-well. Following up the work which Miss Lucy A. Hall began last year among the women of the jail, the woman's department is now assuming definite responsibility for work among them and has asked Mrs. J. W. Lear to call at the jail regularly in the interest of the women incarcerated there. More than 10,000 men and women are annually imprisoned in the bridewell and the jail.

The New Hampshire Confession of Faith

By JOHN BUNYAN LEMON

THE famous New Hampshire Confession, itself, was never adopted by the state convention that appointed the committee that framed it." Shall we let this statement go down into history unchallenged? Not only in the president's address but in the remarks of the distinguished speakers who opposed the adoption of this confession, this statement was repeated with emphasis with another statement also of the same color to the effect that this confession was put forward in the interests of proclaiming to the outside world what the Baptists were standing for, rather than as a creed for Baptists themselves to profit by.

I am not disposed to argue the question as to the wisdom of adopting the New Hampshire Confession. I prefer the substitute motion. But in the interests of historical accuracy, I believe that the New Hampshire Confession was grievously misrepresented on the convention platforms, and that the matter ought to be set right.

There is a book called "The Baptists of New Hampshire" which has been pretty widely circulated and may be found in many public libraries of our country. It was published in 1902 by the New Hampshire Convention and copyrighted by that convention. I did not myself write any of the chapters of that book except the introduction. But I was appointed by the New Hampshire Convention as chairman of a committee to edit that book.

The chapters that deal with the history of this Confession may have been abbreviated somewhat by my blue pencil, but the facts as published were put together by Rev. William Hurlin, a scholarly gentleman of real worth, who had been twenty-two years secretary of the convention, and who had in his custody all the records from the beginning. On pages 50-57 in this book, the history of the declaration of faith is given, not in Mr. Hurlin's words, but in quotations from the original records in his possession.

Was it the purpose of this declaration of faith to show to the outside world what Baptists believe? Can you get that idea out of the original records? Here is the quotation from the original minutes, under date of June 24, 1830:

"Whereas, The Baptist denomination of Christians is believed to be united in their views of the important and essential doctrines and practice of our holy religion (although their declarations of faith are not in precisely the same language as it is desirable they should be), therefore Resolved, that Brethren N. W. Williams, Wm. Taylor, and I. Person be a committee to prepare and present at our next annual session, such a Declaration of Faith and Practice, together with a Covenant, as may be thought agreeable and consistent with the views of all our churches in this state."

Is it not clear that the idea was conformity and not publicity?

The Baptists in those days were as fond of referring things to special or standing committees as they are today. The history shows that these articles were discussed, amended and referred, received and referred again until they were thoroughly trimmed down to the satisfaction of everybody. The finishing touches were put on by the board of trustees of the convention, to whom the convention had referred the matter for that purpose, and in the name of the convention approved and ordered published. The records show that this was done Jan. 15, 1833, in the following words:

"Resolved, that the Declaration of Faith and Covenant prepared by Brethren Stow and Brown, and now read before the Board of this Convention, are entitled to their unanimous approbation, and are by them cordially recommended to the adoption of the churches.

"Resolved, That the copy of the Declaration of Faith, etc., be offered to Bro. Daniel Chase of Concord, on condition that he shall secure the copyright for the same, get the copy stereotyped, print the same on fine paper, do them up in strong blue covers, and furnish them to the churches and ministers in this state for two dollars and fifty cents per hundred copies, or thirty-six cents per dozen. Brother Chase being present, engaged to take the copy and print it on the above conditions."

I submit that these historical facts do not warrant the attacks made upon this document by the distinguished speakers who opposed its adoption. It was written for New Hampshire Baptists for exactly the same purpose that it was offered in Indianapolis to the whole denomination. It did not go from church to church by its own weight, unauthorized by the convention. The New Hampshire Convention did not repudiate the work of its own committee. Whether the historic document is in its wording now out of date or not is not the question I am considering. I do not favor adopting it for the whole denomination. But I am in favor of giving it a square deal. It is the one document that Dr. E. T. Hiseox in his "New Directory for Baptist Churches" says has been most widely circulated of all our Baptist literature. Some people affirm that three-fourths of all of the Baptist churches in the Northern Baptist Convention have adopted this confession at one time or another. It has had an honorable history, a great history. It is a legitimate child and not a bastard.

The New Hampshire Convention adopted this declaration of faith in 1833, adopted it unanimously, and history does not show that New Hampshire has ever been bothered with a heretic in that state since then. Let us give the creed that has stood the test for eighty-nine years a bill of health without reflection on its birth or its honorable history.

Here Comes the Bride

*Here comes the bride,
See how she strides—*

ALTHOUGH, as a matter of fact, striding was the one thing this particular little bride of ours could not possibly do on account of her heels, you know. For heels are an astonishing thing to be wearing for the first time in all your life—you seem to be pitching forward into space at every step. At least that was the sensation she had, and promptly decided that American shoes as a wedding present from the groom could well be dispensed with by a new Japanese bride. But also, the Japanese groom had his own idea of the necessity of her appearing in said American shoes; so behold her teetering and mincing and stumbling along the street beside this strange new person, who was as unfamiliar to her as the shoes, and likely to prove as uncomfortable.

But perhaps we have begun this story too much in the middle, for long months before she ever dreamed of receiving any wedding presents at all she was living in Japan, in the quaintest of towns, with a gay pagoda next door to her little thatched home. And while she was quietly tending silk worms on mulberry leaves, behold a Japanese man in America wrote to a friend in Japan: "I wish you would honorably put yourself to the trouble of finding me a wife." Whereupon the friend wrote back: "Here she is!" and enclosed the picture, "O Tsubaki San," which, being translated, means "Miss Antelope."

When the portrait reached America the would-be groom sufficiently admired her pretty slant eyes and her sleek black pompadour to write back that she would "do." So you are to imagine Miss Antelope in her best kimono fluttering down to the court-house in that little town, where her name was put on the house register of the faraway groom. After which she did up her hair as a married woman should, and got ready to sail to America. It all sounds so beautifully simple; but I beg you to wonder how many times on that long and lonely trip across the blue Pacific she must have taken out his photograph and wondered about her unknown bridegroom. Also, would she like America? Ah, well, she would have to wait and see!

Meanwhile the ship reached shore, and on the wharf stood a certain young man saying to himself in Japanese: "Here comes my bride!" And you may be sure he clutched in his arm the packages containing his wedding gifts for her. Yes, the shoes, about which you know already, and an even odder gift—a hat; an American hat! It cost him all of four dollars and ninety-eight cents, so he was positive it was all any American hat could be; did it not have a brim of superlative wideness, and not only ribbon but a feather, and a flower beside the feather? No wonder he was proud of it!

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Several hours later, after all the government inspectors were through asking her questions, he met her, and as every proper Japanese bride should do, she kept her eyes modestly lowered and clucked with naive pleasure at his gifts.

"Put them on, little one," he commanded, "then we will go out and get married."

So on went the shoes, and on went the hat.

"So big as a paper parasol in Japan!" she cried in high amusement as she fingered the wide brim.

"You look fine in them," he said proudly, and she blushed deliciously. So he led her out on the streets of America and it was then that he discovered he had neglected to give her a highly important part of a lady's hat—namely, a hat pin—for the gay spring breezes came frivolling up those streets of America to greet this little bride; and—away blew her hat. And she on stilts, hopelessly unable to run with these absurd American heels threatening to throw her forward at every step. But a bridegroom can run, and this one did run; so that by the time they were married the hat was decorously on her head again.

After which he took her to the strawberry ranch where he was employed, and said to the boss: "I got me a wife. Can she too go pick tomorrow?"

"Sure!" laughed the boss, "the more the merrier!"

But it was not merrier for the poor little Japanese bride when the next morning she knelt beside the strawberry plants and filled small baskets with the fragrant berries. The merciless California sun beat down on her head, the juice of the berries stained her fingers, all sorts and conditions of insects nipped her cheeks and her plump, bare arms. And the first little doubt about this place called America crept into her mind; was it sensible to have come? To be slaving all day in a land where she had expected to find money lying on the sidewalks for anybody to pick up.

You can see for yourself how disappointment increased her loneliness, and loneliness made everything Japanese seem doubly dear. She even refused to wear any more American shoes or hats, and looked with horror at the barbarous American implements with which her husband had learned to eat his food; disdainfully she nicknamed his knives and forks and spoons, swords and rakes and shovels, and clung proudly to her Japanese chopsticks. Even when the time came to leave the ranch and they moved into the city, where whole housefuls of Japanese neighbors could be seen sitting on American chairs and eating off American tables, she continued sitting on the floor in true Japanese style, with her knees neatly tucked under her like some human letter Z.

But, all on account of a pound of rice, the entire world changed for the poor, forlorn bride. You should have seen her in her plum-colored kimono standing in the corner grocery store buying that rice with a fifty-cent piece.

"Ten cents more," said the grocer, holding out his hand.

"What?" groaned the astonished bride, "more?"

"Uh-huh! Ten cents more," he insisted, crossly.

And he was about to receive it when, like a whirlwind, a babble of voices startled the bride into turning around to see

My Tenants

By HARRIET WHITNEY SYMONDS

Come applicants for lodgings by the

*Sweet Honeysuckle, asking leave to climb
The lattice-work outside my cottage door,*

*And gentle Clematis, who craves a place
About my study's sunny window ledge,
And Yellow Rose, who would secure the space*

That lies along my porch's outer edge.

*So many come I cannot name them all,
But none are turned away while I can find*

*A vacant niche or nook, however small,
Where some wee spray may cling or trail

You ask: Are rental charges promptly met?*

*Indeed, I give my sacred word to you,
My tenants keep me ever in their debt.*

*Fair terms and moderate I like to make—
A waft of sweetness when the night seems slow*

*To pass, a breath of honey when I wake,
A glimpse of cheery warmth and sunny two indignant Japanese women pointing at the grocer in high disgust.

"No, no, you can't do a cheat for her like all that," said voice number one, in English, then, turning to the bride, explained in Japanese that rice was only ten cents a pound, and this profiteering person was presuming on her English to charge her six times too much. "Always should you honorably count your coins and ask to see the price mark."

The little bride beamed gratefully at her benefactors: "Oh, what a wonderful excellency you must have in talking and reading the grocer's American tongue. I speak only Japanese."

"Then it's high time you learned English," they insisted. She shook her head, politely refusing to blister her lips with such barbaric sounds; but the two women walked out of the store with her, and the upshot of the conversation was that they not only learned her address, but later on also came to call. And always, in and out of all their conversation, walked the name of a certain lady who literally trailed clouds of glory behind her!

"She taught us our English," they explained, or "She taught us how to make happier homes," "She taught us how to help our husbands," "She taught us how to bring up our children," "She taught us about the one true God"—indeed, the time soon came when the one person that bride was most curious to see was this marvelous missionary-lady.

"Come with us," said these new friends. So the bride followed them up the steps of a certain home for Japanese women, and she went in. But she never came out! At least the old prejudiced person who had been herself never came out! I think she left that old shell of herself forever and ever in the friendly handclasp of our missionary.

Certain it is that when her husband came home several evenings later he was rendered speechless by seeing her seated on an American chair, wearing her American shoes, and even her American hat, practicing how to eat with American knives and forks and spoons.

When she saw him standing there, she said in careful accents her one English sentence: "God bless our home!"

And God did!

How I laughed: "One family would keep him busy forever, I guess! How many of those 14,175 teeth could he examine in one day do you suppose?"

"Ah," said mother, "no wonder the snails are slow!"

But Bill says he should think they ought to be fast—it can't take them long to chew their food!

One Sentence Impossible To Write

UNCLETIM was at the Hathaways for dinner last week, and Peggy and Bill were very much startled to know that there is one sentence that is impossible to write in the English language! This is it: "There are three 'two's' in the English language."

You see, if you spell two t-w-o, the sentence is utterly incorrect, just as it would be if you spelled it either 'too' or 'to.' Of course it is even poor English to say it! Every one knows what you mean, because the three words sound alike; but Uncletim said the only proper way to write it would be: "There are three twos or three toos or three tos in the English language." And even that is not what you want to say! Try this on your English teacher tomorrow at school.

Can You Spell?

WHEN "ei" and "ie" both spell "e," How can we tell which it shall be?

Here is a rule you may believe,
That never, never will deceive,
And all such problems will relieve.

(A simpler rule you can't conceive—
It is not made of many pieces

To puzzle daughters, sons and nieces;
Yet with it all the trouble ceases:)

After "e" an "i" apply;
After other letters, "i."

Thus a general in a siege
Writes a letter to his liege,
Or an army holds its field,

While a warrior holds a shield,
Or has strength his arm to wield.

Two exceptions we must note,
Which all scholars learn by rote:

Leisure is the first of these;

For the second we have seize.

Wanted: Dentists for Snails!

By PEGGY

EVERY three months Bill and I have to go to the dentist's to have our teeth looked over; sometimes this is rather good fun, when the dentist finds nothing especial the matter, and then again it is not fun! No doubt you know the reason why, because of a personal experience.

But the last time we went to see our particular D. D. S. he said: "If so few teeth give you trouble, what would you do if you were a snail?"

"I should crawl into my shell house and amble away!" cried Bill.

"How many teeth has a snail?" I asked. Our dentist looked very thoughtful as he answered: "Thirty-two teeth may be plenty for human beings, but a snail has 14,175 teeth in 135 rows of 105 each!"

"O-o-Oh!" we sighed in a duet, for neither Bill nor I could quite believe our ears.

"It's a fact," said the dentist seriously, "and a very queer fact. For you and I eat a wide variety of foods, and the snail is so little that he surely hasn't nearly the variety we have, yet has all those fourteen thousand, and then one hundred and seventy-five thrown in extra!"

"At that rate, an elephant ought to have a million teeth at least," Bill exclaimed, "has he?"

"That's another queer thing," the dentist said, "for an elephant never has more than ten teeth and generally only six."

"I guess there's nothing bigger than an elephant, either!" Bill cried, rather excited at the fewness of teeth in such a huge creature.

"There's the whale," the dentist put in, "and a whale has only two teeth."

"I hope they meet," I laughed, "one up and one down, or they won't do him much good!"

But ever since the dentist told us these fascinating facts about teeth I've been thinking how wonderfully God knew what each one of the creatures he made would need. And last night when I started this little story Bill said to me: "After the dentists get all the children trained to clean their teeth, up and down and the proper swishes, and after all these children grow up with perfect teeth, they'll be out of a job, unless they start to learn snail language and hang a sign on the meadow grasses: "Painless Dentistry. Step in and let me examine your teeth for you, madam, and bring the children."

I. Old Japan

Japan of seventy years ago consisted of a small chain of islands whose inhabitants lived in isolation, for the country was tight-locked against all outside influences, except for a small group of Hollanders who were allowed to live and carry on limited business in Nagasaki. Japanese who left their country and returned forfeited their lives. Foreign sailors shipwrecked upon Japanese shores were killed or imprisoned. The people lived mainly by agriculture. Manufacturers were limited to the needs of the country in the absence of foreign trade. The two hundred or less factories were manned by craftsmen whose work was practically individualistic; organized industry was unknown.

Over this isolated and self-contained land the Mikado reigned as a god in Tokyo, receiving the worship and homage of his intensely loyal subjects. The real ruler, however, was the Shogun, who lived in Kyoto. This strange combination of authority had existed for nearly seven centuries. Feudalism was the rule. Only the ruling classes aspired to education.

Into this tight-locked country, however, Christianity, in the form of Jesuitism, had penetrated and made itself so obnoxious that the religion was banished by imperial edict and its adherents almost entirely wiped out. Notice-boards everywhere announced that should the Christian's God himself come to Japan he should forfeit his life.

II. The Open Door

In 1852 Commodore Perry undertook a mission to Japan to establish treaties of commerce and to secure better treatment for American ships and sailors. To the amazement of the world, he succeeded.

The treaties he exacted were humiliating to Japan, with their provision for extraterritoriality, which is demanded by civilized states of the uncivilized only. Nevertheless, Commodore Perry is now regarded by the Japanese as one of their greatest benefactors, for his coming marked the new birth of the nation.

Through the open door came the missionaries. In fact, it was a missionary to China, Dr. S. Wells Williams, who acted as Commodore Perry's interpreter, having learned the Japanese language from some ship-wrecked sailors. Another future missionary, Jonathan Goble, served as a marine on the flagship, and seven years later returned as the first Baptist missionary. Change came with amazing rapidity. At the suggestion of Guido Verbeck, one of the first missionaries, an imperial embassy of seventy Japanese gentlemen was sent around the world in 1871. They visited Washington, London, Paris, Berlin, and other capitals carefully studying the institutions of each. Bismarck was in his prime. Prussianism made a deep impression. Consequently among the men brought back as government employees to teach western methods, German military officers were not lacking.

The Japanese have been called the Yankees of the East. Their remarkable progress in the arts and sciences of a foreign civilization has demonstrated shrewdness, adaptability, and alertness of marvelous degree.

III. The New Japan

Geographical. Japan has expanded to include the lower half of Saghalin, the kingdom of Korea, the island of Formosa, and many smaller islands of the Pacific, and "spheres of influence" more or less definite in Manchuria, Shantung, and Fukien, in Chinese territory. It extends from 24 degrees to 54 degrees north latitude. Placed along our Atlantic coast, Japan would stretch from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Havana; on the Pacific coast from Vancouver to the extreme end of lower California. Japan has become a country of great cities. Tokyo has grown from 858,000 to 2,500,000 in thirty years. Osaka has gained 1,000,000 in the same time. Other cities have grown at a lesser rate.

Political. From a position of obscurity Japan has risen to be a world power, one of the "Big Five" that sat about the peace table at Versailles, and one of the "Big Four" to whom the world looks for the maintenance of peace in the Far East. The mikado no longer lives in pious seclusion, but reigns as the head of a constitutional monarchy, with two houses of parliament. Five per cent of the population vote, the franchise being based on a property test. In spite of the constitutional government, the mass of the people is still dominated by the old feudal spirit of obedience and dependence, and expect paternalism in government. Reverence for the emperor still persists. It is asserted that, "The standard of right and wrong, good and evil, is found only in the imperial will."

Military. The achievements of the Japanese army and navy have astonished the world, first in defeating China, and then Russia. Japan's conquest of the German ports on Chinese soil helped defeat Germany and has been likened to that of Prussia, both in prestige and in practice. Until the World War the cream of Japan's young manhood entered the army and navy colleges, and an equal number were turned away annually. Since the war the number of applications and the quality of men applying have both fallen.

Industrial. Japan has both the facilities and the necessity for industrial development. Its population of nearly 60,000,000 must find means of livelihood in a space only as large as California of which only 18 per cent is cultivable. The mountain streams furnish power in abundance; the excess population makes labor cheap. It is inevitable, therefore, that Japan should become an industrial country. Twenty-five thousand factories give employment to over 21,000,000 people, mostly women and children. While all Europe and America were at war, Japan found unlimited markets for her goods and factories sprung up everywhere. In 1919, 2,000 factories were built on the twenty-mile stretch of Tokyo Bay, between Tokyo and Yokohama. The same thing took place on the shore line between Osaka and Kobe.

"The tragic thing about this situation," says Doctor Axling, "is that Japan has made this remarkable industrial growth through the toil and tears of her women and children. Of her 2,000,000 factory workers, 1,250,000 belong to the weaker sex. Of these, 300,000 are girls under twenty years of age. Their working hours are long. Their living conditions are hard. The resulting loss from sickness and other causes is so great that for the spinning-mills alone 200,000 fresh girls are recruited every year.

"Industry and commerce go hand in hand. Seventy years ago Japan had no commercial contacts with the outside world. In 1920 her imports shot across the billion-dollar mark, and her exports just missed touching that high point. The World War gave Japan such a commercial opportunity as does not come to a nation in a hundred years. The markets of the world were open to her. Competition was absent. She received her own price for everything that she offered. Not only so, but from all corners of the globe men came by the hundreds and begged her to accept orders, and at her own figures. For some of her captains of industry the temptation was too great. They flooded the marts of the nations with inferior goods. They thus dragged Japan's commercial reputation into the dust, and caused her to lose an opportunity to capture a large share of the world's trade.

"One of the outstanding features of this development is that it has forced 1,200,000 of Japan's daughters out of their age-long sheltered home-life into the turbulent exposed life of modern commercialism. In stores, shops, and offices of all kinds, they are facing problems and temptations for which they are physically, mentally, and spiritually unprepared."

Educational. Education in Japan is now general and compulsory; 98 per cent of children of school age attend school. Her 28,000 schools and six universities are all crowded. Even the oppressed factory workers can read and do read. The weak spot in the educational system is the utter lack of provision for the higher education of women. These must look to Christian schools for avenues of culture.

The most hopeful element of Japan is her student class. Ideas of democracy and service are growing. Students go into the slums to live with the factory workers and to study their problems. Others are holding discussion groups with Korean and Chinese students, using Esperanto, so that the discussion might be upon an equal lingual basis.—Adapted from Service.

Publicity Plans for Peppy People

The Tacoma District B. Y. P. U. out Puget Sound way has an enterprising Publicity Committee or Department. This committee has done some excellent work in linking up the local unions with the state B. Y. P. U. projects. Last summer the committee made and placed, in each union some attractive original posters, advertising the summer assembly. The annual New Year rally of the state B. Y. P. U. was also advertised in the same way.

Say, did you ever stage a publicity exhibit? This committee collected a very interesting display of B. Y. P. U. advertising matter—posters, dodgers, invitations, etc. This exhibit was staged three times with marked success—first at the summer assembly, then at the New Year rally, and last of all, at a district board meeting.

Ever try this plan? It works! It stimulates a desire for publicity in the local union. And it pays to advertise! Try it!

Brooklyn and Long Island

Miss Mary Anderson, publicity chairman for Brooklyn and Long Island Young People's Union, sends the following note:

"On June 25, thirty-odd young people, representing fourteen Brooklyn and Long Island societies, left the Lackawanna Station in Hoboken, N. J., enroute the B. Y. P. U. of A. Convention in St. Paul, with stop-overs at Niagara Falls, Detroit and Chicago. On the return trip they visited for two days at Duluth. The greatest recreation feature of the trip was the cruise through the Great Lakes from Duluth to Buffalo. The club car from Chicago to St. Paul with a radio outfit furnished additional enjoyment to the delegates. Gilbert L. Bigger, last year's president, arranged this splendid trip to cover a period of two weeks, thus making it possible for many to make this their vacation.

Business Meeting

The annual business meeting of the union was held in the Richmond Hill Baptist Church. A splendid supper was served by the ladies of the church. Following the meal, our president, Fred B. Ashplant, introduced the "Dean of Young People," Mr. A. Doughty, the third president of our union, 1879-80, who gave a brief but inspirational address. He was followed by other past presidents. Supper over, the delegates adjourned to the church auditorium, where the reports of the chairmen of the committees were read.

The following were elected officers for the year 1922-1923: Pres., Herman F. Smaltz, Richmond Hill; first vice-pres., Fred C. Kassel, Wyckoff, second vice-pres., Chas. B. Ford, Jr., Sixth Avenue; treas., F. Walter Smith, Redeemer; secy., Miss Alice Hangland, Tabernacle; junior supt., Miss Mary M. Anderson, Bay Ridge Swedish. A handsome silver-mounted fountain pen was presented to the retiring secretary, Miss Lillian Duncuff, in recognition of her six years of faithful service in that office.

Visitation Committee

The visitation committee has been wonderfully blessed throughout the year as it went about to the various local societies in the union. The societies have supported this work splendidly, and have undoubtedly received a big share of the blessing which the Master has promised.

Many societies have already taken up outdoor work, and are now proclaiming the gospel on the street corners of our city, in the hopes that many who never enter the church will in this way be won for Christ.

"Seven Acres of Sunshine"

Our "Seven Acres of Sunshine" are all ready to receive the kiddies and mothers who will be our guests during the summer. Many improvements have been made and new equipment added for the comfort of our guests. The fresh-air home is now equipped to accommodate between 500 and 600 youngsters. All in all it promises to be a big season. Miss Carrie U. Cardwell, who has faithfully served as matron for a number of years, has agreed to serve in this capacity again this year.

Convention Impressions

The convention has impressed me with the value of continually keeping in touch with God. He is mine every day from now on, rather than one-in-seven—Charles G. Lancaster.

Best convention I ever attended. Helped me to join Life Service League.—T. Zabel.

One of the greatest blessings in my life. My first attendance at a convention. Thank God for coming to St. Paul.—Mrs. J. W. Martin.

My impression of this convention though only for the last two days—it has been the greatest convention I have attended or heard of and has strengthened my life and given me a new purpose.—Gladys Schafer.

The convention has lived up to the slogan, "Forward with Christ."—C. P. Karr.

This convention has shown to me that the young people of the whole country are willing to go "Forward with Christ."—Margaret Van Dorn.

It has strengthened my faith in my Lord and made me desire to make our B. Y. P. U. greater.—Lois Chambers.

In this great B. Y. P. U. of A. convention I was amazed to see the number of people pledging their lives to Christ.—Robert H. Speer.

That which I could hear was very good.—Dorothea Tornblom.

This has been a grand convention and has meant encouragement and great inspiration to us.—Lucille R. Dewey, Bessie A. Foster, Mrs. Rae P. Dewey.

This convention has been the largest of all the B. Y. P. U. of A. conventions that have ever been held. It has shown the young people who have attended how important it is for them to keep up their work and to work harder to bring other young people to Jesus Christ.—Laveta Smith.

The greatest meeting I've ever had the pleasure of attending.—Myrtle C. Risinger.

The St. Paul convention will be in my memory as one of great inspiration and consecration and although I cannot give my life to the Life Service League I will return to my church determined to do and give something more and help and encourage those who have given their lives.—Oliver Sanders.

More determined than ever to go "Forward with Christ."—L. J. French.

The convention has shown me just how definitely God calls young people.—Violet Johnson.

This is my first convention and I was greatly impressed by it. It has shown me what the true Christian life is.—Curtis Chase.

It is inspiring to know there are so many Baptist Christian young people in America.—Frieda Ecklund.

The influence of the convention on present and future times cannot be measured.—Claus Hammerstrain.

Inspiring a determination for greater service.—Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Briggs.

One of my many impressions is that thousands of young people are interested in the things of God.—Mary Donahoe.

The greatest season of international Christian fellowship that I have ever enjoyed.—Vera M. Rice.

I think I have received five years' worth of B. Y. P. U. experience in these four days and a half.—Frank Dewey.

"Eyes that see and ears that hear," that is what it has meant to me.—Lydia E. Hultman.

Convention has given me a religious education, made the way brighter.—H. T. Thornquist.

Most wonderful convention of a religious organization ever gathered in this state.—Ruth Kramer.

Religious Education

Scouting and Religion

FREDERICK W. MAALOE, Scout Executive
The following incident took place here in Kankakee, and which I believe is worthy of mention.

In a purely unofficial capacity I attended the vesper services last Easter Sunday at First Baptist Church, of which Dr. Herbert Hines is pastor, and there beheld a sight that has forever removed from my mind any doubt as to the religious possibilities of Scouting, and further, substantiated the statement made at the last regional conference at Champaign that the extent to which the moral and spiritual values of Scouting are realized, depend upon the leadership.

There marched down the aisle of the church, in the presence of several hundreds of people, fifteen Scouts, robed in black garments, and prepared for baptism, flanked on either side by the fellow members of their troop. The boys proceeded to the platform and as each Scout was being immersed, the boys standing at attention during the ceremony, came to the position of the Scout salute.

It is difficult to express the impressiveness of this ceremony, the beauty of the scene as these Scouts stood among the lilies banked on the pulpit, and with the reverence of a true Scout, silently pledging anew their allegiance to God and their country, and friendship to the boys who were entering into the fullness of the spiritual life of their choice.

One could not help but feel in witnessing this ceremony that here was the true interpretation of the twelfth point of the Scout law, and the scene pictured in a very vivid manner the tremendous possibilities of the boys' religious development.

In discussing the matter with the Scoutmaster later, he told me that nothing had ever been done or said to influence the Scouts to accept the faith of their fathers. He had, however, made every effort to surround the boys with the true atmosphere of Scouting and he, as Scoutmaster, had tried at all times to require the boys to fulfill the twelfth point of the law, which requires faithfulness in religious duties, and stated further that nothing but the spirit of Scouting was responsible for the conversion of these Scouts.

Summer Schools and Camps.

In a stereopticon address on "Summer Schools and Camps," delivered at the recent International Sunday School Convention at Kansas City, Mo., Mr. J. L. Alexander, Chicago, superintendent of young people's work of the International Sunday School Association, says:

"The value of the summer camps is seen in the resourcefulness that is developed and the opportunity for both older boys and older girls, sixteen to twenty-one years, to face themselves and consider life's problems at first hand.

"Three thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven camper-students and leaders have passed through the camp-conference study and discipline of the International Sunday-school Association camps during the past eight years. Over 1,400 older boys and girls have been inspired to enter the colleges and universities of the continent to prepare themselves for volunteer and professional Christian service. Most of our state young people's superintendents are camp-conference discovered. A score of ministers and directors of religious education in local fields received their vision at the camps. Several of our boy and girl graduates are in the mission field already or going. Four of our graduates, supported through college, are ready for young people's positions this spring; three entered the service last spring. Over a score are now in the various colleges in preparation. The object of the camp-conference is the discovery, training and placing of leaders in the field of religious education. Forty-three states have sent their older boys and girls to these camp-conferences. They cost a little less than $3,500 last summer."

Training Leaders

Dr. Lansing F. Smith, St. Louis, chairman executive board, Missouri Sunday-school Association, in discussing "The Training of Leadership for Religious Education Through Community Agencies of Training," at the International Sunday-school Convention at Kansas City, said:

"The outstanding agency of community training has been the community training school, organized along the lines of the graded unions and including all departments of Sunday-school work and all denominations. These have proved the most popular and are increasing rapidly in numbers and efficiency. They have been most helpful because of making possible a strong faculty, the enthusiasm of numbers, the fellowship of folks from different denominations, the strength which has been given to weak schools and smaller denominations, the development of the spirit of cooperation, the making possible of a real school, recitation, notebook work, and required readings and examination, which is out of the question in a smaller group and the putting up of a real challenge to the religious life of the entire community. Every church has a responsibility to the whole community and it is necessary for the leaders to develop a community consciousness and unite on a big plan in order to meet it."

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 30

THE FIRST RETURN FROM EXILE

Lesson: Jeremiah 29:10-14; Ezra 1:1-11.
Golden Text: Romans 8:28.

Setting

Cyrus is called King of Persia because he was of Persian descent and Persia was the most important of his conquests. The most faithful of the Jews lamented their exclusion from Jerusalem and longed for a return; the majority were settled comfortably in rich Babylon and had no desire to return to the barren hillsides of Judea. In the forty-eight years of their exile they had become established in the commercial life of the city. The desire of those who did return was religious rather than patriotic; their desire was to rebuild the temple. The caravan on its return probably traveled up the Euphrates River Valley, along the route afterward called the Royal Road. Daniel's ministry extends into the reign of Cyrus. Doubtless this had something to do with the action of the king.

Lesson

Jeremiah's prophecy says, "After seventy years I will visit you and cause you to return to this place." The seventy is round numbers, as it was forty-eight years from the time of exile to the return—seventy to the rebuilding of the temple. Cyrus, King of Persia, makes this prophecy come true, not because he was desirous of fulfilling a prophecy but because it suited him either for political reasons or, possibly, because he believed in religious liberty, to allow the Jews to return to their own faith. The enumeration in Ezra 2 of the company returning gives 42,360 people with 73,330 servants and a marching chorus of 200, besides many possessions. Yet a greater number remained comfortably in Babylon, avoiding the pulling up of stakes and taking the wearisome pilgrimage of 600 or more miles up the Euphrates, across the north end of the desert and down the Jordan valley. But these "strengthened the hands" of those returning "with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, with beasts and precious things." Apparently all on this mission were exiles from the Southern Kingdom. The returning by Cyrus of the 5,400 vessels of silver and gold which Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple in Jerusalem gave a significance to the return of the exiles it could not otherwise have had, stamping it as a religious enterprise.

Leading Thoughts

1. The word of the Lord is sure. 2. "Strengthening the hands" of those who go is always the duty of those who stay. 3. Exile is often the preparation for a supreme mission.

H. G. WELLS AND METHUSELAH

It is superlative egotism in most of us, especially in myself, to hint at carelessness in any sentence of H. G. Wells. More so, when that sentence is in his, "The Outline of History." But any of us may be pardoned for applying eighth grade school-boy mathematics to one of Mr. Wells' sentences.

Behold the sentence: "The earliest recorded reckoning is by moons and by generations of men. The former seems to be the case in the Book of Genesis, where, if one reads the great ages of the patriarchs who lived before the flood as lunar months, instead of years, Methuselah and the others are reduced to a credible length of life."—"The Outline of History"—pp. 98, 99.

Now for the school-boy mathematics: It requires thirteen lunar years (months) to make one solar year. Methuselah according to Mr. Wells, was 969 lunar years (months) old. Or, $74\frac{1}{2}$ solar years, which does not look so unreasonable. Methuselah was 187 lunar months of age ($14\frac{1}{2}$ solar years) when he begat his first son, Lamech, which might be possible.

But how about "the others"? One of these "others" would be Methuselah's father, Enoch (Gen. 5:21) who was sixty-five years old when he begat Methuselah. If lunar months, Enoch would have been but five solar years and two months of age, a physical impossibility for him to beget a son. Methuselah's great grandfather was Mahalalel, and he too (Gen. 5:15) was five solar years of age when he begat Methuselah's grandfather, Jared, which, biologically speaking, was an impossibility for either Homo Sapiens, or Homo Neanderthalensis; possibly for Eoanthropus, and Pithecanthropus. Doubtless Mr. Wells forgot to re-read the fifth chapter of Genesis; or his mathematics slumbered; or his great biological knowledge was not operative.

We'll forgive him if, since he says he has made many revisions of his "Outline," he'll make one more saying that lunar months will never do in explaining the longevity of the ancients recorded in Genesis, for it leads us into physiological impossibilities.

AN EXHORTATION

One thing I have noticed in meetings, such as associations, conferences, conventions and institutes, whether there have been any discussions or controversies, or none, that the thoughts and messages generally fall into two groups—the scientific and the super-scientific, the natural and the divine, the temporary and the eternal, organizations and dynamics, digging for foundations and building modern skyscrapers of rhetoric and programs, business and devotion. And while we are not Babel Tower builders but church and kingdom builders, and the illustration may be far-fetched, yet I cannot help but think that there remains some of the controversial clamoring in us of those ancient, prominent but foolish enthusiasts. While we do not resemble them in a literal confusion of tongues, yet we fail in understanding one another, and in our self-assumed authority and intellectual pride, fail to realize as we should that we are brothers, and that there is danger of strife and schism. That is what Paul had in mind when he warned the Corinthian believers that there should not be schism in the body of Christ. Schism among the members of Christ! The idea is preposterous! The fact terrible. We each have our different gifts and callings. Devotion to Christ our Head, our divine Saviour and Lord, is the only essential—remember that, brethren! Remember the dark background of Babel and Corinth, and on that see the glorious ideal church—the Body of Christ! Remember that Christ is the Head of the Body and he alone has authority and government! Let us humble ourselves before him!

A CHARTER AMENDED

In order to ascertain the exact status of the Worcester Academy I wrote to the headmaster, Mr. Samuel F. Holmes. He kindly permits me to state publicly the facts in the case as follows:

By action of the trustees in 1916 its charter was so modified that a majority of Baptists is no longer required by law as trustees. Furthermore, the charter now permits Catholics to serve on the board and the present secretary of the board is a Catholic alumnus of the school. In other words, no denomination now controls the institution and it represents itself as undenominational. The motion to amend the charter was made by a Baptist clergyman, now deceased.

CHURCH ADVERTISING

Church advertising was one of the departments of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at its meeting held in Milwaukee, June 11-15. The crowded columns of THE BAPTIST forbid an extended report of this remarkable meeting, participated in by professional and business men and women who for four days centered their discussion over the slogan, "Truth."

But the department of church advertising demands at least a brief recognition. This department seemed to interest chiefly Methodists and Presbyterians, though Catholics, Congregationalists, Baptists and other denominations were in evidence on the program and in attendance. More than twenty-five speakers were listed on the regular program, all of whom were good and many excellent. Among the speakers were men of national and even international reputation, whose views on the subject would be of much interest to the religious workers. But a brief summary of what seemed to be the consensus of opinion, based on experience and observation, is as follows:

Church advertising is scriptural, sensible, and necessary to meet the growing influence and wide advertising of the movies, the newspapers and general conversation, so that the church may not only hold its own, but make an aggressive evangelistic campaign in the world. Simple denominational or local church advertising was deprecated as tending to narrow the vision of a world-conquering religion and debarring news from the papers which were seeking news of general interest, but were glad, so it was said, to give space to real, aggressive news from the churches, if properly prepared. Training in such preparation, both for news writing and advertising was advocated, both by special correspondence classes and local groups studying under a trained leader. The methods of advertising suggested reached all the way from the table talks, which, by the way, were stressed by a leading editorial writer on a Chicago paper, to the use of radio, which was urged by an Episcopal clergyman, and included bill-boards, local bulletins, display advertising, and news write-ups in the papers. Placing advertising expense in the church budget, ranging along from 2 to 10 per cent, was advocated. Preachers were warned of the danger of advertising themselves, rather than him whom they professed to serve.

DIG, PREACHER, DIG!

Where can the preacher get the most inspiring and helpful outlines for his sermons? Is it in homiletic magazines and books of commercialized dried tongue? Sermons from such a source are generally about as nourishing as well boiled chicken shadow soup. Why should the man of God crave pulpit crutches? Many of these so-called sermonic aids prove to be hindrances to the carrying out of Paul's advice in 2 Tim. 4:2, "Preach the word." The very best outline for a sermon is a text. It is God's plan of sermon. The Spirit's thoughts are higher than man's thoughts as the heavens are higher than the earth, God's inspired texts are in homiletic order, and far better arranged than man's outlines. The text is a mine and the preacher is the miner and should dig. Dig, brother, dig!

Our Own Folks

Southern Ohio Letter

By J. W. WEDDELL

The pastors came back from the Indianapolis convention in an amiable and hopeful mood. Some of them would have liked a more explicit declaration of faith at the great convocation. But it is a big body with varied minds, yet fraternal, and, after all, "We stand by the word," is a pretty good creed as Baptists interpret it. Now "let the redeemed of the Lord say so." That is what we have come home to do, to say that we are redeemed and how. We say it when we preach; we say it when we sing—our hymn books are usually orthodox; we say it when we pray, certainly, or we can't pray; we say it in service—we serve the Lord Christ, crucified and risen.

Ohio Baptists have no difficulty here. At the Norwalk Convention three years ago we went on record with a clear, pronounced statement of faith, founded partly on the Philadelphia and partly on the New Hampshire Confession, both good. And some of us have put it into our year-books and hymn-books that he who runs may read: "The Bible is the word of God; Jesus Christ is the Son of God—his birth supernatural, his death expiatory, his life at the throne mediatorial—till he come." Let the local church "say so" and "live so."

Who's Who

"Who are these fundamentalists anyway?" we hear it asked. There is a curiosity to find out. We know of one pastor who announced in response to the query, "The Battle of Fundamentalism: by an Old-Time Fundamentalist." And then when the people came out to learn he surprised them a bit by quoting Paul the apostle at 1 Cor. 15: "I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received and wherein ye stand: by which also ye are saved." But if we are going to make Paul our model fundamentalist, be sure we will find him in the midst, holding the faith once delivered, but holding it in love and standing with his brethren for whom it was once delivered. This is no time for separation, but for friendly and earnest testimony. This is the brand of fundamentalist to which we are glad to belong.

The Southwest Counties

They are full of Baptists—old-fashioned Baptists. "Stuck in the mud," you say. Yes, half the year we are virtually cut off from the rest by our mud roads. But there's an advantage here, for fellows that come down from Cleveland and elsewhere let our property severely alone. You can't get away with it! There hasn't been a bank robbery or an auto stolen to speak of since your humble servant came down this way to Marietta, now almost a year past. But the Ohio brothers and sisters, they are to be reckoned with, are all coming this way next June—we hope to have the highway then. The state convention meets just above us at Cambridge. Dr. Starke is there and he is getting ready for a great time. We'll show you a thing or two, brethren. Eddy and Martin at Zanesville, McDanel at Martin's Ferry, Summers at Ironton, Tillis at Portsmouth, Wilson at Middleport, Maier and McCall at large, and a host of others besides the genial West Virginian brethren across the Ohio, will all be there if possible to give you a good time and give you a glimpse of what is rightly called next to the Lincoln Highway and the Yellowstone, the scenic country of the continent. Come and see it. Personally I had thought to be elsewhere by this time in what dear Dr. Powell used to call the "Pauline evangelism," sometimes desired by the churches between pastorates, but this "stick-it" minister—is that it?—has kindly been asked to stay three months longer, and here we are, preaching the old gospel to a people who want it and nothing else.

The Polish Annual Convention

The Polish Annual Conference was held June 7, 1922, in Detroit, Mich., the second largest city for the Polish nationality in the United States, Chicago being the largest. There are two Polish Baptist ministers in Detroit, Rev. J. Rzepecki and Mr. Morze. The conference met with Mr. Rzepecki's church at Reuters Hall on East 35th Street and Michigan Ave., on Sunday, June 4. The delegates witnessed the baptism of twenty-five converts who united with the church. The Polish Baptist churches were well represented at the conference by delegates from practically all the mission fields. The Canadian work was also represented by Rev. K. W. Tuczec and Rev. E. Lipinski.

The conference voted to raise money and send two, and if possible more, workers to Poland. The project was sponsored by Mr. Ostrowski of Chicago, supported by Mr. Alf of Pound, Wis., who said if any definite step should be taken to relieve the great need in Poland of evangelistic missionaries he would offer $100, later he raised it to $125. Mr. Ziarko of New York City made a motion to appoint a committee that would accept the whole responsibility of accepting gifts, donations and applications of candidates for consideration and recommendation. This committee would present such applications after a thorough investigation to the attention of the Foreign Mission Society for approval. This motion was supported by Mr. Adamus of East Orange, N. J., with a remark that the present Polish mission committee be authorized to look after this phase of activity,—it was unanimously agreed. This started the ball rolling for in a very short time over $800 was pledged by delegates. It was requested by Rev. Ziarko and supported by Rev. K. W. Tuczec that the appeal be made in the evening for more donations, this appeal netted $561, a total of $1,361 for the day.

Another important move was to agree to issue a weekly instead of a monthly denominational paper. This is sorely needed to keep the Polish workers informed about matters pertaining to helps and suggestions in propagation of the gospel among our country folks. Rev. M. S. Lesik, of Toledo, Ohio, is to be managing editor. The contributing editors are: Reverends

J. Rzepecki, Morze, Jersak, Frydryk, Mr. Ostrowski and Mr. Dudzik.

The conference expressed deep appreciation to the American brethren for their interest and loyal support in carrying on the work among the Polish speaking people.

Officers elected for the coming year are: Pres., Rev. J. Frydryk, of Chicago; vice-pres., Rev. M. Anuta, of Hammond, Ind.; secy., Rev. C. Jersak, of Cleveland; treas., Rev. H. Schilke, of Pound, Wis.

Principal Curtis P. Coe

AN APPRECIATION

Baptists interested in Christian education mourn the sudden death of Prof. Curtis P. Coe, principal of Keystone Academy, Saturday, June 24. Although he had not been in accustomed health for some weeks, no one of his family suspected that he was seriously ill. He himself did not suspect it. He continued school work with usual energy, and presided at the closing exercises of the Academy, June 11-14. After the pressure of toll immediately following commencement he consulted his physician, who counseled an abdominal operation, which revealed a most malignant cancer that had already done its deadly work. God mercifully spared him weeks of intense suffering by granting almost immediate release from physical to endless life of peace and blessedness.

Only two years ago Professor Coe came, a stranger to eastern Baptists, to assume the principalship of Keystone Academy. The trustees had been seeking a man of educational equipment and of missionary enthusiasm to rehabilitate a school that for fifty years had contributed to Baptist strength in the Middle States; and in Professor Coe they believed they had found the one to whom they could entrust the future of their loved school. He did not long remain a stranger, nor was confidence misplaced. His abounding physical vigor, rare social gifts, splendid intellectual attainments, gracious bearing, and overflowing enthusiasm for things Christian, soon made him a welcome friend in households and in churches. The large gathering of townspeople, of trustees, of students that returned to mourn, of pastors from Scranton and Pittston and neighboring towns, at the funeral services in the Factoryville Baptist Church, Tuesday, June 27, attested the extent of influence won within two short years of his administration. Principal Coe was born in Dwight, Ill., May 26, 1864. He became a Christian in early youth, and, eager to fit himself for large usefulness in life, he entered the Bloomington State Normal School. On completing his schooling he became state Sunday-school missionary in Texas, where he heard and heeded the call to serve a more needy field in independent missionary work among the Hopi Indians of Arizona. After almost three years' labor there, he accepted the superintendency of the Kadiac Baptist Orphanage, Wood Island, Alaska. While ministering among the Hopis, he met Miss Anna Bell Evans, a government teacher among the same Indian people, a daughter of Rev. John W. Evans, a Baptist minister well known in Pennsylvania. She accompanied him as wife to Alaska, where they served until 1909, when the seriously impaired health of Mrs. Coe compelled return to the states. In the autumn of 1909, Professor Coe was called to head the commercial department in McMinnville, now Linfield College, McMinnville, Ore. Here he remained, efficient teacher and administrator, leader in all educational and reform movements in his state, until he assumed charge of Keystone Academy, June, 1920.

During the two years at Keystone, Principal Coe succeeded in regaining the confidence of Baptists in the future of the school, in winning official support of the Pennsylvania board of education, in organizing an efficient teaching force, in adding to the physical equipment of the academy, in increasing the number of students enrolled, and in making sure its place in Baptist secondary education. So wise and methodical and foresighted had been his preparations for the coming school year that his sudden death, though a staggering blow, does not greatly perplex the supporters of Keystone. They have a fine corps of teachers to continue the work they themselves love; and the trustees heir Principal Coe's purposes and enthusiasm. They are as undaunted by the death of their leader as was England by the tragic death of Lord Kitchener. They are energetically at work executing the plans matured by their late principal. The coming school year promises to be the best within recent history of the academy.

Professor Coe leaves a wife and five children. Mrs. Coe will probably reside in Factoryville, and teach Bible in the academy. The oldest son, Curtis, is a graduate of Linfield College and is teaching in the Kingsley School, New Jersey; another son has just been graduated from Linfield College and will probably enter the teaching profession; another son is a senior in Bucknell University. The older daughter taught music last year in Keystone and remains for the coming year. The younger daughter just graduated from Keystone, valedictorian of her class, will enter Bucknell in the autumn for a complete college course.

Misunderstanding Corrected

Many inquiries have come to the undersigned concerning his statement at the Northern Baptist Convention, to the effect that only three of the boards of the cooperating organizations favored the presentation of the preamble of the report of the committee on gifts with attached doctrinal conditions, which preamble contained a statement of faith. It seems wise, therefore, to make a clearer statement in relation thereto.

Every one of the seven boards reported to the secretary of the Conference of Boards in writing. From these letters it appears that: The boards of the Home Mission Society, the Woman's Home Mission Society and the Publication Society, approved entirely of the report of the Committee of Fifteen, a subcommittee of the Conference of Boards. Of the remaining four boards, that of the Foreign Mission Society "adopted" the recommendations, but only "accepted" the rest of the report. The maker of the motion thereon and the secretary of the board informed the undersigned that "accept" was intended to mean "receive" as distinguished from "adopt," and that it did not imply presentation of the preamble to the convention for adoption. The Woman's Foreign Board acted only on the recommendations, and the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board did the same. The Board of Education adopted only the recommendations and distinctly voted against the inclusion of the preamble in the report. It thus appears clearly that only three of the seven boards actually approved the report of the Committee of Fifteen in its entirety. The rest merely received the report or ignored all of it except the recommendations. In view of this state of the case, the undersigned, being secretary of the entire Conference of Boards did not feel warranted in including the preamble in his report from the Conference of Boards to the convention. The printed report had not been formally adopted by the Conference of Boards, as two of the replies from the boards did not come in until the last minute, and there was no opportunity to assemble all the boards. The only thing to do, therefore, was to present that part of the report of the Committee of Fifteen which had been actually approved by all or a majority of the boards. When it was stated that four of the boards had not approved the preamble, the statement did not mean that they disapproved of the contents of the preamble as such, but that they had taken no action of approval and had not voted to present the preamble in the report, in the way that three of the boards had done.

Although the whole matter was referred back to the Conference of Boards until next year, it is well to have the previous action of the boards understood, as 3,000 copies of the entire document were carried away.

Clarence M. Gallup,
Secretary of Conference of Boards.

A Peace Preserver

Centralia, Ill.

THE BAPTIST,
Dear Editor:

Letters have just been received from Burma telling of a revolutionary outbreak along the China border of Burma. A pretender to the throne of Burma gathered about 500 Shans, mercenary Chinese and ignorant Kachins belonging to the Atsee tribe and attacked and burned the village of Muse which was about twenty-seven miles from our mission station at Namkham. Our Shan missionary at Namkham, Rev. R. Harper, M.D., was not well when the news came, but he arose from his bed and notified the military authorities by helio messages. Troops soon arrived from the station of Pankham, eight miles away, and as they were Indian troops without a commander, Dr. Harper, who was for a long time the surgeon of these troops, joined them and hurried toward the enemy. Arriving at Selan, an outstation of the Namkham Shan Mission, they found the rebels attacking the Shan ruler and his state troops. This was on Sunday, March 19. Detachments of British Indian troops kept arriving, but the missionary was needed and kept at the battle-front. Not until the following Thursday morning did the rebels attack in a body. They were held back until 9 o'clock when a body of British cavalry arrived and together with the troops already collected the cavalry surrounded the rebels and about fifty of them were said to have been killed and the rest dispersed or captured. One of the British officers (English) was shot and the missionary personally accompanied him to the Mayo hospital. During the late war several similar rebellious attempts were made in the same locality and Dr. Harper has been the peace preserver in that unsettled region.

Sincerely yours,
WALLACE ST. JOHN,
Missionary on Furlough.

International Student Conference

Leaders of denominational boards interested in the recruiting of college men for the ministry and others of the professions and vocations necessary for the promotion of the kingdom of God are urged in the report of the denominational representatives at the International Student Conference recently held at College Camp, Lake Geneva, to "get the habit of appointing as their representatives the best available men, remembering especially the importance of selecting men who can remain throughout the conference." The Rev. Norman B. Henderson, pastor of University Baptist Church of Minneapolis was the Baptist representative. The conference was held under the auspices of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

The discussion of the denominational representatives which led to the adoption of the report indicated that these men who had spent their time during the ten days of the conference in advising college men concerning their life work, had become impressed with the idea that the importance of the conference to the churches in America and in foreign lands was underestimated by the leaders of their respective denominations.

While the registration of students from the 109 colleges and universities numbered 650, there were more than 1,300 pre-arranged interviews with students reported. The public testimonials given by the students on the last night of the conference, the baptism on that afternoon of one Japanese and two Chinese students and the decisions otherwise recorded by the students reflected the spiritual power and the decisive character of the platform and hilltop addresses, the Bible discussions daily in thirty-eight groups, the morning watch meditations, the interviews and the life work institutes.

The report of the denominational representatives in part is as follows: "The denominational leaders of the Lake Geneva Student Conference of 1922 desire to record their recognition of the far-reaching significance to the kingdom of God of conferences of this kind, and to express to the management of this conference their deep appreciation for the opportunities afforded for their participation therein. They believe that this cooperation has proved to be to the best interests of the conference and of all concerned. They desire to commend especially the following features of this year's conference:

"The well articulated program. The quality of, and the fundamental emphasis put upon the Bible discussion groups and the training of the leaders for these groups. The quality of emphasis between the appeal for service in foreign lands and the appeal for service in America. The fair presentation of both the commendable and non-Christian conditions prevailing in foreign lands. The spirit and quality of the musical features of the program."

Annual Conference of Swedish Baptist Ministers

The Swedish Baptist Ministers of Minnesota met for their annual conference in the Bethel Swedish Baptist Church, Duluth, June 21-22.

The evening session on June 21 was opened by a song service conducted by Rev. J. A. Carlson, pastor of the entertaining church. Mr. Carlson also gave the address of welcome to the visiting ministers and their friends. The sermon was preached by Rev. G. A. Gustafson, St. Cloud, who chose as his theme: "Paul, the Apostle, in the Triumphal Procession of the Victorious Christ." 2 Cor. 2:12-17.

At the morning session on June 22, Rev. Adolf Paulson, Brainerd, read a paper on the subject: "Speaking with Tongues and Divine Healing in the Light of the Scriptures."

In the discussion which followed it was brought out that inasmuch as Christians believe that the tremendous advance in medical science is one evidence of the presence of God, we should thank God for what has been done and pray for those who devote their lives to the ministry of healing.

In the afternoon Rev. J. A. Swanson, St. Paul, spoke on the subject: "Some Blemishes and Some Encouraging Features of Christian Work in Modern Times." The blemishes he listed as too great a reliance on machinery and organization; too much similarity between Christians and the world; lack of interest in the prayer meetings; unwillingness to sacrifice; too much controversy and dissension; modernism.

Some encouraging features were: A large number whose lives reveal that they are true followers of Christ; a world-wide vision as regards human needs; a true Christian altruism which concerns itself in the spiritual and physical welfare of humanity.

The following officers were elected: President, G. A. Hagstrom; vice-pres., Eric Carlson; secy., E. A. Finstrom; treas., C. E. Bergfalk; member of executive committee, R. A. Arlander.

The semi-annual meeting will be held next autumn at the Bethel Institute, St. Paul.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

NEW HAMPSHIRE

PLANS FOR CHURCH WORK for the year beginning next fall have been worked out by the pastor and a committee of the First Baptist Church in Manchester. The plan calls for a rally in October. The city will be divided into thirty sections and chairmen on visitation will be appointed for each section. The climax of rally month will be a social and church-roll call late in October. The November slogan for the church will be "Increase" and this will apply to all departments of church work. December will be stewardship month. Church finances and denominational responsibility will be stressed in that month. January will be prayer month and prayer circles will be formed. In February the evangelistic note will be emphasized and intensive efforts put forth in evangelism. After Easter other important church work will be given attention. This church will send a good-sized delegation of young people to the Ocean Park School of Methods in August as has been the custom for several years past.

Mrs. M. E. MORSE, pastor at Chester, and Rev. G. F. Howard, pastor at East Rochester, have resigned.

REV. M. H. WAKEFIELD, pastor at Newmarket, is seriously ill in a hospital at Exeter.

THE CHURCH AT SALEM DEPOT has voted to increase the salary of its pastor, Rev. C. M. Miller, who is doing good work on this field.

Mrs. L. J. DAVIS has resumed the work of pastor at Orange much to the satisfaction of the church. This is the only church in this rural community and Mrs. Davis has done excellent work here in the past.

FIVE YOUNG MEN are ready for baptism at Deerfield. Miss Christina MacKenzie is pastor here and a most successful work is in progress. Although there is no formal arrangement for federation the Congregational church decided a year ago to worship with the Baptist church and a most commendable united work has been in progress.

DELEGATES FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE attending the convention at Indianapolis were: Rev. A. J. Archibald, Nashua; Rev. W. J. B. Cannell, Milford; Rev. T. J. Cate, Meredith; Rev. D. S. Jenks, Manchester; Mr. F. T. Wadleigh, Milford; Miss Helen K. Wallace, Alton; Rev. H. R. Whitlock, Manchester.

CONNECTICUT

REV. JAMES MCGEE, pastor of Calvary Church, New Haven, was the principal speaker at the recent commencement of his Alma Mater, Kalamazoo College, Michigan. The college conferred the degree of D. D. upon her distinguished son, an honor well merited.

CONNECTICUT WAS REPRESENTED at the Indianapolis Convention by twenty-nine delegates, seven women, two laymen, seventeen preachers and three secretaries.

THE HOUSE OF WORSHIP on Willington Hill has been undergoing a thorough renovation. Rededicatory services were held on Friday, June 20. The pastor, Rev. W. V. Allen, is being blessed in his work.

THE EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE of the state convention, Rev. James McGee, chairman, met in Calvary Church, June 28, to consider the evangelistic plans for the ensuing year.

THE COMMITTEE on promotional plans for 1922-1923 expects to meet about the middle of July, when it is hoped through cooperation with the women and the pastors, a tentative suggestion program may be outlined for the ensuing year.

NEW JERSEY

THE NORTH NEW JERSEY Baptist Association met for its eighty-ninth anniversary with the Glenwood Church, June 27-28. It was fifty years ago that, at the same place, the association was reorganized and began the larger work which it has continued until the present. The history of those fifty years was reviewed by Rev. Wm. A. May, clerk emeritus. The present situation and future outlook in denominational affairs were indicated briefly by the superintendent of promotion

In New Jersey, J. Earle Edwards. Inspiration came to the delegates through the missionary address of Rev. Oscar Barchwitz, a former missionary to South America; the annual sermon by Rev. E. W. Rimpof of Paterson, and the women's hour under the leadership of Mrs. E. A. Vanderbree of Paterson. Through the sessions and between there was a splendid spirit of fellowship largely attributable to the efforts of the pastor at Glenwood, Rev. A. D. Vanderburgh, his wife and the people of the church and community. The officers elected for the ensuing year were: Moderator, Rev. L. J. Beynon, Clifton; vice-moderator, Rev. H. J. Smith, Paterson; clerk, Rev. A. R. DeMott, Bloomingdale; associate clerk, Isaac Gee, Paterson; treasurer, James Kinghorn, Rutherford.

Peddle Notes

Forty-six members of the class of 1922 were graduated from Peddie Institute recently at the annual commencement exercises, held in the main auditorium of the First Baptist Church, Hightstown, of which the Rev. Harry E. Owings is the pastor. The diplomas were presented to the graduates by D. G. Garabrant, president of the board of corporators. Orations were delivered during the exercises by Orrin G. Judd, '22, who took as his subject "Will Russia Come Through?", William G. Chace, '22, who spoke on "Japan and the Future," and John H. Schmidt, '22, who considered "America's Position in World Diplomacy." The commencement address was delivered by the Rev. W. Quay Rosselle, of Malden, Mass.

Following the announcement and award of prizes by Headmaster R. W. Sweetland, LL. D., the annual alumni luncheon was served, after which the yearly meetings of the General Alumni Association and the board of corporators were held in the Wilson Hall Chapel and the Longstreet Library, respectively.

James Madison Stifler, '22, son of Dr. James M. Stifler, of Evanston, Ill., was awarded a silver loving cup during the commencement exercises as a token of appreciation for his remarkable athletic record while enrolled at the school. Stifler has been chosen for the all-state football team for the past four seasons, and he has been a member of the Peddie championship basketball, baseball, track and swimming teams as well. Few students can equal his record in the world of sport.

The annual New Jersey Baptist Young People's Assembly will be held at the school July 1-8. The Rev. Otto F. Laegler, director of the assembly, has arranged an attractive number of courses, and it is expected that 300 young people from various parts of the state will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by the sessions.

The second annual Peddie Summer School will open on July 10 and its sessions will continue until September 1. Archibald M. Langford will direct the summer school, as he did last year. Mr. Langford will leave Peddie in the fall, however, to become headmaster of the Howe School, Howe, Ind.

NEW YORK

CHILDREN'S DAY EXERCISES were held the afternoon of Sunday, June 25, in the Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn, New York. In connection with the services Dr. Fowler conducted a service of dedication for eleven children brought by their parents. It was a reverent and spiritually helpful service. This department of the church has had a most successful year. The ordinance of baptism was administered at the close of the evening service.

Mississippi Valley

INDIANA

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, Bloomington, has had a long campaign altogether. Beginning March 1, a series of cottage prayer meetings were held in each of thirty-five sections of the city, taking them one each night. April 2 the pre-Easter services began with the pastor, Rev. R. C. Speer, doing the preaching and Prof. C. R. Clayton leading the song service. On Easter Sunday the McDoel Tabernacle was dedicated and meetings began on Wednesday with the pastor preaching and Brother W. E. Houghton leading the song service, resulting in ninety-nine accessions. The meeting at McDoel Tabernacle was an answer to prayer. Eleven months ago the work began with a Sunday school in the school house. In November it was transferred to a cottage bought by the aid of the convention. The tabernacle dedicated Easter is a model of comfort, cheapness, stability and utility. It seats four hundred and has good ventilation and seating. The entire community in that section of the city helped to pay for it and then joined it. On April 30 First Church voted to create McDoel Tabernacle a branch of the church. All those who have joined there are to be received into the First Church, with the understanding that their activity and interest will center in the tabernacle.

KANSAS

REV. R. E. McGraw of Kansas City acted as pastor, at El Dorado, during Dr. M. O. Clemmons' three-months' leave of absence, which has just closed. Twenty-six persons responded to the invitation given, most of whom have united with the church. Six now await baptism. The Sunday school broke all previous records with 333 present one Sunday. A week of training and a week of revival were features of the season. Brother McGraw endeared himself to the people with his forceful preaching and his tireless endeavor for the cause. Pastor Clemmons took charge July 1. Mrs. Clemmons has greatly improved in health and is at home for the present.

IOWA

ON JULY 2, DR. FRANK A. HOUSER preached his farewell sermon as pastor of Calvary Church, Davenport, and will at once begin his pastorate at First Church of Olean, N. Y. On this day the four leading churches of Davenport united with Calvary in an evening service. Nearly four years ago Dr. Houser came from Trinity Church, Cleveland. He is returning to the East because he cannot resist the call. During the years in Calvary Church he has wrought with skill and fruitfulness. The church will miss Mr. and Mrs. Houser. The W. W. G. has adopted Mr. and Mrs. Howard Smith of Bhamo Burman, which presents the other side of the world and creates interest in the larger work. Mrs. Smith is now a member of Calvary Church.

HARRY C. ANDERSON will be in a special series of evangelistic meetings at Gilmore City, until July 16.

OHIO

REV. HOMER C. SMITH, pastor of the First Church of Athens, presented his resignation Sunday, July 2. He will close his work with them August 31. He has not made known his plans for the future. He leaves the church in good shape.

Annual Meeting of Wooster Association

The eighty-third annual meeting of the Wooster Association was held with First Baptist Church of Salem, O., June 27-28. The association is made up of churches in Alliance, Canton, Massillon, New Philadelphia, Newman, Wooster, Salem, and one country church, known as the Locust Grove Church. Each church was represented in the associational meeting by a substantial delegation. The church at Salem had made splendid preparation for the meeting. In addition to furnishing lodging and breakfast the ladies served the meals at the church. The pastor, Rev. G. A. Beers, had neglected nothing that might contribute to the success of the meetings. Splendid singing was one of the features. The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. C. H. Donaldson, pastor of the Massillon Church. He brought a helpful, inspiring message. The Rev. A. A. Nellis, of Warren, preached the doctrinal sermon Tuesday evening. The message was unique and instructive. Mrs. E. W. Moore gave two addresses, one at the women's session on Wednesday afternoon, the other on Wednesday evening. The Rev. Bunyan Spencer gave an address on Christian Education; Rev. W. H. Thompson, on behalf of the state convention, presented that work, and Rev. F. G. Cressy spoke concerning the work of the N. B. C. and the New World Movement. Devotional addresses were given by Pastors T. J. Edwards, G. A. Beers and others. Wm. E. Bridge, pastor of Canton Church, acted as moderator; Mr. R. E. Ray of New Philadelphia, as clerk pro tem.

The report of the committee on religious conditions revealed that there had been a substantial net increase in the membership of the churches during the year. The churches at Wooster, Alliance, Massillon and Canton had held special evangelistic service as did the church at Newman. Altogether there were 271 additions to the churches. Massillon had had 100 additions in the five months just preceding the meeting.

Reports show that the churches had contributed 90 per cent as much to the N. W. M. as in the previous year, two churches giving more than during the year previous. The Sunday schools are larger than a year ago, and the young people's societies doing well. The women's work goes along steadily and successfully, under good leadership. Miss Lyde Jenkins presided at this session. Mr. A. L. Williams, of the Newman Church, was elected moderator; Mr. J. C. Steen, of Massillon, clerk; Mr. Grant Meyers, of Wooster, treasurer.

The minutes of the meeting will be ready for distribution within the next few days.

Taken as a whole the meeting was good and revealed that the churches were a unit as regards the support of the N. W. M.

MICHIGAN

REV. MORGAN L. WILLIAMS and Miss Clara Belle Arthur of Grand Rapids, Mich., were married June 27. Mr. Williams is the director of religious education under the Michigan Baptist Convention with headquarters in Lansing.

THE BURTON STREET CHURCH of Grand Rapids, Mich., has called to its pastorate Rev. G. A. Jackson. Mr. Jackson has served several years as the prison chaplain at Jackson.

AN ORDAINING COUNCIL called by the First German Baptist Church of Peoria, Ill., on June 22, set apart to the gospel ministry Louis B. Broeker, who has been in charge of the work at Aiken Institute, Chicago. This is his home church and here he was brought up from infancy. Mr. Broeker is a recent graduate of the Baptist Theological Seminary, Chicago. Present at the council from that institution were President G. W. Taft and Prof. Jacob Heinrichs. Also from Chicago, Rev. N. C. Baum, First German Baptist Church. Mr. Broeker passed a brilliant examination on all matters touched by the council, and gives promise of eminent usefulness in the ministry. The sermon was given by Professor Heinrichs; charge to the candidate, Dr. Taft; welcome to the ministry, Rev. F. Sievers; ordaining prayer, Rev. J. V. Whiting; while the service was in charge of Rev. G. A. Waldvogel, pastor of the local church.

Phelps, is teaching in Union University, Chengtu, West China.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

The Norwegian-Danish Baptist Conference

The conference met at the Norwegian-Danish Baptist Church in Seattle, June 15-18. The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. O. N. Jorgensen of Tacoma, from Romans 1:14. Sixty-nine delegates and visitors were present.

The following officers were elected: Pres., Rev. A. M. Mehus, Bellingham; vice-pres., Rev. Erling Monnes, Seattle; secy., Rev. T. O. Wold, Everett; treas., L. M. Forland, Seattle.

Rev. G. F. Holt gave a splendid address on "Our Task, and How to Perform It." Other inspiring subjects treated were: "Our Mission Program," "Our Field," "The Great Commission," "Conditions for Success," "Personal Work," "The Lord's Plan with the Church," "The Signs of the Times," and "The Heavenly Vision."

The women's session Saturday night was well attended. Mrs. T. O. Wold spoke on "Helpers in Christ Jesus," Rom. 16:3-5. Mrs. E. Monnes and others gave musical selections. The reports given showed that the women have done well financially.

The young people's session was held Sunday afternoon. Rev. E. Monnes spoke on "Our Freedom in Christ." Rev. T. H. Hagen led the after meeting and especially emphasized the truth that when Christ sets us free, we become the "bond-servants of Christ." The Seattle and Tacoma choirs sang inspiringly. Many encouraging testimonies were given.

Among the resolutions adopted were the following: Whereas, it is a fact that the modern destructive criticism of the Bible exerts a demoralizing influence in this country; Therefore, be it resolved that we as a conference hereby declare that we will vigilantly, faithfully and lovingly contend "for the faith which once for all was delivered unto the saints," steadfastly maintaining and confessing that the Bible, not only in part, but wholly, is inerrantly inspired by the Holy Spirit.

"We desire to express our grateful appreciation to the Western Washington State Convention for efficient cooperation with us and endeavor to win our countrymen for Christ and His Church, and especially for appointing Rev. and Mrs. T. O. Wold as missionaries to our people. We also urge our churches to contribute to missions as the Lord prospers them."

COLORADO

BETHEL CHURCH, DENVER, Dr. E. L. Krumreig, pastor, is enjoying a good degree of interest. Large congregations greet the pastor at all of the church services and the prayer meetings are well sustained. On Sunday, July 2, the pastor gave the hand of fellowship to twenty-one members, fourteen of them were baptized by the pastor that morning before the sermon, three were baptized the week before and four came by letter. Others are to be baptized in the near future. The pastor will take no vacation and the church services will be continued regularly through the summer. The famous "Overland Tourist Park," where several thousand people camp during the vacation season, is only six blocks from Bethel Church, and the pastor is doing considerable work among the tourists.

Honor Dr. E. P. Brown

Edwin Putnam Brown, principal of Wayland Academy at Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, has been the center of interest in the sixty-seventh annual commencement on Wednesday, June 14. The occasion marked the completion of twenty-five years of valuable service by Mr. Brown in the list of celebrated educators who have held the position, including such men as Prof. A. S. Hutchins, Nathan E. Wood, and George Linfield. Principal Brown takes his position as a worthy upholder of the fine educational and religious standards of the Academy. His years of service have been a quarter of century of progress in material equipment, real educational achievement, and contributions to the advance of the kingdom of God.

Principal Brown was the recipient of a beautiful desk of circassian walnut with a plate glass top and a chair to match. The desk was placed in Mr. Brown's office one evening after his departure. He found it there the next morning upon his return. The gift was an appropriate expression of the feelings of students and of those who are having the pleasure of working with Mr. Brown.

The commencement dinner was particularly the event in honor of Principal Brown. About 230 were present to do honor to their beloved principal. A beautiful souvenir program in the Wayland colors with a pleasing portrait of Mr. Brown had been prepared. Mrs. Linfield, wife of former Principal Linfield, now Dean of Women of Linfield College, spoke feelingly of her interest in Wayland and in the achievement of Principal Brown, whom the Linfields claim as one of their "own boys."

Shurtleff College Commencement

By NORTON J. HILTON

Shurtleff, the pioneer college of the West, held its ninety-fifth annual commencement, Thursday, June 15. Dr. W. Edward Rafferty of the Publication Society delivered the baccalaureate address. His theme was, "Being Good, Four Square." He delighted his audience with the treatment of his subject. (1) Being Good, (2) For Something, (3) Worth While, (4) For Others. Jesus Christ was made the center of all that is good and great in man.

The graduating class numbered twenty-one, fifteen women and six men. One received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, seventeen Bachelor of Philosophy, and three Bachelor of Science. The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. W. Edward Rafferty of Philadelphia and Rev. Charles Durden of Galesburg.

This year marked the tenth commencement of the presidency of George M. Potter. When he became president there were enrolled in the academy fifty-four, and in the college department seventy-two students. Since then the academy has been discontinued and this year the enrollment in the college department was 171. In 1912 the college owned eight acres of land. Property has been acquired until today the college is in possession of twenty-three acres which form a beautiful setting for campus and buildings. The endowment has been increased from less than $200,000 to over $500,000. Plans have already matured for the erection this summer of the first unit of a series of houses for the young women of the college. This first unit will be a modern up-to-date brick building and will take care of thirty-five girls.

The alumni banquet was given, Wednesday, June 14. The outstanding feature on this occasion was the celebration of Dr. D. G. Ray's fortieth anniversary as teacher and professor. Dr. Ray became a member of the Shurtleff faculty in 1882 and most faithfully and efficiently served the college with only one brief interim through all these years. The alumni presented him with a beautiful bouquet and in the bottom of the floral basket were letters from graduates of the college who had written their congratulations and appreciation of his long years of service and the place he held in their hearts as friend and teacher.

It was greatly regretted that the Northern Baptist Convention came the same week as commencement. On this account the pre-ident's reception was omitted as many desired to hasten to the convention.

No sooner was commencement over than the college began to get ready for the Illinois Baptist Summer Assembly which meets at the college July 15-22. Three hundred young people are expected at the assembly this year.

The heroism of the American Relief workers in the Near East and their devotion to their life-saving task is illustrated by a decision recently made by J. W. Van Wert, of Fenton, Mich. In the performance of his duty at his station in the Caucasus, Mr. Van Wert received an injury which necessitated the amputation of an arm. His mother cabled him at the hospital in Constantinople asking him to return home as soon as he was able to travel and all his friends expected he would do this. Upon his discharge from the hospital, however, he returned to the Caucasus to his place of service.

B. Y. P. U. Convention

swept the convention by storm. The following outline speaks for itself:

"Men are charging that the new generation is irreligious. If this be so, it is futile to spend our time in blaming the youngsters. The only sane thing to do is to find out why our faith has lost its meaning and challenge for those whose lives have been lived in this troubled score of years. What does twenty-one want in its religion?"

"For one thing, it demands enthusiasm. The cool shadowy faith of quiet formalism; the calculating contentment of churches which count a year well spent if it records no startling losses in membership; the sophisticated aloofness of those who are happy to know that they are saved and have no sense of the tragedy of a world's misery and darkness—these things repel twenty-one. If religion means anything, it must mean a consuming dedication to an insistent propaganda, and where the consuming dedication is absent, twenty-one concludes with ruthless logic that religion does not mean anything. Given a church which dares to dream no meaner dream than a city captured by the forces of Christ, and twenty-one will show signs of interest."

"The new generation demands fearlessness. It has been taught to believe that if a theory or an institution shows signs of shrinking when faced by unbiased and cold investigation and comparison, there is something unworthy which accounts for the shrinking. It demands a religious faith which proscribes no books, prohibits no courses of study, bans no contacts with the ever-widening horizons of the world's knowledge, erects no walls about itself, but frankly and fearlessly welcomes every fair question. It instinctively shuns the religion which may be observed only under a vacuum bell in controlled laboratory conditions. Twenty-one wants a chance to test and try, and things unwilling to submit are simply shelved."

"The youngsters demand affirmatives. There is something repellent to them in a faith which boasts as its supreme virtue a catalog of prohibitions. They are not enormously impressed with a list of things one must not do, and the penalties which ensue if one does. But they become interested at once when they are confronted with an ideal of what one can do and some friendly counsel of help in the doing. They are rather indifferent about inflicted punishments, but if sins appear to hinder achievement or prevent fullness of life, they pause a bit and ponder. The nagging 'don't' of outworn pedagogy is not religion to them, but they are ready for a glorious forward-looking 'do.'

"Twenty-one makes its last demand when it insists that religion treat of life more than of death. It is not unmindful of the transitory nature of material things; it does not overlook the immortality of lives well lived; nor has it lost its pity for those in loneliness over one departed. But some of the spectral blue-light of mystery and uncanniness which once played about the fact of death has been removed from their minds. The new generation has seen too many of its contemporaries die, and that at the glad height of a glorious adventure, to feel the need of a religious faith which relieves only the pall of death. It has little patience with those who are so intent upon the melody of a glorified Zion that they have no ears for the pity of the slums. It demands a faith that is willing to be judged on the way it prepares men for life, rather than on the effectiveness of its preparation for death.

"We may deplore those demands if we choose, but we shall not gain a hearing from twenty-one as we deplore. And if these are the demands of twenty-one, the new generation has not far to go in its search for a faith which it can accept without reservation. It will find its goal in the faith of Jesus, whose passion consumed him; who dodged no question, erected no taboos; who uttered his commandments in two glorious affirmatives; and who spoke always to the problems of prosaic life. Have we forgotten that he died, a young man, surrounded by young men? Have we so libeled him in our preaching and our institutions that young men and women have consigned him to the far-distant limbo of 'after forty'?"

"THE PRAYER OF THE CHRISTIAN CRUSADER"

On Friday evening, the great audience gathered to hear an address on the above subject by Rev. G. A. Clarke, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Edmonton, Alberta. Mr. Clarke's deliberate Scotch manner won the hearts of the young people completely. He impressed them as being every inch a man, and as one who knows and lives his message. He took as his text "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." The following lines are only an extract of this powerful message.

"It is a peculiar fact that nations speak of their golden age as being in the past. Rome went back for her golden age to the reign of Augustus. The Jew went back for his golden age to the reign of David. But let us lay hold of this—the best is yet to be, in spite of the things that seem to block progress for the present. God's world is headed for things better than the world yet has ever known, and the world's golden age is not in the past, but in the future.

"Thy kingdom come,' is a prayer for the triumph of his kingdom upon earth. God is leading on, not to chaos, but to victory. Heaven will be brought down to earth, and the world's golden age will have come when God's name is hallowed, and his will is done in the hearts of men as it is done in heaven.

"I have two questions: I. What is the kingdom of God? II. How shall his kingdom make progress in the world?"

"I. What is the kingdom of God? It is not the kingdom of nature that is here thought of. It is true, as Coleridge puts it, in the 'Hymn Before Sunrise,' that 'earth with her thousand voices praises God' and that nature is in harmony with God, but that is not the kingdom thought of here. Neither is it the kingdom of political supremacy. The Jew really thought that it was. He looked for one who would rebuild the throne of David, and in reality make Jerusalem the head of a great empire on the shores of the Mediterranean Sea.

"It is a kingdom which is inward and spiritual. It consists of that relationship to God, in which the individual desires above everything else to know the will of the Father, and his master passion is to do it. I hear it in the prayer of Jesus, 'Not my will, but thine be done.' Wherever that relationship exists between a human life and the will of the Father, there a bit of the kingdom of God is abroad in the world. There a bit of the kingdom of God is walking about on two feet. Said Jesus, 'The Kingdom of God is within you,' and again, 'The kingdom of God is among you,' and wherever you see a man, the master passion of whose life is to know and to do the will of God, there you see a bit of the kingdom of God moving about among other men.

"II. How shall his kingdom make progress in the world? It shall not be by force. Obviously, it shall not be by force, either military or political. That was the fallacy of the crusades. Men were induced by the fiery enthusiasm of Peter the hermit to embark on the crusades to drive the Saracen out of Jerusalem, the holy city, and they that took the sword—many of them perished by the sword, and the crusades did not extend the kingdom of God one whit. They are interesting stories of a blundering, romantic and useless warfare. Such was the fallacy of the inquisitions of Italy and France and Spain. The superintendents of the inquisition undertook by force—by inflicting terrific bodily pain, to extort confessions of loyalty to the creeds of the church from the lips of men. And it never touched their souls.

"How shall the kingdom of God be extended? It will be through consecrated personality. By a life of splendidly developed powers put at the disposal of God's will, the doing of which is the master passion of the soul; by a life of courage and integrity in the midst of the lives of other people; and by unselfish usefulness toward other men.

"OUR BROKEN SHIPS"

This was the theme of Dr. O. C. S. Wallace, pastor of Eutaw Place Baptist Church, Baltimore, for Saturday evening. Just preceding Dr. Wallace's address, General Secretary White presented Dr. George Earl, chairman of the Twin City Committee who spoke briefly of plans for entertaining the convention. Between five and six hundred committeemen stood with Dr. Earl while the great convention applauded.

The statesmanlike bearing of Dr. Wallace aroused immediate attention. Dr. Wallace said:

"In common speech we refer figuratively to 'our ships at sea' and dream of the day when 'our ships shall come into harbor.' Then our plans shall ripen, our hopes be realized, our lives be enriched. In the days of wooden ships, there was a type called the East Indiaman, built for long voyages and large cargoes. The 'ships of Tarshish' referred to in the Old Testament were similar to these. Such ships sometimes returned after prosperous voyages, as in the days of Solomon, and sometimes were broken at the port of sailing, as in the days of Jehosaphat. Our youthful plans and hopes are the ships we send to sea. Besides the small craft, mere canvas, skiffs, or coasting vessels, there are others which represent our deepest aspiration. They are built for long voyages and large cargoes. They will bring into our characters or our careers, our family life or Christian activity, precious gold of holiness and high attainment. Every worthy soul, starting upon the Christian life, builds upon such undertakings.

"The tragedy of many a life is that these ships never even get to sea. They are broken at the port of departure. Fierce gales of temptation, or adverse influence, or bad steering, turn the ship upon the shoals. Such wild gales assailed Jesus after his baptism, but did not wreck him. He is forever our model, teaching young people how to bear themselves amidst the temptations of school or business or social life. There are myriads in our churches who gave promise of great usefulness but now are mere spectators. Their ships have been broken at the beginning of the voyage. Shaken in faith, they have no heart for humble discipleship. Absorbed in their secular tasks, they have no energy for Christian activities. Lured by selfish gaieties, the charm of the way of the cross no longer constrains them to deny themselves for Christ's sake."

Special Features

For the first time a Life Service League banquet was planned as a special feature of the convention program. One hundred and sixty attended. The interest and enthusiasm ran high as one after another of the Life Service Leaguers told of their plans for Christian work and of their struggle to secure an education in order that they might best serve in kingdom

Missionary Messages, by James F. Love, D. D., Corresponding Secretary of Foreign Mission Board, Southern Baptist Convention, New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.25.

A collection of ten addresses on the subject of foreign missions by one of the most capable men to deal with that subject. They are from the viewpoint of the Southern Baptist Missionary Board and occasionally a flavor of its sentiments is detected, but not in anyway to mar or depreciate their value. Missionary speakers and workers will find here a mine of information and inspiration.

Types of Preachers in the New Testament, by Professor A. T. Robertson. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.60.

One hardly realizes the wealth of biographical literature in the New Testament until he reads some of Dr. Robertson's volumes. The preacher will then discover he did not need to browse the "Lives" of historical characters outside the Bible to find interesting figures. In this volume we have Apollos, Barnabas, James, Stephen, Judas (the Iscariot) and many others presented each as a type of a class of preachers. The biography is not only the personal history of the subject but into it is woven much information of the world conditions of those times, and especially the social, spiritual and doctrinal life of the early church, so that the book is not only an interesting literature but educational and informing. Possibly that after all the name of the popular author is the best commendation of the work outside of the contents. We are always glad to welcome any book from the pen of Dr. Robertson, but this one seems of surpassing excellence.

"It Is to Laugh"

"Don't you sometimes lose faith in human nature?"

"Never," replied Senator Sorghum. "You can always depend on human nature for generous actions and unprejudiced opinions. That refers, of course, to genuine human nature, which isn't always easy to find. A good many people feel that they have to depend on artifice and dissimulation. Human nature, my friend, is all right. What makes the trouble in society is the de-natured humanity."—Washington Star.

Frank B. Seidman, the New York tax expert, said at a banquet:

"Some people seem to think that they can treat the government as the spoiled son treated his father.

"This young fellow got married and rented one of his father's houses. Month after month went by, however, and he paid no rent. So, one day his father said to him:

"John, I'm going to give that house to you—make you a present of it, lock, stock and barrel."

"I don't want it," said John.

"What? You don't want that nice house as a gift? Why not?"

"Because," said John, "I'd have to pay the taxes on it—that's why not."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

AVOID EXTREMES

A supersensitive correspondent who is organist of a prominent church in Ohio sends us a disgusted cry of despair about church music and everything connected with it, declaring that he is "off to the movies," where he will have a "legitimate status" and will not be "treated with contempt." We wish him all success in his new venture. Financially, he will probably be better off—but we are all occasionally treated with "contempt" in this valley of tears, from bishops and senators down to hootblacks and scullions. It is well to cultivate a tough epidermis—not for continual, indiscriminate, everyday use—but as a coat of mail to slip on when the arrows of outrageous fortune fly too near for comfort.

Dr. Morgan Dix used to say that organists, as a class, were like "delicate pieces of china:" they had to be "handled with care."

Hits Everybody

There is much truth in this—but it is general rather than special, and hits everybody more or less. We would remind our correspondent that church organists can learn self-control and patience from clergymen more often than they imagine. As far as "contempt" is concerned, the clergy trains itself to put up with a superabundance of it as a necessary part of daily discipline. How would our Ohio complainant feel if he were in holy orders and inclined to take seriously the "Conclusion" of that extraordinary book, "Painted Windows," by the author of "The Mirror of Downing Street"? The study of the lives and characteristics of the most eminent religious teachers of the day is supplemented by the following:

"The average clergyman, I am afraid, is regarded in these days as something of a bore, a wet-blanket even at tea-parties. Something is wrong with the church. It is impious to think that heaven interposed in the affairs of humanity to produce that ridiculous mouse, the modern curate. No teacher in the history of the world ever occupied a lower place in the respect of men. So deep is the pit into which the modern minister has fallen that no one attempts to get him out. He is abandoned by the world. He figures with the starving children of Russia in appeals to the charitable, an object of pity. The hungry sheep look up and are not fed, but the shepherd also looks up from his pit of poverty and neglect, as hungry as the sheep, hungry for the bare necessities of animal life. This is surely a tragic position for a preacher of good news. Why is the church so powerless? Why is it that she has so totally lost the attention of mankind?"

Our correspondent will exclaim that this is an exaggeration. But so also is the following, which recently appeared in a well-known daily, and which is a fair sample of what is written about organists:

"The lot of the church organists in the country is not a happy one. As a rule he is poorly paid. He is at the mercy of the committee on music, a committee ruled by the chairman's wife, who either sings a little and is therefore a severe critic of the choir, or makes noises on the piano. Sometimes in the Episcopal church the rector asks him why he does not give the whole of Bach's Passion according to St. Matthew; he has heard that it is of a religious nature. If the soprano in the quartet makes a mistake she quickly glares at the organist, and the congregation at once sympathizes with her. His position is a little below that of the furnace man. No wonder he is glad to leave the church for the film theatre."

We again refer to the advice of our old friend Aristotle, "Avoid extremes"—whether we write about the "ridiculous mouse" or the "furnace man."—New Music Review.

CONVENTION PLANS OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ORGANISTS

At the executive committee meeting May 15 definite action was taken on many of the plans for the Chicago convention. It was voted that the Auditorium Hotel should be headquarters and it is advisable to make reservations early, as the first week in August is to be a busy one for Chicago. This hotel is two and a half blocks from Kimball Hall, where many of the meetings will be held. You will receive a letter giving rates not only of the Auditorium, but also of several other hotels near by. For reservations, address Miss Florence Hodge, 6 Scott Street, Chicago.

Clarence Albert Tufts, the brilliant concert organist from Los Angeles, will play a recital, probably at Kimball Hall, and arrangements have been completed whereby the Medinah Temple Organ will be available for an afternoon two-console recital. Courboin and Maitland will be heard on that afternoon.

As a special feature we are fortunate in being able to have Paul E. Sabin of the River Bank Laboratories, Geneva, Ill., for a talk on acoustics. This will be illustrated with lantern slides. The River Bank Laboratories have done marvelous research work and this lecture should be most interesting.

Among other speakers will be Dean Peter C. Lutkin of Northwestern University, Dr. Felix Borowski, president of the Chicago Musical College, and, we hope, John Alden Carpenter, one of America's foremost composers. Any one of these men will have a real message which will give the convention a great distinction.

Couple these events with the recitals of Farnam and Eddy and it gives Chicago a four-day period which will be hard to surpass.—The Diapason.

A contract for a large two-manual organ has been let by the Court Street Baptist Church of Portsmouth, Va., to the Hall Organ Co., for immediate installation.

Art springs in its earliest beginnings from religion, and returns to it in its highest development.—Ambrose.

O Music, thou who bringest the receding waves of eternity nearer to the weary heart of man, as he stands upon the shore and longs to cross over, art thou the evening breeze of life, or the morning air of the future?—Jean Paul Richter.

work. The Life Service League is one of the great departments of the Baptist Young People's Union of America and now has a membership of over 1700 young people who are preparing for some form of Christian service. During these years a study has been made of the general educational situation among young people deciding for Christian service. Three or four years ago a great part if not the larger part of the decisions were among those with only school grade education. Within the four year period it has been found that by far the larger majority now deciding for Christian service, are of high school, college, and university grades. This is one of the most hopeful indications in the Baptist denomination today.

Awards

The international banner for having the largest mileage, was again awarded to Illinois, with a total mileage of 114,534. Iowa came second with a mileage of $8,400, Wisconsin third with a total of 60,085, New York, fourth with a total of 43,750 and No. Dakota fifth with a mileage of 41,584. This banner is awarded on the basis of the number of delegates multiplied by the number of miles from the state or provincial capital, to the convention city.

The banner offered by the schools and college committee for having present the largest number of delegates present, in proportion to Baptist students in attendance upon the institution, was awarded to the University of Manitoba, with Des Moines University in second place.

Banquets

Of all sorts, shapes and sizes! State and provincial delegations, and interstate and provincial. Friday afternoon of the convention is left clear for this get-together time. Hotels and eating houses were in many cases taxed to capacity to provide the necessary accommodations.

Alumni of Denison University staged an all Denison affair on Saturday evening with a goodly number on hand to renew old fellowships.

Some Things Not Reportable

Just what impression a stranger gets when he sees a young people's convention in action for the first time, would be hard to say. Yells, songs, demonstrations of all sorts, unusual costumes, varieties of headgear—most everything that young people can think up to have lots of fun, and they had it. The reporter had to stop and get into the game when things broke loose.

These outbursts came at times just preceding the finest devotional services. But the young people have come to understand that there is no contradiction between a lot of wholesome fun at the right time, and deep spiritual piety. Within three minutes they can make the transition from one attitude to the other, and set some of the "brethren" and especially some of the ministers a fine example as good listeners.

Business Affairs

Details of business were worked out in long and weary sessions of the various boards and committees. Unanimity of opinion in the board meetings which prevailed after lengthy discussions, also prevailed in the convention itself when reports were presented. Legislation was kept in the background while the great educational and inspirational features were magnified.

Conferences

On Thursday and Friday afternoons, conferences were conducted as follows: "Local Organization and Operation" by Miss Vera Rice; "Missions" by Misses Helen Crissman and Evalyn Camp; "Juniors" by Miss Meme Brockway; "City Union and Associational Organization and Operation" by Mr. Thomas Riches; "Social and Recreational" by Miss Edna Geister; "Stewardship in Action" by Miss Jessie Burrall; "Church Vacation Schools" by Messrs. L. J. Velte and F. H. Fahringer; "Young People in Village and Rural Communities" by Dr. Herbert Hines; "Church Leadership in Civic Affairs" by Dr. M. P. Boynton; "Evangelism of Youth" and "The Devotional Life of Youth" by Rev. A. H. Gage.

Great interest was manifested in these conferences. In some cases the attendance ran over five hundred for individual conferences. Plans were outlined, books were suggested, and loyalty urged as the young people return to the home church where the tasks are hard.

The American Baptist Publication Society representatives were on hand with a fine display of good books for young people. This greatly re-enforced the work of the conference leaders.

That Last Day

How can we ever forget it. Thousands had begun to pray early in the sessions, and even months before the delegates assembled. The early morning prayer service centered around the activities of the day. As the young people assembled in the local twin city churches for worship, they prayed.

At three o'clock Sunday afternoon, thousands came together with an air of expectancy. The great chorus choir directed by Mr. Clissold was soon in action. At 3:30 Dr. Carl D. Case, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Oak Park, Ill., spoke on "The Challenge of the Best." This was a life enlistment service and as Dr. Case spoke, God moved upon the hearts of the young people. In a straightforward way he threw out the challenge for life service. Some could hardly wait until he was through before starting to the great platform, which had been cleared to receive them. They responded from all parts of the house as Mr. Clissold sang "I gave, I gave my life for thee, what hast thou given to me?" We stood on the platform to welcome them as they came. The countenances of the young people were lighted by the spirit of God; now and then a tear and a sob.

If the Baptist people of the United States and Canada could have looked upon that host of young people, there giving themselves to the work of the kingdom of God, they would go out determined to give, and that at once, all the money necessary to finance the great kingdom enterprises of the denomination.

Space will not permit an outline of Dr. Case's address. The young people's topic for April 15, 1923, will be "Stewardship of Self." The B. Y. P. U. of America plans to put this in pamphlet form for distribution among young people's societies of the United States and Canada for use in connection with the above named topic. Watch the pages of THE BAPTIST for announcements.

At an early date, we hope to be able to present to the readers of this paper, a picture of the group of young people who went forward on Sunday afternoon. Watch for it.

Sunday night found an audience of over eight thousand present for the closing session. The coronation, or closing address was delivered by Dr. Wallace who spoke on "Something More for God." Dr. Wallace said in part:

"Service, and yet more service" is the slogan of every man-serving enterprise today. 'Consecration, and yet more consecration' is the motto of every aspiring young Christian. The call comes in both the great hours of life and amidst life's commonplaces.

"When the soul starts to respond to this call resistance is met from without and from within. Old companions, practices, and haunts cling, beckon, lure. Self-will also joins its force to external influence, or even self distrust. When Emily Chubbuck's purpose to become the wife of Adoniram Judson, and go out to Burma with the veteran missionary became known, the literary world of America protested against her sacrifice in marrying 'an old missionary.' When James Brainerd Taylor determined that he would be 'an uncommon Christian,' he found that there must be frequent wrestlings with the forces within his soul if he were to realize his high ideal.

"Impulse toward this holier life will grow greater as we realize the real character of our being. Man is an embodiment of life and love. 'Something more for God' is the program of life everywhere, and of love. Life makes a program, whether in seed, bee, bird, or man. Love makes a program, involving doing more, giving more, loving more. 'Something more for God' is the impulse of life and love. All nature reveals this. Every form of life proclaims it. Love in every domain makes it known. 'Something more for God' is the ideal of life and love. Without such a program no one can realize the highest demands of his own soul.

"There is an insistent call today that the rank and file in our churches shall give themselves incessantly and with holy passion not only to their own upbuilding in Christian character, but to a personal evangelism which shall adequately commend God and his redemption to all sorts and conditions of men."

Just before Dr. Wallace was presented to the convention, President Atwater turned the gavel over to Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, pastor of Judson Memorial Church, Minneapolis, the new president. Other officers elected are: Vice-presidents, Mr. Thomas Riches, Hamilton, Ont., Can. Mr. T. G. Newbill, Kansas City, Mo. and Rev. C. A. Carman, Grinnell, Iowa; recording secretary, John R. Glading, Detroit; treasurer, Mr. Orlo O. Montague, Chicago. James Asa White was again unanimously elected as general secretary.

Invitations for the convention were presented from Denver, Omaha, Portland, Washington, and Boston. Some of these invitations extended through to 1925 and 1926. Boston was in the lead for 1923, and the convention so voted.

At the close of the address by Dr. Wallace, the convention sang "God be with you till we meet again." President Sanborn declared the convention adjourned to meet in Boston, July 5-8, 1923.

As to how the delegates were entertained, what they thought of St. Paul people, the city, and the convention, this will be told in "Convention Impressions" which will appear in several issues of this paper. Don't miss them. Last report showed over 9,000 registered delegates.

The Light Shineth in the Darkness and the Darkness Overcame It Not

THE chart before him lay, wherein to see
Defeat and failure as his ancestry,
Weakness and pain as his heredity.

He bowed his head in bitter agony,
Feeling himself unworthy utterly.

Then light, through black despair,
Shone piercingly—

"They have forgot my brother," whispered he,
"Jesus, who died for others on the tree,
And my great Father, God, who strengthens me."

Fresh from the Field

Mr. John D. Rockefeller Sr. celebrated his eighty-third birthday July 8.

The National Reform Association announces a Christian Citizenship Institute at Winona Lake, Aug. 8-17.

Christie Street Baptist Church, Toronto, suffered $3,500 loss by fire on Sunday, June 25, covered by insurance.

Rev. R. O. Harris, of Wellington, Kan., has become pastor of the Chelsea Church at Kansas City, Kan.

Mrs. Sophronia Pettit, a Canadian woman who had been a Baptist for the past eighty-six years, died at Peoria, Ill., July 10, at the age of 102.

Professor Fred G. Boughton, of Denison University, has accepted the presidency of Sioux Falls College (S. Dak.) and will begin his work September first.

The National Education Association unanimously elected as president at its Boston meeting July 7, a Chicago educator, William B. Owen.

By inadvertence a correspondent referring to the late Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, erred in the name of the lady he married a few years ago. She was Mrs. Caroline Levering Stafford.

The First Church, Santa Ana, Cal., Otto S. Russell, pastor, held a "Christmas Tree" July 12 for its foreign representative Miss Viola Hill, of Ningo, China, and for Mrs. Wm. Ashmore, both of whom return to their field in August.

Rev. D. F. Rittenhouse, pastor First Church, Columbus, was the pulpit supply July 16 at Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland. The junior church is a feature at Euclid Ave., and claims to be one of the largest in America.

Ninety-six per cent of the Maine churches are contributors to the New World Movement. The state shows a gain of 400 per cent in six years in its benevolent offerings. The Saco convention unanimously committed Maine Baptists anew to the movement.

The churches at Glasford and Moweaqua, Ill., have enjoyed the ministry of pastor L. D. Lamkin of Olney, Ill., in special meetings. Mr. Lamkin closes his work with the Olney church this month and will be available for evangelistic campaigns, to which work he feels especially called. He may be addressed at Olney.

Brandon College (Manitoba) at its last commencement conferred the honorary degree Doctor of Laws honoris causa on Prof. Harris L. MacNeill, an early arts graduate of McMaster University, whose record as teacher at Woodstock College, Washburn College, and Brandon College has reflected high honor upon his alma mater.

The Cedar Falls, Iowa, Bible Conference, Aug. 6-13, includes on its program Campbell Morgan, Evangelist W. B. Biederwolf, E. O. Sellers, Miss Helen Byrnes and Bishop Homer Stuntz. There are no fees for registration. Parley E. Zartmann is director. Miss Edith Mae Bell, of Chicago, will conduct study classes during the conference. Room and board for the period will range from $10 up.

As Others See Us

THE Indianapolis Convention was widely reported, in both secular and religious journals, and the significant action of Friday, June 14, on the Confession of Faith, was given editorial comment in many papers. THE BAPTIST believes that a review of these press reports and comments will be of interest to our readers as a matter of news. We quote a few secular dailies, from several liberal journals, and also from our evangelical exchanges. These expressions are presented solely as a news feature. Careful effort has been made to indicate exactly what the writers intended, though the quotations obviously cannot be complete.

Philadelphia North American:

"With world affairs still in a state confused and threatening, and with domestic problems of great public urgency under discussion, the newspapers of the country gave columns of space recently to the proceedings of a Baptist convention in Indianapolis. That a sectarian gathering of this nature should compete for attention with events of national and international concern may seem curious; the simple explanation is that the assemblage furnished news which deeply interests a very large proportion of the readers of newspapers. For it produced the first open test of strength between two forces which are contending for leadership in the Christian church. While the first test has come in the Baptist communion, precisely the same cleavage is manifesting itself in other denominations. Among the clergy and members of these bodies here are held two conceptions of the Christian religion which their adherents consider irreconcilable. The one is called primitive, the other modern. The one is based upon supernaturalism, the other upon rationalism. The one required absolute belief in a faith revealed through an inerrant Bible; the other seeks to harmonize itself with science and a developing civilization. The one holds that religion is essentially individual and static, the other that it is social and evolutionary. The one views it as a preparation for existence beyond the grave, the other as a means of bettering the world here." * * * * It will be a matter of no small concern if churches representing so large a part of our population should divide upon the issue. For here is no mere hair-splitting on dogma, but a cleavage wide and deep in controlling beliefs. There is no common ground of faith between those who believe that civilization is progressing morally and spiritually, and those who believe that it is swiftly degenerating and is to be overthrown by a returning Christ."

Indianapolis Star:

"While the matter of creed over which the convention held warm discussions is not a concern of non-members of the great Baptist organization, it is undoubtedly a source of satisfaction to the broad-minded element of church-going people of Indianapolis that the convention voted so emphatically not to narrow its policy by the adoption of a fixed and rigid creed. Other churches have found such creeds stumbling blocks. * * * The Baptist church has flourished for many years under the wide scope of this highest authority and it decided wisely in voting to continue in the same path."

The Nation (New York):

"After a campaign in which they won minor victories, the fundamentalists put their power to the test at the national convention of the Baptist churches. They were decisively defeated in their efforts to impose a creed upon their denomination, nor did their opposition to the social gospel prevent the convention from voting $25,000 to the Federal Council of Churches which has taken a rather liberal stand in economic matters. These victories were not won in the name of modernism but of an inclusive church. They mean nevertheless that the doors of one of the greatest of Protestant bodies are not to be shut to men of modern mind. The defeat of the fundamentalists in the church in which they were best organized may well mark the turning-point in the tide of religious reaction."

Unity (Chicago) Liberal:

"The great weakness of the position of the convention, as one is able to gather it from reports, lies in the fact that the New Testament is again used as an ultimate authority. The delegates did not adopt a creed such as the reactionaries tried to force upon them. But is it true that they did not adopt any creed whatsoever? Are they left free? Is it not nearer the truth to say that they adopted a creed which consists of some twenty odd volumes written by various authors, and furthermore a creed which forms the basis for the contentions of the fundamentalists? * * *

"The question does not hinge on respect for the New Testament. It hinges on the question as to whether the Baptists are free, having adopted the New Testament as their creed? The writer submits that they are not, for the reason that they have struck out no new principle to guide conscience or conduct in matters of religious life. They have simply done what Luther did four hundred years ago, viz: made the Bible the test of religious truth."—CLARENCE R. SKINNER.

Universalist Leader (Boston):

"It was a victory, not for one side over the other, but for the Baptist church. In a time when the orthodox world is moved as it has never been before in recent years, by the widespread effort to force ancient interpretations, under the name of 'fundamentals,' upon a world which Christianity has transformed, it is significant that one of the largest and strongest of orthodox denominations, without committing itself upon the merits or demerits of the so-called 'fundamentals,' makes its declaration to re-establish itself upon the New Testament with freedom of individual interpretation."

Christian Century (Chicago) Liberal-Disciple:

"Progressive-minded Baptists have returned home from the Indianapolis convention relieved of their fears of a rupture in their northern denomination and rejoicing in a notable and definitive triumph for the ideals of fraternity and freedom for which Baptists have always been supposed to stand. It is a victory in which all American Protestantism may claim a share. Leaders of all our Christian groups had come to feel that the event toward which the forces within the Baptist body have been moving for more than three years was one in which our common Christianity had a vital stake. Without doubt the successful carrying out of the fundamentalist program in the Northern Baptist Convention would not only have transformed the character of the denom-

Excess Modesty

If you think enough of your town to be willing to preach in it, why not print it on your church bulletin? We have at hand a newsy and attractive weekly calendar thoughtfully mailed us by somebody; but for the life of us we cannot figure out for sure where the church is located. Higher criticism yields a trace of a clue on which we might build a hypothesis, but—well, it is safer, if “assured results” are desired, just to stick in the name of town and state. “Was that somebody YOU?”

Killam's Kollum

Thank You

Pastor L. D. Lambkin of Olney, Ill., who has resigned to give himself to evangelistic work, writes: “I am sorry that I have to ask you to discontinue THE BAPTIST. I will miss its visits, but I will soon be out holding meetings and will be unable to get it. . . . God bless you in sending the message of the kingdom to Baptist families throughout the Northern Baptist Convention.”

Name Please?

And if you think enough of your convictions to be willing to write them to the editor of THE BAPTIST, why not add your name at the end of your letter? We have at hand a racy and peppery letter from a western layman; but Arizona is a large state and our insight is defective when it comes to spotting the good brother who wrote us. Please sign your name to all communications to this office; if you do not want it printed say so and we will do our best to protect your anonymity.

Chemically Pure

Water kept in circulation is generally considered more desirable for drinking purposes than water which does not circulate. The better the circulation, the better the water. A great light has just dawned upon us; we have sometimes wondered why some of the Baptist papers of America are not more palatable and refreshing. It must be because their circulation is so poor! Modesty restrains us from stating the converse of that illuminating conclusion—but THE BAPTIST does circulate vigorously. That's why it's so—but we almost forgot our modesty!

Look Them Up

Do you know how many blind people live in your town or neighborhood? Have you ever thought of their possible need of a special ministry of the word of God because of their affliction? What a challenge such folks are to the love and consecration of young Christians! Hunt them up, call on them in his name, make sure that they have the Gospels at least in raised type if they can read them. If not, then they must just depend on you to read to them:

The First Church, Clinton, Ill., Dr. O. P. Miles, pastor, held its annual meeting July 6. Current and benevolent obligations have been fully met and a gain of 50 per cent in membership, and a splendid advance in Sunday-school work were indicated in the reports. A brick parsonage is nearing completion.

Dr. W. P. Throgmorton, editor of the Illinois Baptist, was married at Nashville on June 28 to Miss Kathrine Edwards of Marion, Ill. Miss Edwards, who is 33, has served for several years most efficiently as stenographer in Dr. Throgmorton's office and has been active in Christian work both in Marion and in the Southern Baptist Convention.

Springfield, Mo., First Church, of which Claude D. Miller is pastor, now has a total membership of 1,608, an increase of over 700 during the present pastorate of six years. The Sunday school averages 748. There were 356 additions last year, 168 being by baptism. Seven young people of the church are preparing in school for Christian work. The missionary offerings are divided equally between the Northern and Southern conventions.

The administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion has ordered General Director Aitchison to take a complete rest this summer preparatory to the new campaign of the coming season. Rev. W. H. Bowler of Boise, Ida., field secretary of the board, is at the New York office during Dr. Aitchison's absence, in charge of the plans for promotion work and for prompt consideration of matters needing attention.

Alberta Baptists held their annual convention at Calgary in June. An entire day of the program was devoted to religious education, the final address of the day being given by Pastor Geo. A. Clarke of Edmonton, who delivered the convention sermon on "The Bible and its Relation to the Future Civilization." The convention again voted against introducing the teaching of the Bible in the public schools.

Eight thousand people assembled on the pier and wharf when the "Aquitania" sailed from New York harbor for Europe, July 4, carrying among its passengers a distinguished and precious Baptist delegation, Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Washington, Dr. Carter Helm Jones of Philadelphia, and Dr. Frederick E. Taylor of Indianapolis. We may remark that not all the 8,000 farewellers were there to see our brethren off.

Rev. and Mrs. C. Chaney, missionaries from Maubin, Burma, British India, arrived in the states via Montreal on June 11. They are visiting Mrs. Chaney's sister at Rouse's Point, N. Y., during July and August. After September 1 their address will be 313 Ellicott Street, Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Chaney attended the fifteenth reunion of his class at Yale, where he won the silver "Long Distance Plate," given each reunion to the member of the class who traveled farthest to attend the reunion.

Grinnell Church, Iowa, announces open air services during the summer on Sunday evenings, to be held in the park, with the local band giving a sacred concert. Pastor Charles Carman spoke at the first service on "Winning the War."

ination directly involved, but would have colored appreciably the quality of spiritual life in every denomination in America. * * *

"For the Baptist denomination to have made itself reactionary and at the same time remained united would have been a tragedy not alone to the Baptists but to catholic Christianity. * * *

"On the other hand, had the fundamentalists won and had the liberals seceded, as it was felt they would in large numbers be bound to do, the result also would have been tragic. With Protestantism scandalously divided already, and impotent because of its divisions, the effect would have been more disheartening than any occurrence in modern religious history."

Western Advocate (Cincinnati) Methodist:

"We are assured there will be no split among the Baptists of the North and that there will be no closer affiliation than formerly with the Baptists of the South. It is very evident that the conservatives commanded a strong influence at the convention. They somehow have their hands upon the general benevolences of the church. This enables them to make any kind of a threat or statement to the members of the party of the other part and force them in line by the lash of the financial whip. The information has been given out that 1,800 churches withheld their gifts until these doctrinal controversies are somehow satisfactorily dealt with. The outcome decrees that the Baptists will have no written creed, that the Board of Promotion is to be retained, and that the weekly paper, THE BAPTIST, will be continued. In most of the contests during the convention the progressives won at every point, including the election of the president for 1922-23."

Word and Way (Kansas City):

"The Northern Baptist Convention has put itself on record as being in sympathy with liberalism. The convention at its late session put to rest all doubt concerning its liberal attitude and sympathies. When we say the Northern Baptist Convention, we do not mean Northern Baptists. We have the steadfast belief that the majority of Northern Baptists are conservative in their theology, and are not all in sympathy with the liberals and their program. But unhappily the convention, in its official conduct, does not represent and reflect the majority sentiment of the Baptists in the territory of the convention. Plainly, the convention leadership and convention constituency are not in harmony. The confessedly liberal element in the convention at Indianapolis held the whip hand. Through their adroit leadership the fundamentalists were out-generaled and out-voted. * * *

"Everyone who reads THE BAPTIST knows that it is in sympathy with the liberal school among Northern Baptists. And no one who reviews the history of the paper can escape the conclusion that it was brought into existence to serve the cause of liberalism."

"It is now a question as to how long the conservative majority of the constituency of the convention are going to suffer the liberal leadership and control of the convention. The fundamentalists went to Indianapolis desiring and expecting to get control of the convention. In this they suffered disappointment and defeat. While cast down, they are not in despair. We understand that it is their plan to continue in the convention, to continue their operation and at the same time continue their propaganda. They have organized for this purpose. They propose in a more extensive and intensive way than ever to push the claims of fundamentalists and in this way ultimately to capture and control the machinery of the convention, and so modify the policies of the convention and so change its personnel as to make the convention in all of its operations, conserve and promote the fundamentals of the gospel."

Biblical Recorder (N. C.):

"Unwritten History." "The failure of the Northern Baptist Convention to agree on a statement as to the things which Baptists consider fundamental in matters of doctrine, makes it seem proper for us to explain the action of our recent convention in rejecting the request of the Columbia Conference that our convention appoint a committee to join with a similar committee to be appointed by the Northern Convention, should they see fit to comply with the request, which joint committee would prepare a doctrinal statement to be passed upon by each of the conventions at the session of 1923. * * *

"Had we complied with the request of the Columbia Conference by naming a committee on doctrinal statement, we believe the Northern Convention would have done likewise, and a statement might have been made which could have been accepted as the position American Baptists take on the great fundamentals. * * *

"We sincerely believe the Southern Convention missed a fine opportunity to serve the cause in a great way. Favorable action on the resolution by our convention, we verily believe, would have gone far toward unifying the Northern Convention."

Observer (Indiana):

"Now, what did we accomplish? From the standpoint of theological controversy, nothing was settled. The mere out-voting the fundamentalists on the several issues neither annihilated them nor silenced them. They immediately rallied their forces and have reorganized with a determination to carry the contest to Washington next year. If we may be permitted to assume the role of a prophet, we will venture the prediction that no extreme faction on any theological controversy will ever be able to carry the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington or anywhere else, any more than they did at Indianapolis. * * *

"The great majority of Northern Baptists believe that the meetings of the convention are no place to discuss theological creeds and determine a confession of faith. That is the prerogative of the local church. We have heard much criticism of the invasion of the rights of the local church and the centralization of authority. There is a general desire to get back to a program of reports from our far-flung line of missionary outposts on the frontiers of civilization and a careful planning for future conquests for Christ. How we used to be thrilled and inspired by the recital of heroism and achievement! We need more of it in these sordid days."

The Baptist

"I See Men"

THE touch of Jesus possessed transforming power. Lepers were made every whit whole, shrivelled limbs recovered their lost vitality; even a corpse on its way to interment became again the tenement of a human soul.

The touch of Jesus has effected spiritual redemption, initiated intellectual revolution, wrought social reconstruction. Jean Paul Richter speaks adoringly of him "who, being the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy, lifted with his pierced hands the gates of empire off their hinges, and turned the stream of the centuries out of its channel and still governs the ages."

The touch of Jesus imparts to the human soul a new vision of the outside world, a new consciousness of social relations, a new attitude toward the neighbor and the community, a new sympathy for the race. Mark in his vivid story of the life of our Lord records an episode not found elsewhere (8:22-25):

"And they came to Bethsaida. And a blind man was brought to Jesus and they entreated him to touch him. So he took the blind man by the arm and brought him out of the village, and spitting into his eyes he put his hands on him and asked him, 'Can you see anything?' He looked up and said, 'I can see the people: I see them like trees—only walking.' Then for the second time he put his hands on the man's eyes, and the man, looking steadily, recovered his sight and saw everything distinctly." (Weymouth's translation.)

We have the whole gospel epitomized in that graphic line, "He took the blind man by the arm and brought him out." What is it but a parable of the Incarnation of the Son of God for our redemption? ("Assuredly it is not to angels that he is continually reaching a helping hand, but it is to the descendants of Abraham"—Hebrews 2:16, Weymouth; the verb is identical with that in Mark).

The touch of Jesus, we have said, imparts a new vision of the outside world. Of this truth the story of the Bethsaida blind man is a striking parable; for, with Godet, we believe that "every miracle is the visible type, the speaking pledge and earnest of a spiritual miracle, greater and still more saving than the external one." When Jesus had laid his healing hand upon the useless eyes, he asked the man, "Can you see anything?" Looking up and slowly claiming his new heritage of vision he answered, "I can see the people."

The record of the social and moral progress of the race since the advent of the Redeemer is largely an expansion of the Bethsaida episode. The touch of Jesus has given to self-contained and self-interested souls a vision of others. We recall such men as Paul the rabbi, John the fisherman, Augustine the libertine, Loyola the soldier, Wilberforce the emancipator, Carey the missionary; such men as Grenfell of Labrador, Livingstone of Africa, Paton of Tanna; such women as Dorcas, and Elizabeth Fry, and Frances Willard and Isabella Thoburn and Ann Hazeltine Judson; and we recognize in them the transforming power of the touch of Jesus.

Through long centuries of human misery and slavery and agony and despair, he has been laying his hands upon men and women that they might acquire a new vision, that they might cry out under the spell of his redeeming grace, "I can see the people!" that they might come to share his compassion for the multitudes distressed and scattered as sheep not having a shepherd. The hope of deliverance from the sin and blight of selfishness—which is the root of all sins—whether for the individual or for the race, is in the transformation wrought by the touch of Jesus. The revelation of his grace and the communication of his love to our selfish hearts results for us in the discovery of man, the awakening of a sense of the need and claim of others, the acceptance of an obligation to society: and these issue in a new life of helpful service as the love of Christ constrains us.

The touch of Jesus secures the enrichment of family life and all social relations. A guest in a railroad Y. M. C. A. went through the corridors at midday whistling, unconscious of all save himself. Suddenly he came upon a sign on the wall which flashed at him the reminder and rebuke, "Other men are sleeping." Instantly he thought of railroad engineers who had been at the throttle the night before and who had a right to sleep. In that hour a new sense of personal responsibility to others was born in the heart of the careless whistler. The denial of self and the enthronement of love for the brother, the neighbor—these are the marks, the fruit, of the transforming touch of Jesus.

What other cure for industrial unrest and warfare is available save this contact of Jesus which leads each soul, each group, to confess, "I see men"? An English preacher tells us that in ancient times there stood in the Vale of Clwyd in Wales a line of crosses around which in harvest season men gathered to settle the weekly wage to be paid to laborers throughout the valley. The wage agreed on was known as the Wage of the Cross. All agreements thus contracted under the shadow of the cross were regarded as sacred and were rarely broken. In a social order impressed by the touch of Jesus, infused by his spirit, overshadowed by his cross, no room or need will remain for strikes, lockouts, defiance of law, armed guards, pickets, injunctions, massacres.

The touch of Jesus imparts the only adequate and abiding motive for social service and political reform.

Without his life and love and gracious presence, the heart of the social or civic worker tends to become callous, cynical, sordid. Mabel Easton, in a significant paper reprinted by the State Charities Aid Association of New York for use among county agents, thus confesses the absolute necessity for a spiritual motive and power in social service: "The county agent faces certain grave dangers. Much of her work is with life, very sordid; manhood marred and misshapen, womanhood besmirched and soiled, childhood cursed into being, stunted and dwarfed. What wonder then, that unless she is very careful, her sense of value suffers, the whole world seems gone astray, society crumbling and degenerate. More than all others the county agent, * * * if she is to keep her balance and continue effective must be bulwarked by the strength of a deep, sure and unshakable spiritual background. She cannot spend of herself, day after day, unless as constantly renewed by the Great Giver of Gifts."

The missionary enterprise, in its essential elements, lives and achieves because Jesus has imparted to those whom he has saved, a vision of others, a compassion for the world that lieth in wickedness and woe. "Can you see anything?" he asks of the church which he created and energized. "I can see the people," is the quick response for which he waits with eagerness. When Jesus had finished his healing work with the blind man at Bethsaida, "he was restored and saw all things clearly,"—the word is literally, "from afar." The vision which Jesus imparts reveals to the Christian heart even the most remote, the most degraded, the most prodigal, the most hopeless peoples; and that vision constrains us to bear to all these the blessed gospel of our Lord.

James Chalmers, the heroic martyr-missionary of the South Seas, while planning at Rarotonga his perilous venture to New Guinea, wrote: "How I should rejoice to stand in the center of Papua, and tell of infinite love! The nearer I get to Christ and his cross the more do I long for direct contact with the heathen. The one wish is, to be entirely spent for Christ, working, consumed in his love." Chalmers has here epitomized the history, the philosophy, of Christian missions, in a single sentence: "The nearer I get to Christ and his cross the more do I long for direct contact with the heathen."

"The night lies dark upon the earth—
And we have light;
So many have to grope their way—
AND WE HAVE SIGHT!"

Reading the Bible

A SOUTHERN Baptist lady tells in the Christian Index of a recent adventure in rapid reading of the word of God:

"I have read the Bible through several times, covering a year each time. Have studied it by books and by subjects. May 8, I began this last and fast method, reading no other books in the meantime, but being a housekeeper, wife and mother, I have many duties. I averaged three and one twenty-ninth hours a day for twenty-nine days. Total hours reading from Gen. 1:1 to Rev. 22:21, eighty-eight hours. It has been a wonderful reading and a blessed experience to me."

The Prohibition Poll

THE Literary Digest is taking a poll of ten million voters on the liquor issue. The ballots ask for the voter's choice of Strict Enforcement of the Volstead Law; Modification; or Repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

The first figures, published July 15, embracing 95,000 ballots chiefly from eastern states and largely a city vote, gives a total of 32,445 for Strict Enforcement, 39,665 for Modification, and 22,547 for Repeal.

While more votes have been cast thus far for Modification than for Strict Enforcement, yet considering the territory represented, these first figures are evidence that the nation is definitely and determinedly "dry."

Note these facts:

1. Not a single state gives a majority for Repeal: not even New Jersey nor New York.

2. Cutting out the southern and western states, predominantly dry (many of them by state enactment before the Amendment was adopted), the fourteen northeastern states (nearly all wet before the Amendment) taken as a whole voted against Repeal 3 to 1. New Jersey and Pennsylvania voted 2½ to 1 against Repeal; New York, Illinois and Massachusetts 3 to 1; Connecticut 3½ to 1; Ohio 6 to 1; Wisconsin nearly 7 to 1. California, with its notoriously wet proclivities, voted 4 to 1 against Repeal.

3. Three states only (Rhode Island, Maryland, Kentucky), gave more votes for Repeal than for Strict Enforcement; and the aggregate of all votes cast in these three states so far reported is less than 200—a slim basis for calculation.

There is no comfort coming, in this poll, for the wets nor for the moists. America is dry and will stay dry.

A Black Man

A NOTABLE speaker at the Indianapolis Convention was Major Robert R. Moton, head of Tuskegee Institute, whose convincing address, "The Negro in America" was published in THE BAPTIST of July 1. On that very day, it happens, a woman in New York City was trying to cross Fifth Avenue at a rush hour, and becoming confused halted right in the path of a speeding automobile. While the crowds turned sick with horror at the impending tragedy, a powerful black man rushed to her and dragged her to safety. As the man sought to lose himself in the admiring throng who had seen the rescue, a traffic cop asked him his name, saying, "That was a brave act, and I want to report it." "Just say a black man did it," replied the stranger, and turned away. The rescuer was Major Robert R. Moton.

Dr. Cleaves Called to Providence

DR. ARTHUR W. CLEAVES, who served with devotion and efficiency the Northern Baptist Convention as editor of THE BAPTIST for two and a half years, has received a call to the pastorate of the historic First Church of Providence, R. I. His fine personality and rich culture combined with a manifest wealth of Christian faith and experience which promise a fruitful ministry in the new field of service.

The Kingship of Christ in Politics

By HENRY KALLOCH ROWE

TO most persons the word politics has an unsavory reputation. It is a reminder of the scheming and graft of ambitious and unscrupulous men, the sordid atmosphere of the ward room and the extravagant untruths that the stump speaker at times permits himself. Higher up politics seems to mean congressional log-rolling and pork barrels, conscienceless diplomacy and international wire-pulling. It is not easy to forget that it was a conscienceless political ambition, scheming ruthlessly for power, that precipitated the world's worst war. It is not strange if the citizen who thus interprets politics condemns the whole system—local, national and world politics. Moralize politics? It is hopeless. Christianize politics? As well hope to freshen the salt-saturated sea.

In the discussion of this subject, clear thinking is essential. It is impossible in a brief chapter to discuss or even mention many of the questions that are involved. But three things are essential in this paper. We note, first, the meaning and necessity of the state in its primary functions of public order, social regulation, human welfare and social justice. These are kingdom values, and the state in conserving them may thus serve the kingdom of God. Second, since this is the case, Christian people are to seek the kingdom of God in and through the state and are to carry the Christian ideal and spirit into every detail of their citizenship. Third, the state becomes Christian and comes under the authority of Christ, as his ideal, his spirit, his method and purpose find realization in and through its ideal, policies, methods and results.

The Function of Government

If we are to think correctly, we shall define politics as the art of social control, the every-day expression of that rather vague abstraction which we call the state. The unthinking citizen has a hazy conception of the authority of law and is in the habit of obeying it; but further than knowing that the state is the source of law, he does not go. The political order does not obtrude itself. In rural sections especially there is little to remind one of political authority. Evidences of national government are conspicuously absent. In every rural hamlet the state is represented by the postoffice; but the postoffice is an institution for convenience of communication, not for transmission of authority. In congested centers the traffic officer and the police court are reminders that personal liberty is limited and that if we overstep the limits we suffer the penalty. But the ordinary citizen does not face the frowning judgment of the court. With political institutions in the background, the citizen estimates their value by the politics that he is acquainted with and condemns them.

Yet a political order is as necessary to human welfare as is the home or the school. It supplements and aids all other institutions. Its first function is protective. Liberty is cherished as a triumph of modern civilization and self-control is idealized as the ultimate goal, when the frailty of human nature has been overcome and social restraint will be no longer necessary. In the present unsanctified state of society, much as the individual desires liberty, he knows that absolute freedom to do as he pleases means anarchy. He expects to submit to the social control of the state. But there are others who are not so submissive. Always anti-social persons are to be found in the community. Certain members of society have never learned to obey, or they have a grudge against their fellows. They endanger the security of the citizens as a whole and against them the individual must have protection. On the frontier the American colonist took care of himself. He kept his gun by his side and he was quick on the trigger. But in a civilized community such independence of action is undesirable. It would be better if we were not permitted to carry arms at all. Experience has proved that it is better for the whole community to establish an authoritative order, with a body of police and a system of courts to protect the person and property of the individual.

It is political control that makes order possible in our streets and parks and places of assembly, that gives us confidence to carry on our business, to cooperate in industry and philanthropy and to seek for a richer, more abundant life. It is political control that has bound individuals into a community, linked the communities into the larger regional organization of county and state and made possible the great political entities of modern nations. We must not lose sight of the social values of political organization. The system may be imperfectly adapted to its task. The tyranny of monarchy or the inefficiency of democracy may provoke skepticism as to the political future. But back of the practical evils of the day will remain the eternal value of order, which alone makes liberty and happiness possible.

Modern government is directive as well as coercive. Regulation of conduct is often desirable where coercion is not called for. The rights of individuals need definition. The acquisition and ownership of property must be arranged. Privileges and restrictions in the use of streets and parks must be published. Plans of taxation must be devised and put into force. Through legislation the state makes possible the association of individuals for the satisfaction of common needs. As human beings we need many things. Because we live in families and communities we have common needs and can satisfy them best by associations of various sorts. In the family we feel the common need for food, clothing and shelter. These are our common needs. To meet them we work in the factory, the office or the market-place, always with other persons near by. Industry is social, therefore it must be regulated by law. If we are to progress, we and our children need education. By its laws the political order makes elementary education compulsory, and by creating schools and libraries makes provision for our cultural needs.

Higher Yearnings

We are conscious of higher yearnings that lift us at times above the ordinary level of life, yearnings that reach out after wider knowledge and a richer fellowship than the human affords. These aspirations are keener in some persons than in others; but religion is common to men. It is a common instinct to worship together. We organize our churches and build our meetings-houses. The law recognizes this right and insures for us freedom from interference in matters of faith. Thus social institutions have come into existence and are maintained under the sanction of law. The social structure cannot stand without the security that comes from law. And law is the ruling of the state.

The body of the civil law increases as the activities of the government expand. That expansion goes on continually. It is natural that the state should look after certain things with which we are all concerned. To promote general welfare it provides improved communications. Roads and bridges are necessary conveniences. In some countries railroads, telegraphs and telephones are government enterprises. On a national scale internal improvements and conservation of resources belong on the same government program. It is the business of local government to care for the public health, to provide hospitals, to find space and equipment for playgrounds, to build schools and maintain an efficient system of education. To these responsibilities the public demand is adding continually. Cities are asked to make generous provision for recreation and entertainment, to open social centers and to employ an increasing army of officials at constantly growing expense. The nation is expected to provide liberal pensions for various classes of people and to give more and more attention to every phase of social welfare.

Blind Bartimeus

*JESUS, thou Son of David, hear my cry!
For I am blind, and full of misery.
Mercy is thine; have mercy, Lord, on me!
Touch thou mine eyes, O give me now to see!*

*Sin is my blindness, Lord; sin my disease;
Sin veils my heart; sin robs my soul of peace;
Sin keeps me back from loving sight of thee;
Have mercy, Lord! from sin, O set me free!*

*I do not see thee, Jesus! but they say
That thou art passing by—art in the way:
'Tis true! the sound of thy blest footsteps near
And accents of thy voice, O Lord, I hear.*

*O loving voice! it calls out, "Come to me!"
It asks, "What wouldst thou I should do to thee?"
Jesus, thou Son of David, shed thy light
O'er my dark soul, and say, "Receive thy sight!"*

*What thou hast done for others, I believe Lord, thou wilt do for me, I shall receive
My sight!—Shall see thee, Jesus, face to face,
In all thy might of majesty and grace.*

*My cry is heard! Thy mighty, loving hand
Has touched my inner eye; at thy command
The darkening scales have fallen from my heart,
And now I see thee, Jesus, as thou art!*
JOSEPH JENKINS.

There is no end to the ways in which the political administration may be made to serve society. Plainly politics is a more important factor in human welfare than appears on the surface of our American life.

Serving the Kingdom in Politics

If the political order is not what it ought to be, it is the fault of its citizens. Under a monarchical form of government it is possible to blame the sovereign for maladministration; but in a democratic country like our own, the people have it in their power to correct abuses and to demand clean politics and able administration. Far too commonly men and women who are particularly well qualified to exercise the suffrage, neglect their civic obligations because they do not relish wading through the mire of partisan politics. Again and again a city election goes wrong because of this neglect. The public suffers because voters stay away from the polls rather than risk contamination with the unholy thing. National government loses in character and efficiency, because too many self-seeking politicians are permitted to push their way into office, while men who are better qualified are lost to the service of the people through their unwillingness to engage in a scramble for votes. This is not to say that all politicians are scamps or all office holders corrupt and inefficient. Many are the examples of unselfish devotion to public affairs. But the standard of politics is inferior to what it should be because politics is so often a term of popular reproach, and in consequence a department unworthy of the participation of self-respecting citizens.

If our nation is to prosper and civilization to survive and improve, this attitude towards politics must change. A new civic conscience is one of the needs of the hour. Women have a peculiar opportunity to moralize politics in this day of their emancipation. They should be quick to see how invaluable to society are the institutions that time has produced. Their discernment ought to make clear to them that social regulation and direction are among the pillars of the social structure, and that if they are not sound the whole structure inevitably will go down in ruin. Every person who is ordinarily intelligent should remember that the state is not an engine of authority imposed from without, but a product of the experience and experimentation of the people, and that upon every individual rests a share of the responsibility for good and efficient government.

It is not enough to point to political infelicities and the social responsibilities of citizenship. We must find methods of kindling the social conscience. One method is to recall the loyalties of public servants in the past and to stimulate a glow of pride in the recital of worthy deeds in the nation's history. The ancient Hebrew impressed upon his children the meaning of the Passover by rehearsing the story of Jehovah's emancipation of Israel from Egyptian bondage, and loyalty to his race is one of the characteristics of the Jew. England has a standard of colonial administration that has been admired for its excellence, and those who hold prominent position in the imperial system of administration are spurred to do their best because of the noble service rendered by their predecessors. If Britain would kindle the public conscience of her citizens, she might well invite them to move silently along the aisles of Westminster Abbey and read the records of her worthy dead. Statesmen and poets, missionaries and eminent clergymen at home, physicians and engineers, explorers and men of business affairs—their memory is the bugle call to noble purpose and high endeavor.

A second method is to turn our gaze ahead and point out the goals of political progress. We must have a vision of well-balanced liberty and control, of conscientious and efficient functioning of government officials from road supervisor to national president, of wise legislation for expanding social need, of willing response to every call of civic duty from sitting on a jury and paying taxes to representing one's country as an honored ambassador at a foreign court. And it shall be a part of our vision to see government so able and trusted in America that our country might be accepted as a political leader without reservation in every part of the world. As the nation needs able, devoted leaders, so the world in a contrite spirit but with dimmed vision, scans the horizon for leaders that it can trust. Is there any higher goal of political progress than for a nation to seek to minister to the world's need in a time like this?

Politics needs the interpreter and the prophet. Who better can fill that role than the church and its ministers? Training for citizenship is a process that begins in the home where members of the household learn to live together. It continues in the school where obedience to law is obligatory, and where by daily instruction the growing child learns his place and his function in the social order. But it is the church that must spiritualize life and character. It is the church that must supplement the practical motive with the

The Ministry of the Unordained

"They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word."

TRUE characteristic of the early church was its sense of personal responsibility. This consecration was not merely an act, it was an attitude of mind. The method was effective because the issue was clearly and definitely drawn—the world needed God. He claims it for himself, to write his name in man's heart, and to fulfil his purpose in man's life. The busier and dustier the world, the more it needed God. What a practical bearing this has upon our Christian enterprise! It gives a significance to our church membership and life. A greater part of the work done in the church today is performed by the "unordained." A Christian will be impelled to speak and work for Christ, if his personal hold of him is vital. It may not be every Christian's duty to fill a pulpit, but it is his obligation to preach Christ. We need to keep before us the reality of our divine commission. The church keeps before us the ideal of unselfish service. Without sacrifice no man will really maintain the spirit of a noble and devout life. We must go beyond the circle of personal obligation, we must choose work just for God's sake and man's sake alone. There are times in which there is no inclination, no necessity to invite, but a pure offering to God and man. The early Christians "preached the word" through sacrifice. We are called to a task; God gives the power. The power of his Spirit was not exhausted in the early days. If there has come some call to service, to take up something to be done, the thing to do is to do it. Need is one of the strong calling voices of God. God will attend to our opportunity. Power comes as we go.—By ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

ideal, transform the personal ambition into the social, and mold character by evoking a response to the moral imperative that we call the indwelling God.

The church is finding its voice. Denominations have become articulate, calling for reforms. The Federal Council of Churches has exerted its influence in national and international affairs. A new social consciousness is making the ecclesiastical conscience more sensitive to duty. Yet large numbers of church people hold a mistaken attitude toward the whole subject of politics.

One class of church people is so loyal to the doctrine of the absolute separation of church and state that they will have nothing to do with an active participation in politics. They know how unfortunate was the long attempt of the Roman papacy to organize an ecclesiastical state that should rule all Europe. They realize how harmful to the church it is that so many Protestant countries of Europe should have made the church a department of state. Their instincts are right. Never must we permit either of these social institutions to encroach upon the other. But if the political order is an essential part of our social machinery and if its excellence depends primarily upon the morale of the men who direct it, there is an obligation resting upon the church to stimulate those men to high civic ideals, and at times an obligation to champion specific social reforms. At least the church could accept Lloyd George's remark that the function of the churches is "to create an atmosphere in which it will be impossible for anybody to remain a ruler of the realm unless he deals with social problems, to create an atmosphere in which the rulers of this country (England), whether in the legislature or the municipalities, not only can engage in reforming dire evils, but in which it will be impossible not to do so."

"Occupy till I Come"

Another class of church people, in despair at the evils that vex the world, is disposed to welcome its destruction. They are convinced that the only reconstruction of the political order that is possible is by the substitution of the millennial reign of Christ for all political authorities. Expecting by their watchful loyalty to a millennial regime to share in the advantages of the new world order, they are not worried about reforms in this present age and they look hopefully for a general cataclysm. Yet it was the expected Master who bade his followers, "Occupy till I come," and it is the same Jesus who has commanded that we render our obligations to the state. Paying a tax, as he did, is but a concrete expression of his attitude. It is not enough for a citizen of a democracy who shares the responsibility of making that democracy what it ought to be. We Americans are not subjects of an imperial authority. We make our own government, and no man may shirk his full obligations of citizenship, even in thought, and justify himself for his millennial Bolshevism. With joy we may welcome our returning Lord, if he rends the heavens; but until he so comes it is the solemn obligation of those who bear his name to strive earnestly to prepare the way for his coming by sowing the seed of the Christian spirit in the fields of political life, until they shall bear fruit a hundredfold.

A church that fails to see and seize upon its opportunity to create and intensify the civic consciousness because the church itself is occupied with the remoter concerns of ecclesiastical law or politics or cataclysmic judgment to come, deserves no longer the protection of the state or the respect of its citizens. The minister who does not clarify the thinking of his people on great social and political issues and summon men and women to meet their every obligation as promoters of social welfare, forgets the role of the prophets of Israel and the teaching of Jesus, and has no right to call himself a preacher of righteousness on earth and an ambassador of the kingdom of God.

The Necessary Dynamic

There is one necessary dynamic for a better political order. That dynamic must measure up to three tests. It must be personal in its impact, for political development depends on personal initiative, but it must be social in its scope. It must be widespread in its reach and universal in its applicability. It must carry with it the weight of authority and must be reinforced by the strength of personality back of it. These tests are met only by the kingship of Christ. Alone of all the dynamics that move men, the spirit and principles and personality of Jesus Christ measure up to those requirements. For nearly two thousand years we have tried everything else, and even today there are plenty of unsocialized folk who are not ready to admit that the social principles of Jesus are the charter of social progress. But the wayfaring man though a fool, sees everywhere the signs of social degeneration in lawlessness and crime and war, when men strive without conscience for their own individual ends. He reads on the monuments of dead nations the plain records of social decline and political failure. The story of Egypt and Assyria, of Persia, Greece and Rome, is not written in invisible ink. It is only he who will not read the deeply graven lines of history that can plead ignorance of the causes of political failure. It is only he who is prejudiced that will not recognize the worthy character and unsurpassed power of the spirit of Christ. The only real question in the public mind is whether the kingship of Jesus is practicable today.

Boss-ridden

The best evidence of its practicability is the political improvement that has taken place already. Of old the prince governed a submissive people in his own interest. The Egyptian pharaohs, the Roman caesars, the mediaeval feudal lords, the French and English kings who claimed to rule by divine right—these men practiced the crafty art of politics with small regard for the welfare of the people. It is only in modern times that democracy has given the common people a share in their own government. And they have had to learn self-government. Clumsily they tried the experiment. Distrusting their ability, or too busy with their economic interests, they permitted self-constituted leaders to practice politics for them. Even in America, proud as we are of our citizenship, we were boss-ridden in the cities and prejudiced by partisan propaganda in national politics, until we needed a political housecleaning. Roosevelt's administration breezed into the corners and swept out the accumulations of graft and corruption and went far towards making our democracy not only decent but efficient. Politics are on a far higher level nationally than when Machiavelli cynically directed the prince to rule for his own good. We have fallen down in the government of our large cities; but in time we shall succeed there.

We are living in a time when public spirit is becoming more sensitive to moral obligation in every department of life. Business standards are higher than they used to be. Employers are becoming converted to the Golden Rule in industry. Statesmen are seeing that selfish national policies will not insure prosperity. Service is the key to success, and in politics the man who treats his official task as a public trust, is the man who is trusted and honored. The Christian is not an unfamiliar figure in legislative halls and on the bench, even in Japan. Russia shelved Christianity, as France did in its revolution, and both nations have found that society cannot prosper on any other principles than Christian. Politics will not be Christianized in a day; but the standards of Jesus are far more practicable today than ever before in the history of mankind.

A Southern Protest

By A. J. Barton

Chairman Commission on Social Service, Southern Baptist Convention.

MOB law is no law; no law is anarchy. Anarchy is ultimate destruction and death to all the rights and liberties of the people; it is also destruction to property and death to the people. Grievous things have happened and are still happening in America, especially in our Southland.

Mob violence started against members of the Negro race charged with the nameless crime against womanhood. Like all lawlessness it has grown. Now men are mobbed for almost any offense, real or imaginary. Negroes are brutally burned alive, and their bodies riddled with bullets as they die or after they are dead. Men are haled from their homes, spirited away and flogged or tarred and feathered by mobs masqued or unmasqued. Suppose such things happened in England, how would they appear to us and what would we say? We might possibly be able to imagine them in Russia, but even then they would shock us beyond words. We must not allow the foundations of our civilization to be undermined.

No one can measure the power of a democracy that is energized by the Christian spirit. A Christianized democracy would be satisfied with nothing less than education for its children that would prepare them for life as well as for business, nothing less than a business system that would be based on the principle of mutual interest and fair dealing, nothing less than justice and equal opportunity for the poor and feeble as well as the rich and strong, nothing less than a share in social welfare for every marginal man in the community. In national legislation the people's representatives would give their first thought to the well-being of their constituents, not to their own political fences; and they would broaden their patriotism to include loyalty to humanity everywhere as well as to America first. Nothing human would be alien to American citizenship. The relief of suffering that America has given in Europe and Asia through the poignant years of the war and since, is an earnest of what will be when the American people become thoroughly Christianized; but when that time comes the social order will have been so far improved that no such volume of relief will be necessary. American Christianity is in the making. It is proving itself practicable in the midst of the process. Jesus Christ was no visionary. His dreams of human weal are becoming realities, because we are catching his spirit.

Christianizing the Political Order

Three factors are essential to a thoroughly Christianized political order. One of these is the socialized individual; the other is the cooperative group. The socialized individual is the man with good-will towards his fellows, a purpose to play his part serviceably for the good of all, and a task that he meets courageously and efficiently from day to day. He strives for his family rather than for himself, works not for personal profit but for service, thinks in terms of the ideal rather than of the imperfect actual. Such men are not so rare as they used to be. Sacrifice of individual claims for the family, for the labor union, for the corporation or the community, for the nation, is so common as to occasion no remark. Heroism in common life is evidence of the spark of divinity in the soul. It requires only the baptism of the spirit of Jesus to kindle that spark into a blaze.

A second essential factor to a right political order is the cooperative group. That cooperative group has emerged from the era of modern individualism. It is a commonplace of present-day social organization. Every interest in life is fostered by an association of like-minded individuals from the boys' gang to the ecclesiastical denomination. Members of the group learn to work together, as the racing crew pulls as a unit to victory over its rival. Small groups practice cooperation until they find it possible to coalesce into larger groups. Independent political units federate in larger political systems. Nations reach working agreements over large areas, and continental and even world associations are glimpsed by the vision of idealists, even in the midst of the disillusioning aftermath of war.

Life Abundant

The third thing is for Christian people to express the Christian spirit in all the details of their citizenship and thus to organize the state in accord with the purpose of Christ. Christ comes according to his own words, "not to condemn the world, but to save the world." (John 12:47.) He comes that men "may have life and may have it more abundantly." (John 10:10.) He gives men the idea of the kingdom of God and charges them to seek that kingdom in all they do. The kingdom and will of God, according to the petitions of the prayer he gave, implies fellowship and right relations among men, daily bread for all, deliverance of men from evil by removal of needless temptation. The ideal of Christ implies the redemption of man and the welfare of all. The motive and spirit of all effort is love and brotherhood. The method is service, helpfulness, adjusting relations, removing hindrances. The end and result of Christ's reign in men and in society, is the welfare of all—fellowship and equality, peace among men.

Some things are evident and must be noted. The kingship of Christ in the state does not mean the authority of a church over political affairs. It does not mean the dominance of some theological doctrines in society and in thought. Nor does it mean the nominal submission of government to Christ's authority by some degree of government or the insertion of his name in the constitution. Nor does it mean the visible reign of Christ and the promulgation of decrees under his seal and authority. These are all external and formal things and signify little.

The real reign of Christ, for the present at least, is seen in something deeper and higher. The reign of Christ is seen in the acceptance of his ideal by men, in the way men come under the sway of his motive and honor his method, in the way the processes and results of society are in accord with Christ's purpose and end. For the present, the duty of all who call themselves Christians is clear. It is to accept fully the ideal of the kingdom of God and to make it the standard in all their thoughts and plans. It is to bring all the methods and processes of government to the test of Christ's spirit and motive, and to live by the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. It is to live for Christ's ends in the world and to establish justice and brotherhood in society. In a word, it is to realize Christ's purpose in the state and to organize all life in harmony with his will.

These are symptoms that mankind is bending the knee to him who came to bring life more abundant, to promote every legitimate interest, to build the incomplete systems of man into the kingdom of God. Are Christians so unresponsive that they do not thrill with joy over the accumulating evidences that the spirit of Jesus is increasingly regnant? Must we wait for a sign from heaven that the Master of men is here? There shall no sign be given save the sign of his spirit; but that is enough for those who have the social vision and the faith that cannot fail.

A Constitutional Settlement

Dr. Charles Gilkey's report of the Indianapolis Convention, given to the Chicago Ministers' Conference.

WHENEVER there are differences of opinion or policy within a democratic body large or small, there are two distinct stages in the process of working them out to a settlement. The first is the method of conference and adjustment. When in 1919 there were sharp differences in American opinion over the League of Nations, repeated attempts were made to reach general agreement by this natural means. After this failed, some sort of decisive referendum was plainly necessary if we were to get forward at all. The election of 1920 was confused enough, and the issue was so obscured by partisanship and bitter controversy that men who held very similar convictions voted opposite ways to express them. But even those who believed most strongly in the league have recognized that the results of that election made it clear that America would not enter the league. On that point at least the air was cleared, and the world knew what to count on.

There have been marked differences of opinion and policy among Northern Baptists during recent years, which have plainly divided our counsels and weakened our forces at one of the most critical periods in Christian history. Repeated attempts to compose these differences and reach a working agreement have been made in conferences between our leaders; but these, for one reason or another, have broken down. The feeling was general among men of all points of view as Indianapolis approached that the time had come for some frank and decisive clearing of the air, that should enable us to go ahead with a definite program. Men who differed widely in their view of what the result ought to be, were agreed as to the desirability, if not indeed the necessity, of such a "show-down." It is a fair question whether this frank facing of our differences was not one of the main causes of the notably better spirit that was constantly in evidence at Indianapolis, as contrasted with some other recent conventions. When such differences obviously exist and cannot be settled in conference, it is vastly better to face and settle them by the constitutional methods of a democracy than to ignore or deny them.

And certainly there was such a settlement at Indianapolis. Among all those who were there, whatever their personal point of view, there was general agreement that the air had been rather decisively cleared and the mind of the overwhelming majority of the delegates made plain. Doubtless there will be much discussion after the convention as to just what the issue was, and just what that two-thirds majority on the creedal question signified—just as there has been any amount of discussion since as to what was the real issue of the 1920 election, and what was

Memory and Hope

THE University Baptist, a monthly published by Baptist students at Cornell University, contains an article on "The Baptist Controversy" by Rev. John D. W. Fetter, Baptist university pastor, in which the occasions of difference in our Baptist ranks are stated. Mr. Fetter's article concludes:

"There is one thing which we all have in common, the lordship of Christ. By the conservative mind this may be expressed in one way; by the liberal in another, but the fact remains the same. There is room, in fact there is need for both the conservative and liberal minds: the former to keep before us the 'faith of our fathers' on which we have built our religious life, and the latter to lead us into the undiscovered realms of truth. Just as in civilization, so in religion there is need both of the settler and the pioneer, each of which represents an essential element in all life, namely, stability and progress.

"In every car there must be an engine and brakes. A car with an engine alone would make rapid progress but would soon be wrecked. One with brakes alone would be safe but motionless. George Matheson says that age needs hope and the forward look, for its tendency is to face always toward the years gone by. Youth needs memory, for it is likely to push rashly ahead forgetting the heritage of the past. So our denomination should be characterized both by memory and by hope, by stability and progress, each working together in the spirit of Christ toward the same goal, not simply tolerant toward each other, but each welcoming the contribution which, not its opponent but its component, has to make."

the significance of Harding's tremendous majority. But all the world knows since that election that America is not going to enter the present League of Nations; and both within and without the denomination (for all the religious world was watching us pretty closely at Indianapolis), there is a general and reasonably accurate understanding of what was decisively settled there.

It was not a theological issue at all. Speaking myself as an avowed liberal in theology (a "modernist," if you prefer that name, but certainly not a "rationalist"—which last name is grossly inaccurate when applied to men of my way of thinking), I want to say deliberately and emphatically that I do not regard that two-thirds majority is in any sense a theological line-up. In it were included theological conservatives as well as liberals, and far more moderates than radicals. The real issue on which this great majority was united was not one of creedal difference, but one of Christian fellowship. They recognize that within our Baptist fellowship at the present time there are wide differences of theological point of view—just as there are in the other great Christian bodies. But this is even more natural and to be expected among Baptists (who have always insisted on soul liberty and the right of private judgment in religion) than among those denominations which have tried to found their unity upon a creed—and never yet succeeded! For creeds always have divided Christians, and always will—where Christian faith and works unite them! The real basis of our Baptist fellowship—like the only possible basis of our Christian unity—is our common faith in Christ as God gives each one of us to understand and follow him, and our common purpose to extend and hasten his kingdom upon earth. At Indianapolis we Baptists declared to each other and to the whole Christian world that no single group or point of view within our fellowship has any right to claim to represent or constitute the whole, to sit in judgment on its brethren, or to dictate or dominate the common program. "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

All this comes very closely home to me personally, because it reproduces on a larger scale the essential religious situation that exists in our own family. One of us is a convinced and aggressive fundamentalist; two of us, both ministers, who have spent years in the study of theology, are avowed liberals; one is a deacon who would probably call himself a moderate; and another, wiser yet, would very likely "refuse to be classified." But the wisest among us all is the mother whose deep religious influence on us all is chiefly responsible for whatever Christianity any of us may possess. Though her own theological views are largely fundamentalist, she always begs us when we get together not to drift into theological discussion, saying that she has noticed that such discussions never really get anywhere, tend to promote misunderstanding rather than otherwise, and create a spirit of unbrotherliness that does not belong within a family. But when we gather for worship about the family altar, or go out to active Christian service in the community or in the larger world outside, she is our natural leader, and we all follow—together! She has found the true secret of Christian fellowship within every "household of faith," whether a family, a local church, a great denomination, or the Christian church universal. "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

Play Ball!

Address delivered before the boys of Camp Roosevelt, Indiana, by W. F. Bostick

IF there is any person here who does not understand the great American game he will not see where I am driving, but I am persuaded there "ain't no such animal." Shakespeare called the world a stage with men and women players on it. Life is just plain baseball with every one taking his turn at the bat. Chance is in the pitcher's box throwing opportunities across our plate. These opportunities are good, bad and indifferent. Some of us pick the good opportunities and slam out a successful hit, or a home run. Other batters let the good ones pass by, strike at the poor ones, miss them and are called out. Then we cuss the pitcher for our failure or we rail at the Umpire of the universe for giving us an unfair decision. The last thing we think of is to blame ourselves for letting the good balls go by and striking at the poor ones.

I like to think of the gospel story of the talents in the terms of baseball. One man was given five chances at the bat, another two, and a third only one chance. The umpire said, "Play ball." But the man who had only one chance at the bat kicked, saying, "The captain of this team has been unfair to me, he has given me only one chance to the other players two and five chances. What is the use of me trying, anyway? The odds are against me. How can I make any high batting average with the slim chances I have been given. I, just for spite, will stand up to the plate and strike out. I'll be hanged if I take any interest in this unequal game of life."

What was the result? The umpire of his own conscience called him out. The captain of the team said, "You mean and lazy player, because you could not play the game and do your best with the small chances you had for success, I rule you out of the league forever. You knew that it would only take one to hit it, but since you would not take that one chance no more chances will be given to you."

In this great game of life no one can tell us exactly how many chances for successful hits we will have. Let us not permit any good opportunity to pass by, but hit every good ball at which we are given a chance. This may be your last time up! "Play ball!" every minute of the game.

Strike of the Expert Player

One of the chief differences between a "bush leaguer" and a regular big league player is in the ability of the latter to judge quickly the difference between a ball and a strike. The expert player does not strike at the high, the real low or the wide ones.

This is just the boneheaded blunder Germany made in the big game of European politics. It was Germany's chance at the bat; she had been running up a fine score and got the swelled head. Chance standing in the international pitcher's box now threw a few wide ones. There was the ball of autocratic national rule, the wide ball of "conquest by force," the low ball of "might makes right," the high ball of world dominion was pitched to her. She passed by the good ball of peaceful, commercial advancement. She struck at the high ones. She even drove some of the high ones far out into the field, but they ended in "wells" and Germany was called out and went down to the bottom of the league. It will be a

Diamond Etchings

Thrills

THE batter drove a sizzling hot ball straight across the diamond. The second baseman, without moving from his place, opened his hands and received the ball, which went at him as if aimed and fired from a gun.

I remarked to my neighbor, "The strangest things do happen in baseball!" "Yes," he answered, "and that's what makes it interesting." And, we may add, that is what makes life interesting.

It is the thrill of the unusual which gives zest to the game of baseball; and to the game of life as well. The dramatic climaxes, the sudden encounters at the turn of the road, the handfuls of purpose thrown down in the wheatfield; the unforeseen adventures, the heavenly visions along the trail, the insinuation of the unusual, the intrusions of the supernatural, the enveloping clouds of mystery; these are the thrills which redeem life from the dead level of a logarithmic monotony and a colorless stupidity.

The surprises of Nature are her adornment. The surprises of life which arise in the realm of the unforecast, the miraculous, the supernatural, constitute the difference between barren mediocrity and boundless majesty, between the life stagnant and the life abundant.

long time till she reaches the top again. She failed because she struck at the high ones.

But men as well as nations strike at the wide ones. How well I remember the case of Percy Tod whom I knew in a small town in Ohio twenty years ago. Percy was a clerk in a grocery store, but spent a few evenings each week in the so-called "sample" room in the rear of a saloon. (One reason why I am eternally in favor of prohibition is because the saloon keeper pitches too many high-balls across the plate and because too many batters are called out for striking at them.) Percy joined the poker game and had to touch the store till to get money for gambling. But the store cash drawer could not stand the strain of a losing player, so Percy borrowed from the customers who patronized the store, only to lose more and more. A full day behind the counter, long hours at night in the stuffy poker room, the worry of the debts, the constant bad luck of losing, insufficient rest at night began to tell on the body. One winter night after a feverish gambling period until 3:00 a. m. he emerged into the icy atmosphere, his pores open from the hot stifling air of the gambling den. The result was a deep chest cold which after a few weeks developed into quick consumption. Penniless he cast himself on the mercy of the saloon-keeper who bought him a ticket to Colorado. Percy landed in a new settlement of 1,200 population and in two weeks was the first corpse in that town. At the age of eighteen, when a young man ought to be smashing out hits, Percy Tod was fanning month after month, hitting at the high and wide ones. The umpire called him out. Over his grave stands a plain tombstone and in my imagination I see engraved this epitaph: "Here lies Percy Tod, age 19, batting average zero; struck out because he let pass the good balls and fanned at the high and wide ones."

Tennyson makes one of his characters in one of his poems come up behind a young knight just after the knight has painted the motto, "I follow fame," across his shield. The old bard takes the brush out of the hand of the young knight and substitutes the motto, "Rather use, than fame." When we are tempted to strike at the high balls of fame let us keep in mind that only as we hit at service and usefulness for others do we make safe hits which ultimately will bring us the fame we are after.

I wonder what our batting average is today. Are we able to outguess the pitcher? Can we afford to wait for the good balls or are we striking at anything that comes across the plate? Are we hitting the good habits, books, associations, companions, opportunities, that fortune is pitching our way?

The Sacrifice Hit

Then, too, there is always room in the baseball game of life for the sacrifice hit. A sacrifice hit is made when the batter foregoes the opportunity of making a possible two or three bagger hit by just bunting the ball near the home plate with a view of advancing a man from first to second base. The batter in this play often gets put out at first base. The possibility of a higher batting score is sacrificed for the sake of helping a player around the bases. Life spells success for us only as we learn the spirit of sacrifice for ourselves and for others. No line of glory is written on the pages of history without a line of suffering and sacrifice running along with it.

Call to mind that night in the life of Lincoln when as a young man he lay stretched out on the floor of his cabin home one evening with a book and the glowing hearth before him. A rap suddenly comes on the door. It is a clear moonlight night and fresh wolf tracks have been noticed on the newly fallen snow. "Abe, come out with us tonight, we will have the hunt of our lives." But Abe said, "Not tonight." Abe had said that same thing many other times when secondary interests called him from the pursuit of education and high ideals. I fancy when Abe occupied the president's chair those old pals of his were still hunting wolves. Abe reached the president's chair because he could put in the sacrifice hit. The good must always be sacrificed for the best. No man ever gets far on the road to achievement and character unless he has learned repeatedly to say to the many distracting and interesting hunting parties, "Not tonight." No doubt some of you fellows have put in sacrifice hits to come to Camp Roosevelt for this season. Others would like to be there, but circumstances at home perhaps require that for the sake of sick mother or sister they must make a sacrifice hit this summer and work all through their vacation to add their share to the family's depleted exchequer.

I urge you, then, to "welcome each rebuff that turns earth's smoothness rough." Play the game of life. Put in the sacrifice hits necessary for your physical, mental and moral advancement. Above all, never fail to put in the sacrifice hit when it is your duty to advance the cause of right and justice in the world. "Whether on scaffold high or in the battle's van, the fittest place for man to die is where he dies for man." "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Remember, the glory of Christianity consists in the great sacrifice hit made on Calvary, that we might be advanced nearer our heavenly Father's home. It is the duty of each generation to make the sacrifice hits necessary to advance the race nearer and nearer to the ideal state of society—the Kingdom of God on earth.

Finally, the big thing that counts in baseball is runs. What good are all the hits if the men die on bases? The success of the game depends on reaching home and adding to the score. Are we making home base?

I was once entertained at the home of a deacon of a country church. He was a man of about seventy. While his wife was preparing dinner he showed me the family album containing the pictures of his four sons and one daughter, all grown and scattered over the earth. One son was a missionary in Central Africa, another a teacher in a southern university, a third a settlement worker in a large city, the fourth a welfare worker in a large factory. The daughter was the wife of a Sunday-school superintendent in a good farming community. The old man settled on that farm early in life with a big debt on the place, but by work and thrift he paid for the farm, and gave each of his children a good education; and now in the sunset of his life he looked back over the years and rejoiced in the successful lives of service and usefulness his children had entered. None of the sons scored so far as big money was concerned; but as I talked to that man I said, "In baseball parlance you have made a pretty good score in playing the game, you surely have reached home!" "Yes," he said, "it took some tall fielding, strong hitting and hard sliding on their breeches, but the game was worth it."

Now a man does not have to wait until he is seventy to score in the game of life. If while you are going to grade or high school you are doing good work and making good marks, you are reaching home. There is a certain kind of scoring we do at fifteen, a different kind at twenty-five, another at seventy. At your particular age a certain standard of physical, mental, moral, economic and social efficiency is expected and if you are reaching that standard you are reaching home. Examine yourself: what is your score? There is a sense in which you can be "making good" at any stage in life. Are you making good now?

The best way to score at home plate is by hard work. John D. Jr. once asked his father what the word "tide" meant in the quotation from Shakespeare, "There is a tide in the affairs of men, which when taken at its flood leads on to fortune." Said the shrewd old man, "My son, that tide means tied to work."

On the diamond of your interests,

In the baseball game of life,

In the team play with your fellows,

In the heat and in the strife,

Hit each chance which fortune brings you,

Strike for home runs every day;

While some players kick and sputter,

This your motto, "Boys, let's play."

A Layman's Impressions of the Convention

By JAMES C. COLGATE

A LETTER just received from Dr. Aitchison, asking me to send you an account of the Indianapolis Convention, from a layman's viewpoint, is my excuse and explanation for the following article.

In many respects the convention was a surprise. Frankly, I had not realized before what an influence and power the Baptist denomination is. This surprise was shared by other laymen who had not previously attended conventions. I wish that more of the laymen from our various churches could have been there and seen what a representative body of the life and strength of our country the delegates to the convention were. One could not help a feeling of pride in belonging to the denomination.

Another impression was the earnestness of purpose which pervaded the gathering. The delegates were there because they had something to do, because there were questions to be considered and decisions having an important bearing upon the life and work of the denomination to be made. Their attitude was that of men who wanted to find out the right thing to do and do it.

The address of the president, read from manuscript in order that there should be no misunderstanding as to what was said, placed the convention upon a high plane. This address should be read by every Baptist and could be read by members of other denominations with advantage.

There has been considerable doubt, in which the writer shared, as to the wisdom of having a woman as president of the convention. That no mere man could have presided with the tact, the grace and the success shown by Mrs. Montgomery is unanimously conceded.

All through the convention hard work was done by various committees and organizations. The spirit of the various societies was fine. They were not trying to get as much as possible for their particular work, but trying to do the fair thing and to equalize the heavy load, so that it could be carried. The denomination, facing a serious situation, faced it with a spirit of determination, not discouragement. The reports of all the societies showed unusually satisfactory results, and marvellous possibilities, coupled in each instance with the necessity of retrenchment and economy. The high hopes and enthusiasm of former years, when funds seemed plenty, had given place to serious thought and earnest effort, which gives hope for future progress. One could not attend the convention without feeling the awakening of a denominational spirit which has lain dormant.

There were two parties in the convention—the fundamentalists and the liberals. These names are used for convenience, but do not, in the judgment of the writer, accurately describe the parties. A large part of the delegates were aligned with neither party. Each party had its leaders and its "steering committee." The differences between these parties culminated when the fundamentalists offered a resolution which, if carried, gave the approval of the convention to the New Hampshire Confession of Faith, as a statement of the Baptist belief. The liberals offered, as a substitute, a resolution that the convention affirm the New Testament is our all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, and that we have need of no other statement. While the liberals had, by means of this substitute motion, a technical advantage, the delegates were of too high an order of intelligence to be influenced greatly by this.

The question was, practically, whether the convention would or would not approve anything in the form of a creed, and the debate was on that basis. It was carried on with a desperate earnestness on both sides. So great was the earnestness that the speakers, skilled and experienced as most of them were, forgot the arts and subtleties of the skilled debater and spoke from their hearts. The audience listened with deep attention and perfect order. The vote was taken and the results announced—practically two to one against a creed.

It was here that the convention rose to its greatest height, and showed what it really was. The spirit manifested at this period should be a source of inspiration, as well as of satisfaction, to every member of the denomination. There was practically no exultation on the part of those who succeeded and substantially no show of ill feeling on the part of the losers.

The convention sang a hymn, and left the building.

As one of those who were on the winning side, I found my feeling shared by others with whom I spoke. We had no feeling of triumph, and our sense of satisfaction that the position which we felt was right had been sustained was tempered by regret that this should have brought sorrow and disappointment to our friends on the other side, whose convictions were equally strong and sincere.

It is probably safe to say, judging from the delegates to the convention, that our denomination is in the main conservative, liberal only in its refusal to assent to anything in the nature of coercion of the individual, who has made his confession of belief in Jesus as his Lord and Master, to adopt any particular form of stated belief.

It would help the ordinary layman if the fundamentalists would state clearly and briefly, using laymen's language, just what they want and how they intend to secure it. If there is a practical issue, it should be met and settled so that the work of the denomination can go on unhampered. The time given by ministers, on both sides of the controversy, is time belonging to their churches. Laymen whose pastors are on different sides have complained to the writer that the work of the local church suffered because their pastors spent too much time and thought on this question, to the neglect of pastoral duties.

To sum up my impressions, I came away from the convention with an increased respect for the denomination, a sincere belief in the inherent soundness of our organization, a renewed confidence in the denomination's future, and with the hope that we laymen, ignoring the doctrinal controversies of those who should be our leaders, will devote ourselves more unreservedly to the service of our Lord.

Spiritual Life and the Social Order

By RALPH WELLES KEELER

PROTESTANT Christianity in its very essence consists of soul-activity. It is distinctly individualistic. It is lost, when it consists of the mere transference of opinions and of the acts from one person to another. Though the Bible be memorized, though the sound doctrines of wise theologians be studied, and though external deeds prescribed by the church are complied with, yet the person who acquires all of this knowledge, and performs all of these acts, does not thereby become a Christian. Unless by his own soul activity he converts these truths into his own convictions, and into his own free acts, he becomes educated, but not converted. Protestant Christianity is not satisfied with the mere intellectual apprehension of Christian truth, but requires an individual soul-commitment, which works spiritual changes within its followers. While instruction may impart lessons which are favorable to a Christian experience, yet that experience must be the soul's own and must come from within, and cannot be imparted from without.

Not all people recognize Christianity when they meet it in business, or on the street, or in forms of government, and in halls of legislation. They are familiar with consecrated places, and hallowed forms and holy tones, not realizing that genuine Christianity can wear the secular garb and speak the vernacular of the market-place and the street. The writer once examined the body of laws which had been passed by the general court (the legislature) of Massachusetts; and his fair appraisal showed that practically every statute was Christian in principle, though not one bore the Christian name, or was phrased in language which suggested the terminology of religion. Most people would have said of these laws, "Why, these laws are secular, purely secular." But they all expressed, or attempted to express, the principles of Jesus,—principles of honesty, equity, justice, mercy, compassion, sobriety, goodwill, and the love of man and care of man in the great multitude of his needs and relationships. The essence of legislation today is more nearly Christian than ever before, and yet the names of legislators give little indication of Puritan descent or of Protestant predilections.

Religious Education

The Strangers Within Our Gates

By J. B. WAKEM
Americanization Missionary

In the Pentateuch references are made relative to the strangers sojourning with the children of Israel. The most striking of these is found in Leviticus 19:33-34: "And if a stranger sojourns with thee in your land, ye shall not do him wrong. . . . He shall be unto you as the home born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." Be it said in passing that a heathen who dwelt among the Israelites, did not practice his religion very long until he became a devout worshiper of Jehovah. The religious atmosphere was such that he could not help but feel its compelling power and righteous influence. This is clearly illustrated both in the lives of the priests of Midia and that of Ruth, the Moabitess maid, who uttered these significant words, "Thy God shall be my God and thy people shall be my people."

As a Christian people, are we accomplishing the same results with the strangers, who come flocking to our shores from every country on the globe? Thousands upon thousands pass and repass through our ports and cities, unnoticed by many of us. We have been criminally indifferent relative to their spiritual needs. It took the awful cataclysm of the World War to arouse us from our lethargy. The cry could be heard all over this country: "The foreigners must be Americanized or our beloved institutions will be in grave danger." Immediately, various organizations leaped into the arena vying with each other as to who could do the most to civilize this undesirable element. Spasmodic efforts are being made here and there to Americanize the strangers within our gates but very little is being done for their souls' greatest needs. The motives underlying these efforts, it seems to me, are mainly for self-preservation, hence it is selfish.

Is this all there is to it? No. Americanization has a deeper significance to me. Americanization plus Christianization should be our main objective. Emphasis must be laid not only on providing wholesome entertainments for the foreigners, and in teaching them the principles of our government, but we must endeavor in a tactful way to acquaint them with the principles of our evangelical religion. For we recognize the fact that religion with the majority of these newcomers is a mere form, and not a vital relationship with Jesus Christ.

Americanization work was begun in Pocatello, Idaho, by the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. At the end of six months, owing to the lack of funds, the work was discontinued. While the writer and his family were preparing to leave the city, word came from the A. B. H. M. Society to remain on the job. The work was then resumed with zeal and vigor. In spite of inadequate quarters in which we hold our night classes and the limitations placed upon us by the school authorities relative to teaching religion, yet we feel that progress is being made.

The Greek young man concerning whom reference was made in the columns of THE BAPTIST was happily converted and has joined the First Baptist Church. An Italian young man recently confessed Christ in special meetings; another is gradually breaking away from Catholicism and we are praying that he will soon come to the knowledge of the Saviour. Others are interested and have been attending services at the Baptist church for the first time in their lives.

A Greek young man who has been in America less than six months began to attend our night schools. Soon afterward he was taken sick and removed to the general hospital. The writer visited him and presented him with a copy of the Greek New Testament. The ladies' Bible class also remembered him with beautiful flowers and several of the Baptist young people, including the pastor, called on him. Now he is extremely interested in our church and has expressed a desire to become one of us. Although he can understand only a little English, yet he attends the services regularly.

Shall walk the path the heroes trod.*

Thomas Curtis Clark.

My experience in working among foreigners has been that they respond to kind treatment. The majority of them rarely forget a favor.

This work might be made to yield greater harvest if proper equipment could be had. We need a place where we can worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience without any limitations whatsoever. Heretofore the work has been confined to men only; now women and girls of foreign birth, unsolicited, are asking for admission. We are at a loss to know what to do, owing to the fact that we have no room for both sexes. May God put it upon the hearts of some generous Baptists to make the proposed Christian community center house a reality.

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for August 6

THE TEMPLE REBUILT AND DEDICATED
Lesson: Ezra 3:1 to 6:22. Golden Text: Psalm 84:2.

Background

Our lessons now follow the Jews who returned to Judah to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem. They continued to be subjects of the Persian empire as Jerusalem and the surrounding districts were under the control of a governor. But in religion the Jews enjoyed a freedom which was not theirs in civil affairs. Three Jewish temples were built upon the same site: Solomon's in 967 B. C., destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar in 587 B. C.; Zerubbabel's built in 516 B. C., and in 30 B. C., Herod's reconstructed temple was begun. The Darius mentioned is not the Darius of Daniel's time.

Lesson

The journey from Babylon was a matter of many months. Upon arrival in Judah it was necessary for the Jews to build their houses and begin the tilling of the soil. But by the seventh month after their return the altar for burnt offerings was rebuilt and there the offerings were made according to the ancient law. In the second month of the second year after their return a start was made on the rebuilding of the temple.

The Scripture lesson for today opens with the laying of the corner-stone under Zerubbabel, in the spring following the return to Jerusalem. And they sang: "For he is good, for his loving kindness endureth forever toward Israel." They all shouted with a loud voice, but many of those who had seen the laying of the corner-stone of the first house wept, partly because of sacred memories, partly because they bewailed the fact that this house probably would not be as the former one. To the ancient Jew the temple was what the cross is to the Christian. But the noise of the wailing and the shouts of joy were so intermingled that one could not be told from the other. But this good start was interrupted by the Samaritans who wished to help in the rebuilding and when refused became enemies of the returned Jews and did all they could to prevent the building. They succeeded so well that the work was delayed for many years. In spite of the opposition at last the temple was finished and then came the dedication as described in the last three verses of the lesson. This took place in the month of Adar (February-March).

Leading Thoughts

1. It is that which we build with our own hands and hearts that we love. 2. Monumental tasks are likely to meet with opposition. 3. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is."

The Open Forum

"THE THEOLOGICAL SEVENTEEN"

So much has been written and said about the "Theological Seventeen" of Columbus that the Baptist public may be interested in a statement by one of the members. Some five or six years ago, a little group of Protestant ministers organized for the purpose of monthly meetings with book reviews, papers and discussions of religious, social and literary themes, such as would challenge and help busy pastors, who are college and seminary men. Membership has been gradually extended until the limit is now seventeen. Six denominations are represented—Methodist, Congregational, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Community and Baptist, including pastors of many leading churches of the city.

Our men have generously supported meetings, campaigns, conferences and Christian enterprises with which we were not in full accord. Occasionally noted men have visited our city and have given through the press and otherwise their own interpretation of Christianity. The members of the seventeen came to feel that we as pastors of influential churches, making our home in Columbus, owe a clear duty to our city to interpret the great truths of the Christian faith as modern Protestantism views them. We put on an "Institute of Religion," May 3-5, with fourteen addresses in which our men presented the findings of present day thinkers about the Scriptures, God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the church, prayer, salvation and similar topics. Those attending the institute expressed themselves as helped and benefited by it. Letters, telegrams, and personal comments have been almost uniformly favorable.

Dr. B. D. Evans, pastor of the Franklin Park Methodist Church, in his address said that we did not consider theistic evolution hostile to Christianity and we were not convinced that the human family originated in the garden of Eden 6,000 years ago. Dr. Walter E. Burnett, pastor of the Broad Street Methodist Church, suggested that the deity of Jesus does not rest solely upon his virgin birth but also upon his sinless life, his atonement, his resurrection, his perfect revelation of the Father, and his appeal to the heart of the believer.

Newspapers reported that these brethren were scoffing at the book of Genesis and were denying the virgin birth of Jesus. All sorts of wild rumors were circulated. Many people apparently thought that we men had suddenly lost our reason or departed in a body from Christian faith. Dr. W. B. Riley evidently accepted newspaper reports at their face value and came to Columbus for a three-day meeting in the Central Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Evans and Dr. Burnett have been the center of criticism but their own local churches have stood by them nobly and have adopted resolutions of hearty support. The four Methodist conferences of Ohio have just closed a state-wide summer school for Methodist preachers at Ohio Wesleyan University. Dr. Burnett was dean of the faculty and Dr. Evans was prominent as one of the teachers. This indicates the confidence which the Methodist church has in these men.

The interpretations of the faith put forward in our institute were the interpretations of the colleges and theological seminaries of all denominations for the last twenty years. There was nothing new to any congregation, presided over by a trained man, who attempts to keep his people informed.

Nothing could be further from the truth than the statement that our men denied the inspiration of the Scriptures, the deity of Christ, the reality of the atonement, and the resurrection. It was for the purpose of affirming these very truths and helping thoughtful people to a glad new confidence in them that we held our institute. For any one to state that seventeen ministers, busy pastors of important churches, dealing at first hand with the suffering and need and problems of human beings are holding institutes for the sake of denying the great Christian verities is too utterly absurd to call for any comment. THE SPIRITUAL BENEFITS OF TITHING

In the Open Forum of THE BAPTIST for July 1, exception is taken to the policy of our Board of Promotion in its advocacy of tithing as a means of promoting spirituality as well as of raising the money.

From the standpoint of the present writer the arguments submitted fail to carry conviction for the following reasons:

1. "What evidence may be adduced in support of this contention (namely, that tithing does promote spirituality) I am not aware." I think I am aware. It would seem that, to take not more than a cursory observation of the members of our churches who are tithing their income for the work of the kingdom, would reveal the very cream of the group who can be depended upon to do their utmost in every way for the promotion of that kingdom. This would be convincing evidence.

2. The Jews' preeminence in tithing proves nothing against this system as a peril to spirituality, for the reason that they were never preeminent tithers. Jehovah wanted them to be, but all through the course of their history the most scathing condemnation visited upon them by the prophets was for refusing obedience in this regard. Malachi says, "But ye say 'wherein have we robbed thee?' In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye rob me, even this whole nation. Bring ye the whole tithe unto the storehouse." (A. R. V.) It was their characteristic sin to cheat God in this matter. In no sense could they fairly be called "scrupulous tithers." This was the charge which the Great Teacher laid at their door, that their scruples were only about things that cost them little or nothing. It was for this that he pronounced his woes upon them and not for scrupulously keeping the law which had been entrusted to them. (Matt. 23:23.) So far is Jesus from drawing "The picture of the tither as  not encouraging from the standpoint of spirituality" that his answer would produce upon my mind just the opposite impression: "But these ye ought to have done and not to have left the other undone." He taught the obligation of "the whole tithe."

3. In regard to "certain religious bodies," the Mormons seem to me to be out of the question in this connection. No one claims that tithing promotes spirituality regardless of what the object of it is. We should not expect tithing in the interests of a monstrous scheme for selfishly acquiring political dominance in the nation, to promote spirituality. This is entirely aside from our question of tithing.

As to the Adventists, I should hardly dare to classify them as conspicuously lacking in spirituality, more than all the rest of us.

If we should succeed in "getting $20,000,000 per year for our promotion work," whether by giving 10 per cent or 100 per cent of our incomes, God knows and we all know it will not imperil the souls of the givers and it stands to reason that it will not cause the loss of the denomination's soul. One thing just at this time it most behooves us to consider carefully is that we avoid throwing monkey wrenches into the machinery of the Board of Promotion.

DREW T. WYMAN.

Westminster, Mass.

At the Temple Church, Los Angeles, on June 25, the "Brougher trio" took part in the services. The pastor, Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, his sons Rev. Russell M. Brougher and James Jr., who recently won first place at the University of Redlands in an oratorical contest. The three spoke at the evening service.

The city mission secretaries on their own initiative suggested that they should not enjoy any privilege not extended to state convention secretaries and proposed that the executive committee should present a by-law to the convention providing that a paid or executive secretary of a standard city mission society should not be eligible to serve on the nominating committee of the convention.

"Among You As One Who Serveth"

THESE verses on "vocations" would never be complete without the Lady of the House appearing, but what we wish to quote is the Old Testament portrait of the perfect woman, a gem in literature which you will find in Proverbs 31:10-29. The writer, an Arab chief, Lemuel, is very likely describing his own mother; in the Hebrew the chapter in Proverbs is an acrostic, each verse beginning with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet in order. This analysis is by Dr. Samuel Zwemer who applies it to ideal missionary wives as well as American housewives:

Verse 10—Strategic value of the home.

Verse 11—Veracity and sincerity as foundation of character.

Verse 12—Goodness, a fountain of influence.

Verse 13—Diligence is contagious.

Verse 14—Enterprise that ministers to comfort.

Verse 15—Industry and division of labor.

Verse 16—Economy of resources. (Missionary salary!)

Verse 17—Strong health and exercise. (The climate.)

Verse 18—Efficiency of plan and program.

Verse 19—Self-help and industrial training.

Verse 20—Social service and liberality.

Verse 21—Foresight in household duties.

Verse 22—Artistic sense and taste. Beauty as power.

Verse 23—Justifiable pride.

Verse 24—Business capacity and administration.

Verse 25—Strength of character and a joyful disposition.

Verse 26—Sweet temper in telling the Good News.

Verse 27—Good management and frugality.

Verses 28, 29—Motherliness and wifely virtue.

Verses 30, 31—Her glory and reward, here and hereafter.

The Parent

By DWIGHT FRANKLIN

A LITTLE child, with lessons all unlearned
And problems still unsolved, before me stands:
With tired puzzled face to me upturned,
She holds a slate within her outstretched hands:
"My sums are hard—I cannot think tonight;
Dear father, won't you make the answers right?"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Thus do I come to thee, great Master, dear;

My lessons too are hard; my brain is weak.

Life's problems still unsolved, the way not clear.

The answers wrong—thy wisdom I would seek.

A tired puzzled child, I pray tonight:

Here is my slate—oh, make the answers right.

The Miners

WITH derrick and shovel and steam
The sons of Martha toil—
Surgeons, probing the face of the earth
Far, far below the soil.

Probing, dissecting, extracting
With tools of the Titan's power;
And the matrix they make is the mold for a dream

To be born, in its own good hour.
Out of the blasting and wreckage,
After the chaos and roar.

Beauty and Grace in stone shall arise
To bless the earth once more.

And all this creating and building
Is born of God and his plan;
For he made, alone, the Dream in Stone,
And its cradle—the mind of man.

The Village Librarian

By GRACE MCKINSTRY

SHE thought before she entered it,
This work she longed to do,
That very often she might sit
And read a page or two,
An essay or a bit of rhyme,
A story—modern, gay,
Because there surely would be time
If she were there all day.

But now the volumes in the stacks
Might just be bricks or lead,
She catalogues, she mends their backs,
She lends them to be read.
She fines slow readers, stamps the date,
And brings you from the shelf,
The volume she can scarcely wait
To draw and read herself.

A tantalizing task, indeed,
To touch the outward part
Of all the books she longs to read
And cannot even start:
She puts them up, she takes them down,
Inside she scarcely looks;
We say, "It's fine you're here, Miss Brown,
You are so fond of books!"

The Builders

By GERRIT A. BENEKER

I AM the Builder; on my throne
Of iron and wood and steel and stone,
I stand the Builder, but not alone:—
In God's own image, from God's own plan,
From common clay, he built the man,
From common clay, he raised the ban
That I might live—but not alone.

From God's own earth I scoop the ore,
The coal I mine, the rock I bore,
The lightning's flash from the air I store:—
This clay fuse I—with fire to mock
The ancient Gods; their temples rock,
Crash back to earth; tongues interlock
To build no Babel as of yore.

Where once a hillock was but small,
I build the city towering tall,
The peasant's hut, the marble hall:—
With men from many a foreign strand,
I build with heart and soul and hand
America—the Promised Land.

The Weaver

By EDGAR A. GUEST

THE patter of rain on the roof,
The glint of the sun on the rose;
Of life, these the warp and the woof,
The weaving that every one knows.
Now grief with its consequent tear,
Now joy with its luminous smile;
The days are the threads of the year—
Is what I am weaving worth while?

What pattern have I on my loom?
Shall my bit of tapestry please?
Am I working with gray threads of gloom?
Is there faith in the figures I seize?
When my fingers are lifeless and cold,
And the threads I no longer can weave,
Shall there be there for men to behold
One sign of the things I believe?

God sends me the gray days and rare,
The threads from his bountiful skein,
And many, as sunshine, are fair.
And some are as dark as the rain,
And I think as I toil to express
My life through the days slipping by,
Shall my tapestry prove a success?
What sort of a weaver am I?

Am I making the most of the red
And the bright strands of luminous gold?
Or blotting them out with the thread
By which all men's failure is told?
Am I picturing life as despair,
As a thing men shall shudder to see,
Or weaving a bit that is fair,
That shall stand as the record of me?

The Newsboy

By HELEN F. BOWER

DISPENSER of an adult world's romance—
The loves, the hates, the scandals and the sin
Of all men pass through him; yet does his glance
Betray no evidence of aught within Save youth abundant, and the will to live,

To seek adventure in life's market place.
He has no part in what his hands must give;
No word of Fate reflects upon his face.

He calls his wares with malice unto none,
And little does he reek of what he cries;
Of joy or pain, of battles lost or won
He sings alike; and in his eager eyes
Stirs no emotion, save the joy to stand
And count the shining coppers in his hand.

The Young Reserves

The Book that Cost Three Cocoanuts

THE cocoanut tree was so very, very tall when you stood on the ground and looked at the trunk it actually seemed to tower up into the air, as if its great palm leaves were growing right against the sky, so very high did they look! And you would have supposed that only a lively monkey could ever climb that trunk, but of course you have not met Ze yet. Ze's name means Leopard in African language, but I assure you that Ze himself is neither a leopard nor a monkey, yet he was in the habit of climbing the tall, tall trunk whenever he was hungry for cocoanut milk.

But a time came when he was not allowed to climb—not because his mother was afraid he might slip down and break his crown! Oh, no, not that at all, for she never worried about Ze's bones. It all came about because of a man in their village who was supposed to know everything (only you will soon discover for yourself how little he really did know). Now Ze's father had begun to feel a most uncomfortable aching in his arm, and it was only natural to ask this very wise Witch Doctor what caused the ache—was it some enemy bewitching him, or was it an evil spirit?

Oh, how you would have hated to see that hideous old fellow rattle his rattles as he danced round and round in a frantic dance, for he foamed at the mouth, he jingled his necklaces, he tinkled his bracelets, he clanked his anklets, he nodded the feathers tied around his head, he moaned and he groaned and finally he yelled: "A—h! A—h! Something tells me you have been bewitched by the evil spirit dwelling in yonder cocoanut tree. See, it casts its shadow directly across your doorway, and, of course, it bewitches you every time you walk in or walk out. The only thing for you to do is to stop eating the cocoanuts off that tree—no one in your family must ever climb its trunk or touch it again."

So the news was passed around Ze's family that no one must ever touch the cocoanut tree again; indeed, Ze was warned about it every morning. Not a member of their family dared use the doorway during the hours when the tree cast its shadow directly across it. Moreover, Ze's mother wove a little belt of grass—oh, quite a fancy belt, with dog's teeth dangling from it here and there, and four claws from a huge lion. Ze's father tied this belt around the tree trunk, and, putting a leaf on the ground, he laid some peanut paste on the leaf and loudly begged the cocoanut tree spirit to eat the delicious paste, and admire the handsome belt, and stop making his arm itch and burn. After which he fully expected to feel well; but would you believe it?—his arm ached as badly as ever!

Then Mr. Missionary came to town. Almost any time of day or night you could see him sitting in the palaver-house talking to the men about the God of heaven. None of them had ever known before that there was a God of heaven—yet here was the White Man assuring them that this wonderful God had made the entire world and had packed it full of good things for men to enjoy; persons for men to love, clothes for men to wear, food for men to eat.

Oh, how many times he had to tell the same stories, and whenever he spoke he would show a little black book, the Book of God he called it. Ze loved to rub his flat black nose over the cover and smell the leather.

"Good! Good!" he would grunt, for perhaps you know that in hot, damp weather leather does have a special little odor all its own!

So one day Ze's new white friend said quietly: "Ze, I will sell you a Bible."

Ze actually trembled. Oh, how important he would feel to be the only person in that whole town to own a book. "But how shall I pay you?" he asked.

Mr. Missionary looked in front of him and behind him, then up, then down, as he cried: "I know! Climb up and get me those three cocoanuts; then you shall have your Bible."

But Ze stood rooted to the ground, shaking his jet black head forlornly. "The White Man asks the only thing that Ze dares not. That tree has bewitched part of my family already; we dare not touch it again."

"Nonsense!" cried the white man. "How often have I said that God made everything for men to enjoy. He gave you those three cocoanuts, too."

"No, no, not the cocoanuts," Ze cried. "Oh, White Man, if you could have seen how my father's arm itched and burned and swelled, then you would know why the Witch Doctor told us never to touch this tree again, if the arm was to be well

Mr. Missionary sighed. "Yes, your father has showed me that arm; yet in spite of his dressing up the tree trunk in a fancy woven belt, in spite of presents and prayers to the tree spirit, his arm has kept getting worse and worse, hasn't it?"

"That is very true," Ze said, nodding.

"Well," said Mr. Missionary, "I came to town. Every day I have rubbed a little White Man's medicine on that arm, and this ointment has healed the pain, hasn't it?"

"That is also true," Ze said.

"Then, my dear boy, can't you see what a harmless old tree it is, put here by the Lord for your family to enjoy and not to fear. Here is the Bible, take it, and pay me in cocoanuts after you think it over."

Mr. Missionary walked away, and poor Ze stood on one foot and then on the other. Did he dare? Did he dare? He fidgeted and fussed and fumed; then he placed his arms and legs around that tree trunk and began a rapid jumping, up and up he climbed, until he reached the tip-top, where the cocoanuts hung. Then he himself began sliding, sliding, sliding down that long trunk, and his heart was going pitty-pat."

And just then his own father walked up. Ze ran up to him. "Does your arm hurt you?"

"No, not since the White Man cured it."

"Does it prick you the least little bit now?"

"No, why should it?"

"Oh," cried Ze, "see what I've done! The White Man asked me to, because of all the boys in our town I alone am the one he wants to give a Bible to."

Ze's father actually laughed. "Silly boy," he said; "the White Man is clever: he has given every boy in our village a Bible, but each of them has had to earn it by doing something he is terribly afraid to do. For the White Man wants to teach us there is nothing to fear in God's world. So that is why you had to earn your Bible by cocoanuts. We older men are slow, but the White Man says you younger boys will be quick to learn this trick called reading, and when you can read us the Bible he says we all will be glad and unafraid. Well, we shall see."

And they did see! For when all the little boys and girls in town could read Bible verses to their parents the old, old fears began to vanish. There isn't room to tell you of the fears of other families, but Ze's parents thought the one hundred and twenty-first Psalm was written especially for them, to tell them not to fear the shadow of the cocoanut tree, for it plainly says: "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even forever more."

BETTER RECREATION

I Thes. 5:16-24

By F. C. STIFLER

"And the God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Recreation is a word that unfortunately is mispronounced. We should pronounce it re-creation. Then we would understand its meaning better. As it is, the first syllable seems to suggest the word "reckless," which describes much that our young people indulge in in the name of recreation.

1. Real recreation should recreate the spirit. And by spirit here we mean spirits. It should put a person into a better mood—a mood of expectancy and buoyancy where he trusts his fellows more and sees the bright side of life more easily, and finds a greater supply of patience to draw on. Real recreation should make a man a better friend, better fellow-worker, better sport in games and better loser when things go wrong. It should preserve his "spirits" entire without blame.

2. Real recreation should recreate the body. We excuse all manner of excesses in the name of recreation because we say we are resting our weary bodies. There are two chief elements in the process of bodily re-creation. One is change, and the other is relaxation of the muscular system. Neither of these is gained by over-stimulating exercise like dancing or week-end parties with lack of sleep and too long hours at strenuous physical exercise.

3. But above all real recreation recreates the soul. What do we mean by the soul? We mean that part of the man that comprehends God. The mind is a part of it. The mind gets fagged as well as the body and the spirits. There are several gates to the mind, principally the eyes and the ears. Most of our so-called recreations are designed to minister to the individual through these gates—books, pictures, plays, concerts, and landscapes. The difficulty with our present-day recreational program is that many false stimulants to the soul are sent through these gates. We should not think for a moment of giving our body rest by a constant daily application of a sleeping powder. We should have the sleep but when it was over we should be more weak and weary than before. It is this sort of false relief that bad pictures and jazz music and coarse literature and loose social relationships give to the soul. They drug it and leave it weaker than before. The soul is genuinely recreated by companionship with other noble souls, no matter what form that association may take—if it is reading together it will be of such books as interpret God and his goodness, if it is in hiking and athletics it will be well-planned and taken in moderation, if it is in sight-seeing it will be the contemplation of the beautiful in art and life and nature.

An indulgence that injures either the spirits, the body or the soul is bad indeed, but a practice that harms them all is unforgivable. And there are many such today. Consider some of the popular diversions of young people today in the light of this analysis. Then strive to make them better.

Convention Impressions

The Sunday afternoon service to me was an inspiration, knowing our work with the young is not in vain.—Mrs. C. H. Davies.

Has been an inspiration to more consecrated service.—Mrs. M. J. Lucas.

The greatest meeting of its kind I've ever attended. It has inspired me to do better things for Jesus.—Chas. W. Fisher.

The convention has enlarged my conception of Christian service.—Louis Lee Leininger.

I thank God for the blessed privilege of attending this great convention. It has been so helpful to me.—Lucy E. Bower.

B. Y. P. U. perfection.—M. C. Rhodes.

A helpful and inspiring convention of which all southern states should have taken advantage.—Eleanor Susang, Tennessee.

The convention has furnished me with much more of the great inspiration.—Roy W. Dodson.

The convention has given me a determination to truly serve God at all times and in all things, and to go back home and help others to do the same.—Irma L. Curnow.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

BY CHARLES H. WATSON
The Nation's Educators

We had the National Education Association with us for six days. It was a great exhibit of variegated pedagogues, and of Boston weather. Six or eight thousand teachers, and six days and nights of such a brand of mugginess, fog, and dripping, as only Boston can continuously achieve. It is remarkable how completely so large a company of visitors can be lost in a big city. In this season of passing tourists you would have to be told that so many schoolmasters were abroad in Boston. On the last day Old Sol came out radiantly as if to save the city from the pent-up condemnation.

This convention brings up the old question whether or not a "national" gathering of teachers is not so big as to be unwieldy and disappointing. Of course the pleasant incidentals that fine weather would have permitted to all, are a sort of life-saver. But without that varied diversion, attention was concentrated on the disappointments that are certain to go with bigness in a gathering that must traverse from the platform the whole field of serious teaching. A hall containing so vast a company is altogether too large for the platform, and most of the appointed spell-binders are not able to bind. They have no platform mastery. That is a thing that comes only from equipment and practice. Something more is needed than a previous knowledge of the subject. In this big country of ours it is an open question whether "national" conventions may not be indefinitely immense, and definitely disappointing.

Our State Convention

The executive committee of our state board in a recent meeting took some important actions. They were along the line of a more practical cooperation with the Northern Baptist Convention through certain readjustments made necessary by the decisions of the convention at Indianapolis. A 25 per cent reduction in operating expenses was recommended, each state carrying the expenses of its own board of promotion. In the budget of $92,053, which is shared by the board of education, the City Mission Society, and the Home Mission Society, the division is in proportion to the importance of the different causes, about two-thirds going to the state convention work. Every action taken by the board of directors at this meeting was in the direction of a full and practical co-operation with the recent decisions of the Northern Baptist Convention, which place the responsibility for raising the funds for the support of all denominational enterprises upon the state organizations, where it belongs.

Our State Staff

Both in leadership and in well-articulated and efficiently smooth-working organization, we are in tip-top shape in Massachusetts. Our leaders are well-seasoned, harmonious, and armed with a practical experience in state work which ought to carry us to our utmost in an achieving success. The return of Dr. Hugh Heath, after his former success as our chief, and with added values after his larger board of promotion labors, gives us great confidence and expectation. Director Waterbury's wise and genial leadership, so long sustained and effectual, especially among the new Americans, is a priceless contribution. General Missionary Dolan is a sort of pastoral comfort out among the churches, a sympathetic counsellor, and a quickening evangel. Dr. Peterson and Miss Gertrude Hartley make a team in Sunday-school efficiency and religious education, that would be hard to match anywhere. Among our teachers and church workers they are thrillers, judging from the response they get.

Since the happy clarifying of things at Indianapolis all parties are feeling better. If all now agree to drop names and sources of partizan irritation, and unitedly push the Baptist chariot, it will be a great year. Now is the time to major on our glorious agreements, and soft pedal our differences of interpretation. James C. Colgate's specific for these Baptist times is a good one: "Pay your debts and be active for the Master." It clarifies theological ideas, and keeps us sweet and brotherly.

A Song of Degrees

Commencement season always sings to us. Not in mellifluous vowels, but in certain much coveted and resonant consonants. We smile at degrees, but we smile more broadly and deeply in the back of our heads when our own names get attached to them. And our friends smile also as they rejoice with us. It is by no means an unpleasant or discordant song, the song of degrees. Prof. James P. Berkeley of Newton, and Rev. Robert L. Webb of Dorchester have been hearing it issuing from the halls of Colby. We rarely have a worthier pair of D.D.'s than these. Dr. Webb is to be a special lecturer in the Boston Divinity School next year. Dr. Berkeley is the amazing grower on the Newton faculty. He seems to increase like corn in prairie heat.

Two of a Kind in Providence

Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves who edited THE BAPTIST through its stormy years, and previous to that ran a long, strong race at Newburyport, has been called to the pastorate of First Church, Providence. This is an admirable arrangement. Dr. Cleaves has mental keenness and quality, along with a warm and wholesome evangelical feeling. The church is to continue the eminent Sunday morning preachers, while Dr. Cleaves is to shepherd the flock and lead in the other services of church and parish.

The other who goes to Providence is our former director of promotion in Massachusetts, Rev. William Reid. He goes to succeed former Secretary B. T. Livingstone as the head of the state convention activities in Rhode Island. Director Reid will be a perfect fit for such a job, for there are always activities where he is. The impression of unusual competency which he made here, coupled with an earnest and brotherly helpfulness, makes us confident that he will be a power for good in the state of Rhode Island.

A Couple of Bits

The first is a correction. By mistaken information your scribe sent Rev. Herbert B. Hutchins to the Stratford Street Church, West Roxbury. It is another good Hutchins who goes there—Rev. A. J. Hutchins, formerly of Somerville. They had Mr. Hutchins for a supply and he grew into a pastor, much to the mutual joy.

The other bit is Dr. R. S. MacArthur at Tremont Temple. Much more than a bit, he is as much of an institution in the summer as the Temple is. They anticipate his coming, then throngs of people bask in his glowing freshness, and welcome his clear and interesting method of gospel instruction. He is one of the summer features in Boston.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

BAPTISMS ARE NOT INFREQUENT during the summer. Five persons were baptized at Meriden July 2, four from one family, husband, wife, son and daughter. The daughter of the pastor, Rev. W. G. Hubbard, was also among the number. During his service in the Christian ministry, Mr. Hubbard's father was pastor of seven Baptist churches in New Hampshire. Mr. Hubbard has followed his father in three of these seven churches, namely, at Campton, East Washington, and Meriden where he is now serving.

REV. H. I. KEMP RECENTLY BAPTIZED seven persons at Contocook and it is expected that others will follow.

THE HOPKINS CHURCH IS ENJOYING the services of its present pastor, Rev. C. L. Caulkins. Mr. Caulkins' son, Charles Whitney Caulkins, is a student for the ministry at Temple College Philadelphia, and while a student has been doing acceptable preaching. He expects to help his father at Hopkinton in special services during the summer.

COLBY ACADEMY IS FORTUNATE in securing for its new headmaster, Mr. H. Leslie Sawyer, who has served at Lebanon as principal of the high school and later as superintendent of school. He comes well-equipped for the work he undertakes.

FIRST CHURCH OF MANCHESTER, Rev. C. P. MacGregor, pastor, has opened a daily vacation Bible school for children with an attendance of sixty-three.

THE STATE CONVENTION OFFICE has at its disposal two small organs, one a baby organ and the other of size suitable for a vestry or small audience room.

CONNECTICUT

THE MEN'S BROTHERHOOD of First Church, Bridgeport, held its annual meeting on Tuesday, June 27. Dinner was served to fifty-eight men. The speakers were Judge F. P. Wilder and the pastor, Rev. D. B. MacQueen. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Pres., W. O. Florian; vice-presidents, Maurice Perry, S. N. Beans, C. E. Whitmore; secy., T. T. Phillips; treas., E. H. Davis.

THE CORNER-STONE of the new building which is to be used by the Italian Baptist Mission, connected with First Church, Ansonia, Rev. Wallace C. Sampson, pastor, was laid on Sunday afternoon, June 9. The historical sketch of the mission was given by Mrs. Chapel S. Carter of First Church. Missionary J. G. Riso spoke in Italian on "The Door of Opportunity." Dr. A. B. Coats, convention secretary, spoke on the leading place Baptists had taken in work among foreigners within the state. Rev. Wallace C. Sampson and J. G. Riso together laid the corner-stone. Rev. E. E. Gates, Hartford, Mr. Sampson's predecessor in the pastorate, when the Italian Mission was founded, offered the prayer of consecration.

THE ASHFORD BAPTIST Sunday School Convention met in its eighty-fifth annual session in First Church, Spring Hill, Mansfield, on Wednesday, June 8. The attendance was large and representative. The addresses interesting and inspiring. The pastor of the entertaining church, Rev. H. W. Tillinghast, was elected president and Geo. A. Bowen, Willimantic, was made secretary-treasurer.

REV. E. E. SCATES, formerly of Enosburg Falls, Vt., assumed the pastorate of the Jewett City Church, June 9.

NEW JERSEY

RIDGEWOOD, EMMAUEL: Dr. Thomas H. Sprague, pastor. A community vacation Bible-School movement has been inaugurated comprising four schools. One of these being held in Emmanuel Church opened with bright prospects. A staff of four paid teachers is in charge assisted by seventeen volunteer workers. Union Sunday evening services are being held for four Sunday evenings. Pastor Sprague will be on vacation until Sept. 10. The supplies during his absence being Rev. J. Earle Edwards, superintendent N. J. Board of Promotion; Rev. Adelbert Chapman; Rev. Stewart B. Crandell, pastor First Church, Battle Creek, Mich.; Dr. H. Walker Vincent, pastor Ashland Avenue Church, Toledo; Rev. Albert K. Morris, pastor First Church, Toledo.

Young People's Assembly

The eighth annual New Jersey Baptist Assembly, held at Peddie Institute, Hightstown, July 1-July 8, was successful in every way. As the assembly drew to a close, the Rev. Otto F. Laegler, director of the sessions, declared that "the assembly ought to bring very definite results to the local churches, because of the spirit of the delegates, the character of the work done, and the spiritual atmosphere and emphasis upon personal service in the home church."

Approximately 300 delegates were enrolled at the assembly, and all but one of these received certificates showing that the required work had been successfully completed. Certificates are awarded only to those students who take four courses and present suitable notes, a requirement which gives something of an idea of the quality of the work done this year.

In addition to the serious work of the curriculum, constructive recreation played an important part in the assembly life. The entire Peddie athletic equipment, swimming pool, gymnasium, tennis courts and athletic field, were at the disposal of the delegates. The recreational activities were supervised by Prof. William P. Uhler, physical director of the Irvington public schools.

Pageantry and dramatics, under the supervision of Miss Rosamond Kimball, also played an important role during the sessions, and the annual "stunt night," held paradoxically on the afternoon of the Fourth, was participated in with the usual amount of enthusiasm. Miss Kimball gave an interesting course in "The Use of the Drama and Pageantry in Protraying Religious Truths."

The morning worship in the school chapel was in charge of Rev. C. E. Goodall, pastor of First Church, Roselle. These services were rich in devotional life, as were the meetings held each evening in the chapel, and at which the delegates were addressed by various speakers of national prominence.

DELAWARE

SILAS D. WEEKS and CLARENCE M. KEEN were ordained by North Church of Wilmington, on Thursday evening, July 6, on recommendation of a council which met in the afternoon of the same date. The call for the council was issued to all the Baptist churches in Delaware, and also the churches at Marcus Hook, Oxford and Crum Lynne, Pa., and Pedricktown and Newport, N. J. Dr. George Boddiss, of Marcus Hook, was moderator and Russell Sturgis, of North Wilmington, clerk of the council. The program of the evening included a sermon by Dr. Boddiss, charge to the church by Dr. Allison, of Second Church, Wilmington, and charge to the candidates by Pastor C. W. Deibert of Hampton, Va.

NEBRASKA

SOME MONTHS AGO REV. R. RICHARDS left the pastorate to enter evangelistic work under the Nebraska Convention. He has held meetings in the most difficult churches in the state, resulting in a large number of additions to the church and helping to deepen the spiritual life of the church. At Platte Center and Humphrey, where he held meetings, churches have been organized which have been self-sustaining from the beginning and are very rapidly growing into aggressive organizations. Mr. Richards is a man of splendid evangelistic ability, loyal to Jesus Christ and his truth. The decreased receipts of the Nebraska Convention has made it necessary for Mr. Richards to work independently.

Had there been a congregation many fatalities must have resulted. The clock, hanging on a rear wall, was unbroken and ticking; the piano, though covered with debris, was not scarred or out of tune; the Bible and pulpit and three pulpit chairs were untouched, all as though to say that worship and work must be continued. The same Thursday night the young people's meeting was largely attended and when the pastor asked what should be done the enthusiastic response came, "Clean up and be ready for next Sunday's services." Such was the response that the auditorium was ready for worship the next Sunday. At the close of the sermon on Sunday morning on "When Not to Give Up," by a unanimous standing vote it went on record that each would stand loyally by the pastor and raise the money all over again for the work and repairs. The God that Jesus Saw, by W. Garrett Horder. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.

The worth of a man's religion will depend upon his idea of God. As men take to their hearts the highest form of God, their joy in religion will increase. The purpose of Jesus was to reveal the perfect God. So the author believes, and therefore he attempts to picture God as he thinks Jesus saw him. There are four parts to the book, the first dealing with the perfect Father Jesus saw, and the second containing a discussion of the things that hide God's perfection from men. The last section is an interesting discussion of the right attitude to the Word. One may not have to agree with all the author's conclusions to find this book suggestive.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

IF I WERE ON THE MUSIC COMMITTEE

If I were a member of a church music committee and the music was going along smoothly, I think I'd leave the choir-master pretty much to his own devices, he being supposed to be able to look after the technical end of things.

It wouldn't do a bit of harm, of course, for me to ask the leader, especially if he were a comparative stranger, if the music committee might be of use in securing prospective members for him to interview.

If the choir were short of hymn-books, I wouldn't expect my singers to continue to look two on a book. I'd not be very keen on doing it myself. A friendly offer to help secure more books would not be amiss. Very few choirs have sufficient to go round. I'd want mine to be the exception. I'd keep in mind the fact that it's a bit disheartening to a man or woman who is giving no end of extra time to improve the music of my church, to hear the old frayed-out economy string harped on loudly and long. I'd be ready with sympathetic advice and a helping hand if the leader appeared to be putting enthusiasm into his work and life into his workers and was not asking for foolish things. I'd not "shoo" him off with the economy bogey either, if I well knew the people of my church were not coming through with the givings they could easily afford. I'd get after the givers rather than skimp the music.

I'd slip in once in a while to choir practice and ask for the privilege of telling leader and choir how much the church appreciated what they were trying to do.

I'd want to be "counted in" on all the choir's jollifications and would give them to understand that I was prepared to keep up my end of the expenses with any of them.

I'd go out of my way to persuade the rouches of the congregation to keep their evil tongues off the choir and its doings. I'd pour a bit of oil on the troubled waters when financial estimates for the year's music came up for discussion in the board. I'd be sure to have tucked away in my pocket comparative costs of the music of other churches and I'd talk about music costs in terms of investments rather than as expenses.

It seems to me if I could do even these few things (adding for good measure an encouraging slap on the shoulder for the leader occasionally) I'd be helping some. If I could do this with tact and be the well-behaved buffer I ought to be between the musical and business ends of the church I think I might qualify. One thing is certain: I'd not accept nomination for the music committee if I didn't intend to do something towards helping my choir, whilst I held office.—The Choir Journal.

GLEANINGS

From the First Avenue Baptist Church of Hutchinson, Kan., comes a program of a musical service devoted to the compositions of the editor of this page, together with a clipping from the local newspaper speaking in highly favorable terms of the success of the undertaking. The organ is a splendid two-manual Moeller, installed two years ago. I had the great pleasure of playing the dedicatory recital on the instrument, alternating with my wife, who offered relief with her vocal solos. Mrs. Roy Campbell is now the efficient organist, and Mrs. J. L. Carmack officiates as leader of the enthusiastic chorus-choir. The musical numbers presented were:

- (b) The Ebon Lute.....Lester
- Anthem: The Lord is in His holy temple.....Lester
- Pauline Getter and the Choir
- Soprano solo: Greater Love hath no man.....Lester

MUSIC REVIEWS

From the Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

The Queen of Hearts, an operetta for children, libretto by Josephine Elliott Krohn; the music by William Lester. Priced at $0.60.

Effective dramatic works for children are not overly plentiful. Therefore this new musical play for unchanged voices should find wide vogue, for it boasts a lively "book," with dramatic values, humorous situations, and plenty of stage-action, coupled to music that is easy, tuneful, and written with an eye for practical effect. That the book is of positive dramatic value may be gauged from the fact that as a play for children it won second prize in a contest held by the Drama League a few years ago. It has been extensively performed as a play; with the addition of suitable lyrics it forms the libretto to the operetta. The music is written, so far as the choral music is concerned, largely in two-part style; if this division is not advisable, it can be done in unison. The solo parts called for are King and Queen of Hearts, Knave of Hearts, Captain of the King's Guards, the Prologue or King's Musician, the First Officer, the Maid of Hearts, and the King's Herald are all speaking parts. Full directions for the staging of the work are printed in the first of the books; the scenic investiture called for is extremely simple of necessity—of course it can be elaborated at will. Sunday schools in search of material for a special program or celebration will do well to examine this work; it has a proper moral, well hidden, but none the less vivid. The piano accompaniment is quite easy, but full.

From Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago, Ill.

AdagietteLoomis ($0.75)

Compositions for cello and piano that are of mood available for use in church, and have accompaniments easily transferable to the organ bench are not very plentiful. Hence, this attractive number by this sterling Chicago composer should find wide acceptance from the fraternity of church musicians. The melody has distinction and individuality, is idiomatic to the instrument, and will afford pleasure and inspiration to the listener. It is dedicated to Hans Hess, the noted Chicago cellist, and has been successfully used by that artist in many of his concerts.

From the Fillmore Music House, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Twilight SongSchroll ($0.50)

An attractive song for medium voice is here presented; easy in grade of difficulty, appealing melodically, and sympathetic in sentiment, it should prove of wide appeal. Its subject and mood make it available for both secular and sacred use. Published in two keys.

net increase being more than 100 per cent; this, too, through the regular work of the church without special meetings. The Bible school has made a like gain besides maintaining its leadership in efficiency. Missionary offerings have increased threefold and the church has sent out its first missionary to the foreign field. For two seasons an enthusiastic school of missions has been conducted and last year a most successful vacation Bible school, the first of the community, was put on. At the celebration a year and a half ago of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the church, a $12000 mortgage was burned which represented the last indebtedness against the church building. Resolutions of the church and other organizations of the city speak in the highest terms of both Mr. and Mrs. Coon. The church has appointed a representative pulpit committee to secure a regular pastor, of which Mr. E. H. Houtchens is the clerk.

Pacific Coast

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE WEST SIDE CHURCH, Seattle, on June 21 celebrated its fourteenth anniversary. An excellent program of music was rendered, a brief history of the church was given by W. W. Watters, a charter member of the church, short talks were given by Rev. C. R. Hemenway, a former pastor, and Dr. E. H. Hicks of the Fremont Church. Greetings were given in behalf of neighboring churches by Dr. J. H. Matthews, pastor of the West Side Congregational Church, and Dr. G. F. Holt in behalf of the Western Washington Baptist Convention. The women had decorated the church and served refreshments. The membership of the church was rejoiced at Dr. Cook's announcement of his acceptance of the call to the pastorate which had been extended to him the previous Sunday. He has been acting pastor the past year, during which time the church has made gratifying progress. The outlook is full of promise.

THE SEATTLE BAPTIST Ministers' Conference elected as its new officers July 3. Rev. F. E. Dark, president and Dr. C. A. Cook, secretary-treasurer. The conference listened to excellent reports of the meeting of the Indianapolis Convention given by C. J. Erickson, Rev. F. E. Dark, Dr. A. M. Bailey, and Secy. J. F. Watson. The attendance and interest in the conference the past year have been unusually good. The conference closed its season's meetings with a picnic for Baptist ministers and their families at Woodland Park, Seattle, Monday, July 10.

REV. J. B. TAYLOR of Nebraska City, Neb., is spending July and August with Green Lake Church, Seattle.

DR. W. E. HENRY, of EVERETT, surprised his church June 29 by presenting his resignation, to take effect October 1. Dr. Henry has been with the Everett people over seven years, during which time the church has made marked growth in every way. He is one of our strongest men and the Everett church one of the strongest churches in the convention field.

MEMBERS OF THE SEATTLE BAPTIST WOMEN'S UNION were the guests of the Tacoma Baptist Women's Union at a picnic meeting in Point Defiance Park, Tacoma, Wednesday, July 12.

God's Better Thing

By A. D. BELDEN, B. D. (Lond.)
Essays of concern and conviction.

The author's conviction is that the evangelical faith is seriously cramped by a purely individualistic application, and that it must find its flowering and fruitage in the gospel of the kingdom of God on Earth before it can adequately satisfy the spiritual needs of mankind and give just proof of itself. $1.50 net

Modern Money Methods for the Church

The object of the author is to suggest ways whereby the local church may be delivered from unwise financial methods, and to outline a plan adapted to provide adequate financial resources for both the local and the wider Christian enterprise. $1.00 net

The Withered Fig Tree

Studies in Stewardship

By EDWIN M. POTEAT

The author's purpose is to make clear the fundamental principles underlying the Stewardship movement and to furnish a basis for the organization of local leagues or groups of Christian stewards. Authentic personal testimonials re-enforce the argument. The book is arranged for the use of classes, questions that will stimulate discussion and afford themes for debate being attached to each chapter. $1.00 net

Makers of the Bible

By HERMON H. SEVERN

A manual of information about the processes through which the Bible came to be and was handed down.

The author's theme, the history of the Bible from the lost books that preceded it, through the story of its making, its early readers and translators, down to modern reconstruction of the best text from the manuscripts, necessarily occupies most of his attention. Scholarly in knowledge, clear in statement, he is also deeply reverent in spirit. $1.25 net

Rev. Edgar L. Mullins, a nephew of Pres. E. Y. Mullins, has been called to two fields in Indiana, dividing his time between Sardinia and Liberty churches.

T. Louis Comparette, curator of the Philadelphia mint, died July 3. He was a leading authority on numismatics and the history of coinage.

Mr. Frank C. Nickels, of Minneapolis, is enroute with his wife and son to the Passion Play at Oberammergau, to be followed by a tour of the world.

The First Church Haverhill, Mass., has an attractive announcement of the summer schedule of its Bible school, of which C. B. Mitchell is superintendent.

Ninety-four churches of New York state have made remittance to the state office through their treasurers of beneficence every month since the beginning of the New World Movement.

Mr. Deloss C. Shull of Sioux City, Iowa, former president of the Northern Baptist Convention, has been elected a member of the board of trustees of the University of Chicago. Three sons of Mr. Shull are alumni of the institution.

Dr. J. Whitcomb Brounger will spend July and August lecturing in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, on the Chautauqua circuit. Dr. Wm. H. Geistweit of the Third Church, St. Louis, will supply at the Los Angeles Temple Church during August.

The ministry of Mrs. Aime Semple McPherson and her relations to the Baptist denomination have become a burning issue in California churches, some of which are seriously torn with dissension over her preaching and practices. Pastor Luther Arthur of the First Church, Huntington Beach, Cal., has printed an outline of a sermon which he delivered against what he considers her false teaching as set forth in her book "This is That." Mr. Arthur is unable to reply to any correspondence concerning the sermon, but would probably mail copies of his outline on receipt of stamped envelope.

Rev. Geo. F. Holt has closed his work as director of promotion of the Western Washington Convention. He and his wife are spending their vacation during July at Long Beach, Calif. Dr. Holt is favorably known in Minnesota, California and Oregon where he held successful pastorates, and in Washington where he rendered excellent service for more than two years as director of promotion. After the first of August he will be available for supply, pastoral or field work. His home address is 2443 Broadway, N., Seattle, Washington.

The executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance will meet in London, July 31, to consider plans and program for the Baptist World Congress at Stockholm in July, 1923. The meeting of the committee will be followed by an international conference on Baptist relief and mission work in Europe. Baptist leaders from America attending the meetings include Dr. E. Y. Mullins, Dr. R. H. Pitt and Dr. W. W. Landrum of the Southern Convention, and our own brethren Franklin, Taylor, Abernethy and Jones.

As Others See Us

(Concluded from last week)

Congregationalist (Boston):

"The Northern Baptist Convention, to which all religious America was looking as the battle-ground over fundamentalist issues, has passed without anything serious happening. The fundamentalists seem to have shot their bolt. Reports of the convention indicate a tentative measuring of strength, but an avoidance of clear-cut challenge. Proposals specifically made by the fundamentalists failed to carry, and the election of officers, which was expected to be the testing-point, revealed the preponderance of 'evangelicals', and the failure of any group to dominate the convention. The fundamentalists will unquestionably maintain an extensive and annoying guerilla warfare for years to come, but it is doubtful if they will ever be able to assume again so challenging and menacing an attitude toward the progressive life of the church. Their menace to the Baptist denomination was recognized as greater than to any other fellowship. * * *

"We have no words of reproach for those who are following the best that they know; but the fundamentalist movement as a whole has been hard and cold. It has had no warmth of love either for God or man, and has turned aside from the services of love and the primary task of redemption to put its strength into controversy over speculative issues, and into the denunciation of professed Christian leaders of whom it has not approved, or whom it has been unable to understand.

"It would be a mistake to regard events in the Baptist convention as a triumph for technical 'liberalism', or for the extreme wing as regards critical opinion, among Baptists. While the course of events undoubtedly makes for the preservation of the freedom for which the Baptists have stood historically, our judgment is that the convention's action is a triumph for the evangelical temper.

"The fine motto that dominated the convention—Agreed to differ but resolved to love—was expressive of this sane, wholesome, evangelical spirit. Nothing finer could have been chosen under the circumstances, and that watchword is worthy of preservation in all branches of the Church."

Lutheran (New York):

"As nearly as we could judge this much-discussed meeting was more of a 'dud' than anything else. Whatever victory there was for either side went to the liberals. This they obtained by tactics rather than by debate. Our knowledge of naval terms is too little for us to tell the story figuratively: we will therefore merely tell it. * * *

"We Lutherans are not directly concerned in this Baptist controversy, except in so far as we gain wisdom from their experiences. What they are trying to settle is indicated in the clause, what Baptists believe the New Testament teaches. Their ecclesiastical ancestors raised that question, when the Anabaptists became a distinct party in the Protestant movement in Germany, Holland and Switzerland. Balthasar Huebmaier is named first among their leaders. * * *

"Huebmaier had Zwingli as his teacher on the Sacraments, and deemed them only symbols. While Zwingli, Calvin, Luther, and the English reformers retained infant baptism, the Anabaptists rejected it. We give these details in order to remark logically that Luther at least believed that God's word—the Bible—is the sole authority for doctrines and teachings. Huebmaier and his companions decided that Luther did not know what the Scriptures teach: that the Anabaptists did. Hence they began the divisions among the Protestants, who stood stoutly for the Bible as the standard of faith.

"The Lutherans went on record by confessions (creeds) as to their beliefs on what the word of God is and as to what it teaches. It is an interesting development that on the four hundredth anniversary of Huebmaier's break with Catholicism the denomination originating on his split with Luther should face within themselves the same question of authority. We do not offer a theory that they are to suffer for their mistakes, but certainly they indicate a reason for the carefully framed confessions of faith that arose during the Reformation. Either they must adopt a religious 'platform' or retain false teaching among them."

Continent (Chicago) Presbyterian:

"That astonishing vote of 637 against 1,265 by which the Northern Baptist Convention refused to adopt the old-time 'New Hampshire Creed' as the standard of doctrine for its denomination, gives a lift of encouragement to every untrammelled religious mind. It was astonishing because most observers expected an exactly contrary result. What happened means that the spirit of coercion in the field of current Christianity is much less strong than appearances—and especially noises—had recently indicated.

"To say this is not to indorse any theoretical objection to written Christian creeds, nor to find any specific fault with the creed whose adoption was sought by the Baptist minority at Indianapolis. In other circumstances the affirmation of the venerable 'confession of faith' there urged, might have been not only innocent but edifying. The outstanding reality of the Baptist situation at Indianapolis, however, was the patent fact that the proponents of creed-adoption were urging a new test of doctrine because they believed that by this means they could drive liberal Baptists out of their fellowship. The Continent considers that they were mistaken in that anticipation—we imagine that few if any of the liberals would have stumbled seriously over the creed proposed. But the object in view was none the less incompatible with Christianity—an attempt to narrow church fellowship where Christ's generosity would aim to broaden it. The defeat of the purpose is therefore an index of growing religion among Baptists—and inferentially among other names of Christians also.

A Good Record

Dr. John W. Weddell, our old-time Standard-Baptist friend,—and himself a standard Baptist as well,—assures our readers in a recent Southern Ohio letter, that “there hasn’t been a bank robbery or an auto stolen to speak of since your humble servant came down this way to Marietta, now almost a year past.”

Dr. Weddell is just now removing to Morgan Park, Ill., where he will make his home; and we know our Morgan Park neighbors will be relieved to read this reassuring statement—even though it may be considered ex parte!

We have always loved Brother Cody; but we love him more for saying so sweetly in The Courier what we ourselves have been unable properly to express:

“Our greatest difficulty is getting articles, that ought to be published, into The Courier after they get into our office. They come to us in a continual stream, and we greatly appreciate the fact that so many people wish to write for The Courier. . . . If the letters and articles that we receive were one-half and one-third, and one-fourth and one-fifth, as long as they usually are, we could carry all the news and all the views that come to this office, and also have space for the others that come and do not get in, and for the many that we want but do not receive.

“We would say that a postal card, a dear postal, one of the most beautiful gifts of the mail, ought to contain all that should be written concerning a good meeting. ‘Outrage,’ you say. No: dear friends, it’s the truth. A postal is also long enough for any reference to a retiring pastor.

“Dear friends, these long letters about matters that could be told in an exceedingly short space are a positive embarrassment.

“As to articles: well, it is not possible to say that they should be two columns. But it is well within the truth to say, that those of a column length, or one and one-half columns, are considered by the average reader as long enough.

“We write these suggestions with trepidation, and with the abiding uneasiness that they will do no good. Selah.”

Ready!

Missionary John A. Howard of Bengal sends to the editor of THE BAPTIST a curious metal spur used in cock fights in the Santali jungle. It is shaped exactly like a grain scythe, with a sharp blade three inches long.

No, gentle reader, he did not send it to convey any insinuation against THE BAPTIST, for he writes, “If you know of any one needing spurring up, you might try it on him.”

However, we never did care much for cock fights—and never knew much about them until recently—but if we can use this heathen instrument to the glory of God as a means of spurring our Baptist churches to circulate their own paper, or to make the New World Movement move, we will take a chance. Lead us to it!

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Curtis Lee Laws and Mrs. Laws sailed for England and the Continent July 20, to be absent until Oct. 15.

Dr. W. J. McGlothlin declines the urgent call to the presidency of William Jewell College, and will remain at the head of Furman University.

Rev. W. S. Jacoby, associate pastor of the Moody Church of Chicago during the ministry there of Dr. R. A. Torrey, was buried at Guthrie Center, Iowa, June 23. The Moody Church held a memorial service July 9, conducted by Dr. R. A. Torrey, now of Los Angeles.

Minnesota is enjoying the acquisition of Rev. A. J. Dahlby and wife, formerly in the Assam mission field. They began their work at Parker's Prairie June 1 and the church is enthusiastic over their fellowship and ministry. Mrs. Dahlby gave an address Sunday, July 9, at the World Wide Guild house party at the Assembly Grounds on Lake Minnetonka.

The president of the Cuban republic is trying to make an end of the lottery in that island, where it is said that $10,000,000 a year is taken from the people through this outlawed and yet persistent institution. This action of the president is the result of advice from President Harding's official representative in Cuba, Major General Crowder.

Mrs. Augusta Stetson, formerly an intimate friend of Mrs. Eddy, and now in charge of an Independent Christian Science enterprise in New York, is buying space widely in the daily papers to publish her protest against "The Star Spangled Banner" as our national anthem. The Scientist Publication Committee officially repudiates her, saying that "no statement made by Mrs. A. E. Stetson... is representative of the Christian Science Movement."

Dr. Sidney M. Berry, pastor of Carr's Lane Church, Birmingham, has upset all calculations and greatly disappointed a hopeful flock at Westminster Church, London, by declining the call extended June 15 to become for a second time the successor to Dr. J. H. Jowett. Dr. Berry is the son of the late Dr. Charles Berry of Wolverhampton, who was once invited to succeed Henry Ward Beecher. His eminent son followed Dr. Jowett at Carr's Lane when but thirty years of age. Now at forty he is one of the ablest and most widely read preachers in the Congregational ministry.

The Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago reports a total tract circulation the past year of 1,184,355 pieces; 61,752 volumes were supplied to 395 penal institutions.

Prof. Allan T. Hoben, for three years on the faculty at Carleton (Minn.) College, has accepted the call to the presidency of Kalamazoo (Mich.) College. His scholastic and personal equipment give assurance of a notable career for this important institution under his leadership. As an author Dr. Hoben is well known through his books on "The Minister and the Boy," and "The Church School of Citizenship." For several years he served as field secretary for the Juvenile Protective Association in Chicago, and the American Army in France also claimed him for nine months. He will be the preacher for July 30 at the University of Chicago.

A Kansas newspaper, the Topeka State Journal, has for three months been printing weekly serial stories from the Bible, with some very remarkable results, according to the publishers. Several other Kansas papers are following the Journal's example.

California Baptists will rejoice to learn that Dr. Selden W. Cummings is to return to the Coast, having accepted a professorship at Redlands University, after two successful years at Ruggles Street Church, Boston.

"The Baptist Banner" (W. Va.) will have a new editor beginning August 15, when Rev. G. E. Bartlett, director of promotion, will take charge. The promotion work will be taken over by State Secretary A. S. Kelley, by unanimous vote of the state board.

*So hold Thou me that I may have the power
To hold to thee. Myself am weakness, Lord,*

*I know no safety, even when I cling To thee. O God—from thee my strength must spring;
And the coiled impulse of thine inwrought word*

Shall fill my purpose with love's forceful dower

Of might. Then shalt thou know—who else need know?—

*If human and divine be power spent so,
When thou didst hear me sigh
'Midst storm, "Thou'rt stronger, Lord, than I."*

The First Christian Science college in the world is to be undertaken at St. Louis, at a cost of $1,000,000, according to a daily press story.

Storer College, Harper's Ferry, W. Va., publishes in the June Record a prize-winning translation of a French story by Daudet, the award being won by Miss Lobelia Davis, a student at Storer. The school is raising $1,000 to meet the condition of a grant of $2,000 by the education board. Storer has a noble history in the service of the Negro people, dating from the days of the Freedman's Bureau. The old John Brown engine house is now located on the college campus.

The united war work campaign, afterbirth of the armistice and precursor of the Interchurch World Movement, which raised funds for the several national organizations maintaining social work among the American armies and navy, has finally completed its career and closed its accounts. The campaign committee filed its final accounting July 1 in the United States Supreme Court. The total subscriptions were $202,924,889, of which $13,725,877 was never collected. Including interest the total actually acquired was $190,183,992. Of this amount $109,102,075, or 58.65 per cent, went to the Y. M. C. A. The Y. W. C. A. received 8.80 per cent, the Knights of Columbus 17.6 per cent, the Jewish Welfare Board 2.05 per cent, Community Service 8.80 per cent, American Library Association 2.05 per cent, and the Salvation Army 2.05 per cent. The original unified budget, which was over-subscribed, was $170,500,000. The directors included Raymond B. Fosdick, John R. Mott, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Frank Vanderlip, Cleveland H. Dodge, and other equally eminent representatives of the united movements.

Alva J. Brasted, until recently chaplain of the Fourth Field Artillery at Camp Stanley, Texas, has been assigned to the Second Division at Camp Travis, Texas, as division chaplain.

C. V. Vickrey, secretary of the Near East Relief, is to visit Armenia to confer with field workers concerning relief for the starving children of that country, and offers to provide fresh information to those desiring it. He may be addressed Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Ave., New York.

Fire was discovered by children attending the Vacation School, at the Olivet Baptist Church (Negro) of Chicago, last Monday, July 17. Before it was located and extinguished, the baptistery floor had been chopped through, the cornice above ripped off, and the large window on the South Park Ave. side broken through to give egress for the smoke. Pastor L. K. Williams says the loss will be several thousand dollars, partly covered by insurance. The great organ was unharmed. Electric wires are presumed to have caused the fire. Services are being held without interruption, and on the Sunday following the fire the pastor preached to a congregation which crowded the building. The edifice was for many years the home of the First Church of Chicago.

Government Sends Dr. Tupper to Turkey

The secretary of labor has addressed the following letter to the church of which Dr. H. A. Tupper is pastor.

To the members of the First Baptist Church, Washington, D. C.
My dear Christian friends:

The commissioner-general of immigration, with my hearty approval, has addressed your pastor, Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, a letter in which he says:

"I want to ask whether it would be feasible for you to make some investigation of the situation in Turkey during the present summer. It is believed that if a careful inquiry could be made by one who, like yourself, is well acquainted with the country and the problems of the Armenians, considerable good might result. Of course, we have to enforce the immigration law, but it is the desire of all concerned that the dictates of humanity be observed so far as may be possible, and if one of your great experience with these people in their country of origin can suggest some means by which this can be accomplished, in the greatest possible degree, I am sure your contribution to the cause would be a valuable one."

I presume, in endorsing these words of the commissioner-general, to express the hope that the First Baptist Church will find it possible to spare Dr. Tupper for at least two months from his great work at the church, and enable him to make this noble contribution to a great work for which he is pre-eminently qualified.

Very cordially yours,

(Signed) James J. Davis,
Secretary of Labor."

Dr. Tupper's response to this urgent call from his government will bring comfort to all who have travelled in spirit over the interminable agony which Armenia and Syria have suffered at the hands of the Turks. His church is to be congratulated in the honor which has come to it.

The Baptist

A Personal Confession of Faith

THE Christian religion is one thing: the Christian life may be quite another thing.

The Christian religion may be concerned with rites, formal services, literature; with doctrines, dogmas, creeds.

The Christian life can be concerned with nothing less than life—spiritual life, which is the gift of the living God, which has its source in Jesus Christ, and of which the Christian soul is conscious, even as normally all sentient living beings are conscious of whatever life they possess.

The foremost exponent of Christian experience is the Apostle Paul, even as he is also the foremost apologist for Christian truth. It is late in the day for critics to demand that we go around Paul to get at Jesus, when it is so obvious that Jesus has come through Paul to get at us.

Paul's unique doctrinal and moral volte face, reversing completely his judgment concerning Jesus: Paul's profound experience of reconciliation and pardon: Paul's thirty years of intimate and conscious fellowship with his living and adored Lord: Paul's spiritual insight into the redemptive significance of the incarnation and death and resurrection of Jesus: Paul's complete satisfaction with his place and privilege in the service of his gracious Redeemer—these elements in his life are data so valuable for a definition of the Christian experience that they can neither be discarded nor discounted.

Paul conceived of and defined his experience in a two-fold way: it involved death and it involved life. His own soul was somehow tremendously enveloped in the tragedy of the cross, and in the dying of Jesus for sin, Paul the sinner also died—yea, was crucified with Christ. He was likewise caught up with the Redeemer in his victory over death, and shared in the resurrection of his triumphant Lord.

Paul's Christian experience, in these essential elements, was typical, and throughout his writings he sets forth death and life—identification with Jesus in his crucifixion and in his resurrection—as the characteristic phases of the experience common to all the members of the body of Christ. In him we died; through him we are made alive unto God.

In this spiritual revolution the risen Lord becomes not only Life-Giver, but actually an Inhabitant of the redeemed soul. The new spiritual life is communicated to the believer through his faith-union with Christ. He is a Christian, not by virtue of rites observed or creeds professed or doctrines believed, important and even imperative though such may be. He is a Christian by virtue of the new life imparted to him and maintained in him by the indwelling Christ.

The crowning utterance of Paul, the passionate avowal of his relation to the Lord Jesus Christ, is that glowing, throbbing rhapsody (Galatians 2:20) which may well be termed his personal confession of faith (we quote from the American Revision, for which rendering the authorities are ample if not overwhelming):

"I have been crucified with Christ;
And it is no longer I that live,
But Christ liveth in me:
And that life which I now live in the flesh
I live in faith, the faith which is in
The Son of God, who loved me,
And gave himself up for me."

If this be a valid testimony to the Christian life, and a true interpretation of it, then our primary concern should be to possess the spiritual life which Christ the Life-Giver imparts to the penitent believer; to enjoy the abiding consciousness of our life in him and of his life in us; to partake of his holiness and to have his mind, and to do his will, as the inevitable sequences of a sharing of the divine nature.

In this conscious and confident possession of life in Christ are to be realized both the peace and the power which are the priceless treasures of true Christianity. The late Bishop of Durham (formerly Principal H. C. G. Moule), one of the saintliest men in the history of the Anglican Church, wrote thus out of a marvelously rich personal experience of the indwelling life of the risen Lord:

"In Christ the man has, in a sense as perfectly practical as it is inscrutable, new life, new power, as the Holy Ghost applies to his inmost being the presence and virtues of his Head. 'In him he lives, by him he moves.' To men innumerable the discovery of this ancient truth, or the fuller apprehension of it, has been indeed like a beginning of new life. They have been long and painfully aware, perhaps, that their strife with evil was a serious failure on the whole, and their deliverance from its power lamentably partial. And they could not always command as they would the emotional energies of gratitude, the warm consciousness of affection. Then it was seen, or seen more fully, that the Scriptures set forth this great mystery, this power fact: our union with our Head, by the Spirit, for life, for victory and deliverance, for dominion over sin, for willing service. And the hands are now lifted up and the knees confirmed, as the man uses the now open secret—Christ in him and he in Christ—for the real walk of life. . . . Union with the slain and risen Christ, in faith, by the Spirit,—here is our inexhaustible secret, for peace with God, for life to God, now and in the eternal day."

We may not overlook the fact that, in this testimony of Paul and this testimony of Handley Moule, we are dealing with the positive affirmations, the exultant confessions, of men who speak of what they know, of what they possess, of what they have been divinely commissioned to bear witness. They are not fumbling with debatable dogmas; they are flaming with a spiritual passion sprung from a wondrous and unforgettable experience of deliverance through Christ and life in Christ. Confession springs out of possession; "It is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me."

Christian (?) America

A DISTINGUISHED Japanese publisher, Mr. Iso Yamagata, visited America recently, and on his return to Japan related to his fellow-countrymen his impressions of our country. According to an account in The Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, he expressed his profound disappointment in the following plain words:

"There is no country in the world so destitute of freedom and morality as America. In a word, America is a land of despotic capitalists whose doctrine is the almighty dollar, and one can escape from any punishment if he only has money. It is my conviction that the American civilization is only material and that we have nothing to learn from America spiritually."

Mr. Yamagata may have his prototype in the Englishman who found plenty of tigers in India, but no Christians. Possibly he failed to look diligently for the tokens of freedom and morality. Certain it is that America has a moral quality and a spiritual heritage which some of Japan's ablest statesmen have coveted for their own nation. Yet it remains true that "America the beautiful" has some very ugly spots.

Economic Law God's Law

THROUGHOUT the year we have read reports and heard discussions touching the political situation in India. Certain papers with a strong bias against Great Britain have doubtless been among those who have drawn upon a very lively imagination. We are glad to hear from Mr. Sam Higginbottom, of Allahabad, India. He writes:

"The political situation now seems easier. We have been surprised at some of the statements in the American papers about conditions there. Many are fine examples of free working imaginations. We have had a very anxious year, much of the time very little was needed to set things off, but God protected India from a blow-up. Mr. Gandhi is a thoroughly good man, a good lawyer. His trial was a remarkable spectacle. He pleaded guilty. He has been used by evil men to further their own ends. Mr. Gandhi is also not up on economic law and like some people and some governments feels that if moral and spiritual law is observed, economic law will take care of itself. I believe the next great lesson the world has to learn is that economic law is as much God's law as moral or spiritual law, and whoever breaks it will suffer for breaking it."

The Loose Wing

YOUNG as we are, THE BAPTIST is not immune to the subtle influence of explicit appreciation. More highly is it valued when it comes from unexpected sources. THE BAPTIST has given its best in intense activity for the promotion of the New World Movement, and so cannot protest against the delicate courtesy of the Illinois Baptist as expressed in a recent editorial:

"THE BAPTIST of Chicago continues to be the organ of the Northern Baptist Convention. It is also the exponent—or at least is so considered—of the loose wing of the convention." We stop quoting at this point, not caring to reprint the criticism which follows of another Baptist paper.

We are gratified, however, to be thus recognized as the exponent of "the loose wing" of Northern Baptists. We never saw a bird get anywhere with its wings tied; and if Northern Baptists are to fly around the world with the everlasting gospel they must have at least one wing loose. We are glad to be a rib in the loose wing.

The Name Above Every Name

THE name given to our Lord by his mother at his birth has been precious and prominent in the devotion and in the worship of his people from that day to our own. Not only during the days of his flesh, but through the apostolic period, in Acts, in Paul's letters and in the Apocalypse, "Jesus" is used in the most significant and emphatic manner. "That in the name of Jesus every knee should bow"; "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you"; "Looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith"—these are but a few of the many passages common alike to our prayers and to our preaching.

The Christian hymns of all ages are inspired by and framed in terms of the believer's debt to Jesus, his faith in Jesus, his love for Jesus: "Jesus, the very thought of thee with sweetness fills my breast"; "O Jesus, when I think of thee"; "Jesus, these eyes have never seen that radiant form of thine"; "Jesus, lover of my soul"; "My Jesus, I love thee"; "Jesus shall reign"—we need quote no more to indicate how essential to devotion and to confession is that precious name, JESUS. To strike that name from our Scriptures, our prayers, our songs, would be cruelly and wantonly to mutilate our Christian experience and to discredit our Christian history.

Murky fogs rise from the battlefields of theological controversy, and religious polemicists are driven in their zeal to fall into wild extremes in the effort to carry their point. This, we hope, is the explanation—for it is the most generous interpretation of the facts—of the astounding statement made in a recent editorial in the Western Recorder:

"The presses are now teeming with religious books about Jesus—relatively few are about the Christ. Beware of the 'Jesus' author and speaker!"

How can a Christian preacher or editor tell Christian people, "Beware of the 'Jesus' author and speaker"? How can a Christian man use with derision that holy name which speaks of Saviourhood and redemption?

The Literature of the Devotional Life

By ALBERT J. DAHLBY

OURS is a village in which nearly every one knows every one else and every housewife does her own shopping with the head of the store himself. Recently one of our good women was noticed examining a cut of veal when she asked the question: "Is this skim-milk veal?" The butcher answered almost impatiently: "I should say not, we use no skim milk calves, these are sucklings; you can't get good veal on skim-milk."

Yet I have seen not a few but many a supposedly advanced Christian feeding his inner life on skim-milk literature composed of newspaper features and effervescent fiction, making a sparkling display for a month or two, only to pass out of print and memory. The fact is, the field of literature has a mass of books for the development of Christian character and the deepening of the Christian life. Naturally we assume the reading of the Bible as the first essential, but for most of us there should remain a sense of need of still other devotional reading. Can one conceive of a progressive banker or merchant reading only his daily financial or market report? Instead such men realize a need for books on topics closely or even only distantly allied to their business. They read history, travel books and fiction of the type that reveals human nature; but they add to these books of economics and business in general. So the Christian needs books dealing with his "business in general" which is growing in the grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

A Personal Testimony

Space forbids an exhaustive study of this topic but may permit a personal testimony concerning a few volumes that have proved helpful to the writer in the order of his acquaintanceship with them in time. Some need merely mention, such as S. D. Gordon's "Quiet Talks" series, Hannah W. Smith's "Christian Secret of a Happy Life," the books and booklets of James H. McConkey (all of which may be had for the asking of the Silver Publishing Company in Pittsburgh), and Andrew Murray's "With Christ in the School of Prayer." John MacNeil, the evangelist of Australia, wrote a valuable book on "The Spirit-Filled Life." Then there are the biographies of spirit-filled men and women which every Christian should own and learn to love. Among these are "Memoirs of David Brainerd" with its self-revelation of a life of prayer. God has mightily used that book and not more so than when it fired the soul of Henry Martyn, who gave his life for Christ in India, whose "Memoirs" should be read in turn. The longer life of Adoniram Judson by Edward Judson, the life of "Captain Bickel of the Inland Sea," and the four volumes of "Wesley's Journal" will spur the missionary zeal of almost every reader. This list should be increased when once a taste for such biographies has been created.

But there are hosts of older writings from all Christendom that lead us, it may be, through labyrinthine passages but always bring us into the deeper mysteries of the spirit-filled life. Some of the more familiar examples are the "Confessions of St. Augustine"; "The Imitation of Christ," by Thomas A' Kempis; "The Practice of the Presence of God," by Brother Lawrence and the "Life of Saint Theresa Written by Herself," all from the fold of the Roman church but all with a message of the blackness of sin, the value of confession and the reality of God.

As in the realm of hymn writing, so in the field of devotional literature we lose sight of all creedal lines and discover that the aspirations of the soul of ritualist and non-ritualist differ little in their elemental nature however much the individuals differ in forms of worship. So from the land of the icon we have "My Life in Christ," by "Father John" Sergieff, with a wealth of soul-deepening suggestions and testimonies. And the Church of England has given us its "Prayer Book" which has a thousand inspirational thoughts in its ritual material. Then England has given us Baxter, the Puritan, whose "Saints' Everlasting Rest" has won its thousands from sin to sainthood. In the same breath we would recall a book, now forgotten by the many but once read with the Bible, Jeremy Taylor's "Holy Living and Dying." True these books are dry but if sufficiently chewed will prove exceptionally sweet as dry morsels are sweet after much chewing.

But no student of devotional literature should fail to acquaint himself with Alexander Whyte of Scotland, for Whyte can lead one into the strangest fields of all and yet keep one from finding himself completely lost. Let him introduce you for example to the German mystic, Jacob Boehme, in his small book "Behmen, an Appreciation," and you too may find yourself investing in an "Everyman" edition of this mystic's writings. Or let him acquaint you with our own Puritan preacher, Thomas Shephard, contemporary and co-founder with John Harvard of Harvard University.

In closing I would name a Baptist, three of whose books should grace our shelves and feed our hearts, John Bunyan. I was recently surprised when a Baptist graduate of a Methodist University whose major topic was English literature asked me whether I knew where she could borrow "Pilgrim's Progress," since she had never read it and it was a reading requirement for a certain high school in which she was to teach. Most of us would do well to re-read "Pilgrim's Progress" and add to it two other volumes, "Grace Abounding" and "The Holy War Made by Shaddai upon Diabolus." The foregoing are but a taste which should create an appetite which, being satisfied, will feed the soul and help us in the growth of our spiritual man.

The words of Alexander Whyte come often to mind: "Ply your books, and Satan and all his works will flee from your house."

The Patient Sympathy of Jesus

By O. P. EACHES

IT is stated in Hebrews 5:2 that one essential qualification for the high priest must be the ability to bear gently with the ignorant and the erring. He must therefore be a man broad-minded, righteous in character, living a godly life but conscious of weakness and infirmity. An angel or archangel could not be an efficient high priest for he would not know the meaning of a human life. A man perfect in character alone, inexorably just in his actions and decisions would not be a good high priest. There would be no place for sympathy, for a wise and tender consideration of each case by itself. In a court room nothing will practically do more injustice than a faultily faultlessly regular consideration for justice alone without a touch of mercy and a respect to all the circumstances of the case. In the moral universe, the great High Priest, Jesus, is fitted to stand before God for men because he was tempted as men are. He knows, therefore, how to bear gently with them because he knew human life in all its ranges. In John 5:27 we are taught that the judgment of the world is in the hands of Christ because he is a man. He understands God because divine. He understands men because he was a man. We have an illustration of Jesus bearing gently with the weak and erring in his treatment of the three sleeping disciples. He took them with him to be his supporters in bearing his load of sorrow in the garden. He showed them his sense of disappointment, their loss of opportunity in not helping him, but he did not throw them into the human scrap heap. He told them that they meant right, that it was not their purpose to desert him, but that they fell below their real selves through physical weakness. Justice, mercy, sympathy for men struggling to do right but falling short through weakness: all these qualities are manifest in his words. In our dealings with others this spirit of bearing gently with people who fall, must be cultivated. Harsh condemnation of young people who take a wrong step may be a provocation to take other wrong steps. A sympathetic word may prevent a person from leaping from the Bridge of Sighs. Hood wrote:

"Oh, it is pitiful
Near a whole city full
Help there was none."

In that beautiful work "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," Lochlan Campbell was a good man, strictest and sternest of the elders of the church. He had an erring daughter, and he over-emphasized the sense of justice in striking her name from the family Bible. He did not bear gently with the erring child. There is something better for us, in our dealings with others than being simply just. We must be just and at the same time sympathetic, generous and considerate. The high-priestly spirit may bear gently with those who are morally ignorant and erring, but also with those who are intellectually ignorant and out of the way. No man had more clear and fixed beliefs than Paul. His words in Gal. 1:8 show his attitude toward those who denied the fundamentals of the Gospel. But he knew how to deal tenderly with those who had not come up to his standards. In Phil.

The Dignity of Democracy

The whole is greater than any of its parts, and the decisions of democracy are the decisions of the whole. Economy and progress as proposed by the Board of Promotion commendable. Fairness and justice urged in Baptist journalism. Powerful plea for enlarged giving to attain our goal.

By J. B. RANGER

(The following address was delivered as the president's address at the Maine Convention at Saco, June 28, and the convention requested its publication.)

THE democracy of our denomination encourages thought, study and concern in its affairs, and the kingdom of God, for which kingdom it exists. We do well to readily see that our denomination is only a means to an end, and that end is the bringing of the kingdom of God to earth; by so doing we will magnify and glorify our God; and the better and the more wisely we conduct the affairs of the church and the denomination, the more rapidly we will hasten the coming of that kingdom to earth. Hence we may well spend time to pray, to think and also exercise great effort in action, for there is no greater mission for man than that of glorifying God by bringing his will to pass in all the earth.

Now the advantage that a democracy has over the autocracy is that the decisions and conclusions of the one are the decisions and conclusions of the whole or the many, that they are the abstract and extract of the mass, and "the whole is greater than any of its parts;" whereas the decisions and conclusions of the autocracy are the products only of the few, and all too often a selfish and privileged class or few. Hence the dignity of democracy. May it always prevail both in the affairs of church and state. First,—that we catch the spirit and action of our national convention and especially its promotion board relative to economy and progress.

"We Must Go On"

Of course it is too late to consider wartime extravagance; some of that so-called extravagance was more a necessity than we may think. In my judgment it will be a great day for all of the world when we come to have a real interchurch, a real fellowship and cooperation of all of the Protestant churches, to aid in the great affairs of all the world. To be sure that has not as yet been realized, and the attempt was costly, yet I am sure that we can all see the ideal that was in the minds of its promoters; but at present, with the great indebtedness of our national society, with the deficit of our state convention and with the present depression of business, we do well to employ only such officials as are really needed. That there be a very hearty and efficient cooperation between all of them, secretaries, missionaries and so forth, that the work may be carried on most successfully. The Board of Promotion of our national society made great efforts along these lines, viz., curtailing, where possible and as much as possible. We should also seek diligently to find the best methods and systems for carrying on our work, with as little expense as possible, and yet attempting to make the greatest progress we can.

The second thing I would suggest, is the increasing of our giving the coming year, and coming as near as possible to the goal that has been set before us. There are things that must be done, we must go on with our work; louder and still louder comes the call from all quarters of the earth to come and help; never has there been such opportunity, and never has there been such a reception and such results. It looks as though it would grow to be more and more so. Let us go back to our churches to do that greater work. While all of this is before us we must remember that our denomination is greatly in debt. Dr. Anderson, of Newton, arose in one of the meetings of the Promotion Board and said, "I am about to make a statement and to ask a question. My statement is, we are greatly in debt (and he spoke alarmingly); my question is, how shall we get out of debt?" Now there are two ways open to us to deal with this state of affairs—we can say that our leaders have not dealt wisely, and hence we will refuse to help pay these bills, and thereby become indifferent to the situation; it will be putting our hand to the plow and turning back. But, listen, we can say that it is OUR business, these leaders are our leaders. To be sure they may have made mistakes, but we will stand by, our honor is at stake, and if, when the bills are all paid, we come to feel that others can do the work better, elect them, but by all means let us put our shoulders to the wheel. There may be a feeling that we are coming a little too near "the rule of a few." If this be true, let us correct it, that is a part of our business and we can well attend to it and must, but by all means let us stand by and pull our beloved denomination out of the debt; let us continue to increase our mission work in all of the earth and at the same time correct all of our mistakes. We cannot shrink and become indifferent. It will not do. Let us quit ourselves like men and be strong, as much so in the day of debt and adversity as in the times of prosperity. As a Christian, as a man, as a minister, as a church member and a part of a great denomination, I intend to do so, and I would urge on others the same. Go on, increase our work, pay our bills, correct our mistakes. Go on.

"The Baptist" Belongs to Us All

The next thing I would suggest, is a conscientious and dignified attitude and action toward the great issues of the day that are now in our denomination. I am a democrat of the democrats, and being such, I was not altogether displeased when we launched a denominational paper, expecting, and having a right to expect, that it would be the organ of our denomination. That organ, in my judgment has leaned shamefully to one side. It is not a denominational organ, but ridiculously a partisan organ, as the recent sermon of Dr. Fosdick will indicate. Some one at the national convention said, "they did not mind being spanked but they disliked to pay the bills." If you were to dispense with all of the preachers and laymen who do not agree with Dr. Fosdick, you would have an awful gap in both our national and our state conventions. Such propaganda is shamefully absurd, such partisan conduct, unbearable, we must not countenance it. Like Dr. Anderson, shall we not inquire how to deal with it? Personally, I correspond with the editor; I tell him how I feel, I would gladly vote for a resolution of protest in my church, in my association, and I hope such a resolution will be presented at this convention; if it is to remain ours let us correct it in a dignified way. I am not certain that our denomination is wise in spending so much of its hard-earned money to continue it, but it has voted to do so at least for one more year, and now let us see to it that fairness and justice prevail. It is ours, it does not belong to any few or faction, let us attend well to it.

Another great issue that confronts us, is our schools and their teaching. At the November, 1921, meeting of The Board of Promotion held in Indianapolis, after a long and heated debate, it was voted to grant the right to designate our gifts and at the same time fulfil our obligations: This only partly meets the need. The shame and serious thing of all is that there exists that in our teaching which we greatly fear, and experience proves that we have a right to fear. We need our schools, we must have them; if they are ours why not control them? Why not seriously and prayerfully watch over them? Why not? We can, we must; I am

A Watchword for Our Churches

DEEPER life in Christ is the remedy for all our ecclesiastical or theological ills. Religion goes deeper than theology. Toplady, a Calvinist, wrote "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me," while Charles Wesley, an Arminian, wrote, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and yet we sing them both in the same meeting, and think not of the theology of their authors, but of the glory and sufficiency of the Christ in whom they both trusted. How it seems to our readers we cannot say, but we are sure that many of them feel as we do, that no superficial type of Christianity, such as we see manifested all about us, by church members, can meet the needs of the human soul or the call of a needy world. The watchword in all our local churches should be "Christ in us the hope of glory," and the only hope, too, of fulfilling our mission as a religious movement. We wonder if many who profess loyal allegiance to the things for which we stand do not forget, or have failed to see, that such lofty aims and ideals as we profess, demand a faith which sees him who is invisible, lifts the life out of narrow sectarian ruts, widens the horizon of Christian fellowship, and seeks to exemplify that for which we plead.

—J. H. Garrison, in Christian-Evangelist.

The New World Movement

Our motto for 1922-1923: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

(The following paragraphs are selected from the reports presented to the North-east Baptist Convention at Indianapolis.)

Foreign Evangelism

IN view of this world situation, it is of peculiar significance that the entire year, so characterized by unsettled conditions as well as a gradual return to normalcy, should have witnessed an unprecedented advance in evangelism. The writer of this section does not recall a previous year in which missionary letters have revealed so many references to evangelistic successes. From all fields have come reports of baptisms, of inquirers, of candidates on waiting-lists, of an increasingly friendly attitude to the gospel, and of new and larger evangelistic opportunities. As this is being written, complete statistical reports are not yet available, but it is certain that the year will prove to have been a record year in evangelism. Already more than 12,000 baptisms have been reported. In Africa an evangelistic ingathering has served to recall to an older generation of Baptists the historic Pentecost on the Congo thirty-five years ago.

Missionaries in Assam have written of unusually large accessions of church membership, due to the emphasis on evangelism and the consecrated service of many native preachers. Tura reported 634 baptisms in the Garo Hills. Five of the nineteen mission schools already have reported 300 baptisms this year, and the total will undoubtedly be much larger than last year. Impur reports for the Naga Hills 600 baptisms and from Golaghat comes the report of 250 baptisms. In South India missionaries report a more favorable response on the part of the higher castes, among whom evangelism has been exceedingly difficult. A veteran missionary in South India writes that in some respects India never seems to have been so wide open to the gospel as today. He finds a very ready sale for Bible portions and religious books in places where a few years ago there was no demand for them. Street preaching, owing to various causes, has had to be discontinued temporarily, but personal work with individuals and groups has been possible; and people have not hesitated to come in large numbers to meetings held in schoolhouses, halls, and homes, to hear the message of Christ. Rev. Wheeler Boggess in South India has devoted all his time to general evangelistic work, touring the entire field, holding special evangelistic services at the various stations with remarkable success. One of the most encouraging reports came by cablegram from the new field north of Kengtung, Burma, across the Chinese border, the opening of which was referred to in the report of last year. It seems that since the first of January, 1922, more than 2,500 converts have already been baptized, thus suggesting a remarkable ingathering. From many countries of Europe have come stories of revivals and of denominational progress, notwithstanding the hardship and suffering of recent years. . . . Other phases of evangelistic progress are seen in the results of meetings conducted by bands of preachers, of evangelistic touring parties, and of the appointment of special evangelistic workers on several fields. The Burma Mission

The Changeless Gospel

THE gospel of Jesus Christ is all-sufficient for the individual, the nation and the world. The gospel cannot be changed, and it cannot be given up without darkening the one and only hope of the world."—For. Secy. J. C. Robbins, in Indianapolis Address.

reports 4,783 baptisms during the year, making a total church membership of 73,653. Rev. W. F. Thomas, former president of the Karen Theological Seminary, is now devoting his entire time as the general evangelistic missionary for Burma. Letters from the fields in the Far East also indicate unusual evangelistic achievements. Large accessions to membership occurred at Suifu, among them being several men of influence in the community, such as the former postmaster, the principal of schools, and men prominent in business affairs. A new outstation opened in South China less than a year ago had thirty inquirers, of whom thirteen were baptized. On his arrival in Japan, Secretary James H. Franklin was informed of similar achievements. At a series of meetings in Tokyo forty-nine professed conversion, and at the Shiba church thirty were baptized, while twenty others are still awaiting the ordinance. Twelve students at Waseda University are awaiting baptism. Missionaries in Japan have expressed the opinion that the past year will prove to have been the best year in the history of Japan in evangelistic achievements. The year has therefore witnessed a steady going forward of the great work begun by Adoniram Judson and continued by the long line of noble successors, who have devoted themselves to this task.—Foreign Mission Soc. Report.

The Missionary Training School

FOUNDERS' Day was celebrated February 2, at the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago, recognizing the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the school and the forty-fifth anniversary of the society.

For a year the society has contemplated the removal of the Training School from its present location and the use of the building it now occupies for a training school for Christian workers for Negro men and women, the representatives of the Negroes in the North, the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Woman's Society cooperating in this plan. Frequent conferences have been held and a board of twenty-seven organized to develop the plans for opening this school in September. The three groups are responsible for financing the purchase of the building and the conduct of the school.

The training school committee has been seeking to purchase a suitable building for the present school, but the difficulties have proved far-reaching, because of building restrictions governing the use of buildings for school purposes. It has now been determined to rent temporary quarters, and to build a new building as soon as adjustments can be made. The splendid work of the school will be carried on without interruption, and the temporary inconvenience will be more than compensated for by the prospect of a new and well adapted building to meet the requirements of the school.—Woman's Home Miss. Report.

Christian Centers

THE census has disclosed the fact that the major part of our population are residents of cities. An increasingly important phase of the society's activity is the promotion of our denominational work in these growing urban communities, especially in the smaller cities.

The clearly defined and deliberate policy of the two national Home Mission Societies, to develop and promote community-wide evangelization through Christian centers, marks an important forward step which has demonstrated its effectiveness and justified amply the outlay of denominational funds.

An event of more than ordinary importance, therefore, was the calling of a conference of administrators and representatives of the Christian centers east of Kansas City, at Buffalo, last February. The conference defined the objective of the Christian centers as follows:

"The purpose of the Christian center is so to interpret the Gospel by teaching and service as to make for Jesus Christ, a commanding place in the life of the individual, the family and the community. In other words, the regeneration of every life and all of life." In defining the principles which should control in shaping up the program the conference pointed out that we should "minister to human needs as Christ would have us do," that "activities have value as they promote vital personal contacts with Christian workers," that "bad habits, customs and conditions, must be replaced by good ones"; that "service should be on the basis of the family as the unit," and that workers should seek to bring all converts into church membership upon confession of faith," and finally, that a proper proportion or balance should be maintained "between recreational, educational, and religious expressions, with an unmistakable emphasis upon the religious," and "each group should be followed through until every individual is under direct Christian teaching and influence."

There are twenty-four houses in operation (some housed in rented property) representing a value on the property owned by the denomination of $378,950. There are twelve houses which are being projected, with plans under way which will represent another $519,000 and two others not quite so far along but in the survey askings which bring the total investment up to approximately a million dollars, and this number does not include a number of church buildings in congested neighborhoods where the program is practically identical with that of the distinctive Christian centers.

Ninety paid workers are under appointment and the annual operating expense is approximately $100,000 for all cooperating boards, national and local. A conservative estimate of the attendance upon these houses per month for the past years, is safely between seventy-five and 100,000.

Three of the centers are operated in Negro communities and are proving a great blessing. They are cordially disliked by the vicious element, which is a glowing tribute to their efficiency.—C. A. Brooks in Home Miss. Report.

Christian Americanization

IS it Christian to establish mission Sunday schools, to organize groups of foreign children into sewing schools, where they listen to Bible stories? "One Greek and one Mexican have joined the church"; "one Mexican woman baptized"; "twenty-five at the mission have indicated a desire to be Christians"; "foreign neighbors attending church with their new found friends"; "frequent requests for Bibles"—these are the reports which prove that this friendly contact made by earnest Christian women, is bearing fruit for the Master.

For the third time the Christian Americanization Department is looking back over a year of service rendered, trying as far as human eyes can see, to measure results, trusting to God. "Who giveth the increase."

When the work was started there were critics who said, "Our Baptist women are too busy to give time to this kind of work." The hundreds of women who have been carrying on this past year have proven that even our busiest women are not too busy to be neighborly. Letters received from many places and many women enlisted in this work, all breathe the same spirit of joy which comes in rendering service "in his name."

"But volunteers are not dependable," social workers have said; "and if they were, they can't go into the foreign homes without making trouble." After three years of cooperation with the Juvenile Court in Chicago, this testimony has come from one of their workers:

"I want to express my great appreciation of the work of your volunteers among some of my foreign women; they have done so many little extra things for them, such as taking them to the parks, etc. I consider the service rendered by these American women of very great value to me in my work."

New requests for help, received constantly, prove their respect for volunteer service.—ALICE W. S. BRIMSON, in W. H. M. Report.

Our Baptist Schools

THE Christian forces in America are now squarely facing a definite issue. We have long professed our belief that besides the system of state education there must be a system of Christian education sufficiently strong to make a compelling impression upon the state system. That system is now developing so rapidly that unless the Christian system is greatly strengthened it cannot possibly exert an influence sufficiently strong to affect the moral and religious standards of the state schools. Nothing that we have achieved in the past is sufficient to meet the present demands. Unless we greatly strengthen our Christian schools we shall fail to meet the opportunity and the demand of this hour. The opportunity is ours, but we must grasp it if we would possess it.

None of our schools is perfect. They all have their defects. But this is no time to quibble over mint, anise or cummin. This is the time to rally to the support of our schools and make them what we wish them to be. If we spend too much of our time finding fault and criticising we shall alienate our schools from us and we shall alienate those who ought to be their staunch and generous supporters. Any school ought to welcome the most intimate investigation and any amount of constructive suggestion, but there is serious danger that too much general and indefinite faultfinding will cost us heavily in the not distant future. We call upon our constituency for a loyal, sympathetic and generous support of our Baptist schools. They have an opportunity now which they never had before to effect a determining influence upon our great American system of education. But to grasp this opportunity they must have the loyal support of those who believe in Christian education.—Board of Educ. Report.

"For Women, Too"

IN Southern California the Children's World Crusade organizations were given a quota of $500 on the original three-year program and have raised $1,500 this first year.

Nebraska World Wide Guild girls are showing a growing interest in the intensive study class. They are stressing attendance at the summer assembly when special attention will be given this year to the development of guild leadership.

There have been some outstanding events during the year that have brought

Riding For a Fall

THE Virginia Religious Herald of June 29 in an editorial under the above title refers to conditions, tendencies and tribulations which indicate that Northern and Southern Baptists have very much in common and deserve each other's sympathy. The editorial in full follows:

"Aren't we developing a singular situation with respect to the Southern Baptist Convention and its scope of influence and quasi-authority? In the conduct of the 75,000,000 campaign—even of that half of it which deals directly and exclusively with interests and institutions owned and controlled by the convention itself—the state committees or conventions have in a number of cases intervened and have even diverted or borrowed, as they euphemistically describe it, money given to convention interests and have used it for state institutions, fixing their own terms for the loan.

"At the same time, while the convention's control of its own money is denied, certain active brethren are persistently seeking to have the convention assume a sort of authority to deal with various questions of religious doctrine over which this body has no shadow of jurisdiction and not content with this, actually seek to force the convention by continued popular agitation and appeal to popular ignorance and prejudice to make a semi-authoritative deliverance on obscure and difficult scientific theories.

"If these policies are carried out the present generation will see the end of the Southern Baptist Convention."

a special portion of gratification. Five of the Jubilee buildings at Ninpo, Swatow, Mandalay and Rangoon are now in process of erection and will probably be completed within the next few months.

In India Madras College continues to bear away honors, but, best of all, the graduates are carrying into their work as they go back to the mission fields who sent them, the marvelous message of evangelism which alone can save India. In addition to Miss Olive Sarber, who has been at the head of the philosophy department, we now have another fine Baptist representative, Miss Eleanor Mason, a Mt. Holyoke graduate, and Wellesley M.A., who is at the head of the science department. Miss Mason is a daughter of Dr. Mason, of Assam.

An extension visitor in California reports $500 given to the New World Movement by one of her extension members. The visitor writes:

"She is a lady almost eighty-two years old and has been very ill this winter, which has used up all her small income; but she is going to take this money from the bank to pay the pledge due the New World Movement before the first of May. She has read every bit of the literature and that has done much to strengthen her interest. She is very deaf; but has read all the books in our district reading contest since it started and reads Missions as soon as it comes."

The reports as to White Cross shipments (not including European relief) that have reached us from the districts tell wonderful stories:

Supplies have been sent by 1,065 churches.

The value of these shipments is estimated $23,177.17.

The hospital garments number 2,711.

The hospital sheets, pillow-cases, towels, etc., number 6,064.

The bandages and surgical dressings number 88,588.

But these figures do not begin to tell the whole story, for nearly every district White Cross leader says that her "report does not cover one-half what was sent, as societies sent boxes of all sizes not reporting articles or value."

We have just received the invitation of the first graduating class of Vellore Medical School, India. Think what it means! Instead of one lonely physician sailing away from these shores, at very great expense and with real risk we are to send out each year from this Christian medical school for women a fine group of trained physicians who are to minister in the name of the Great Physician to those who have never known any medical aid and have never even known that there is a Saviour for women.

We are not puffed up by the fact that it was one of our girls from this new medical school who carried away the honors from six medical schools for men in her examination in anatomy, which led the Indian government to present her a gold medal.

Truly, the motto of the first woman's club in India is being realized. Over the door of the little club room in Bombay they placed these words:

"The world was made for women, too."

The Saviour of women calls for our aid to provide these colleges with buildings. The Laura Spellman Rockefeller Memorial Fund will give 50 cents for every dollar we contribute before January 1, 1923. Baptists have not yet raised their quota. If you cannot give money service will be as helpful.—Woman's Foreign Soc. Report.

The Mount Everest exploration party has abandoned its attempt to reach the top of that imperial peak of the Himalayas, according to cablegrams from Calcutta dated June 24. During 1921 the party, which was sent out by the Royal Geographical Society and was commanded by Col. C. K. Howard-Bury, devoted its time to preliminary explorations and surveys to determine the most feasible route to the top, 29,141 ft. above sea level. During May and June of this year three desperate attempts were made by the advanced parties to reach the goal, but their utmost effort up precipitous cliffs and through treacherous snow brought them nearly to the 29,000 mark. There are rumors that the enterprise was too readily abandoned and that a few days of waiting for changes of weather would have crowned the expedition with complete victory. Even so, the party broke all records for altitude in mountain climbing.

The Panama Canal should be converted into a sea-level water way, says Philippe Buena Varilla, a Spanish-American diplomat prominent in the negotiations for the Panama Zone. His reasons for the change are three: The danger of a failure in the existing water supply for the locks; the danger of the destruction of the canal by natural forces or by evil design; and the demands of developing commerce for a larger and unobstructed passage. He claims that the currents in a sea-level canal would be no swifter than those in the Suez Canal.

The Jordan river, which until now has rolled on its precipitous way unhindered save by the intervening hand of Israel's God when his people entered the Land of Promise, is to be harnessed and made to yield light and power for the whole of Palestine. Loyalty

THE supreme need of the hour, throughout the entire world, is a new evangel of love and power. Doctrinal controversy defeats its own ends. That which embitters men and divides them into contending parties or sects can never hasten the coming of Christ's kingdom. Truth is not bolstered by argument, but by beautiful lives. When nations are endeavoring to exterminate war, it would be a sad spectacle for the followers of the divine Master to inaugurate one, even though the conflict was one of intellect, tongue, and spirit, rather than of rifle and sword. To divide Protestantism now into two rival or contending camps would be a calamity to Christianity and to the kingdom of God in the earth that could not be remedied for centuries. In the name of Christ it must not be.

Nothing is more divine than loyalty to truth; but the loyalty must prove its loyalty, not by antagonism and strife, but by a mighty assurance, a triumphant serenity, an invincible patience, a courageous faith, an undaunted hope, a resistless and all-conquering love.

Now that the nations have laid aside their weapons of warfare, let not the church convert the world into a battleground of seething strife.

Our sympathies are with those who confide in the truth of the New Testament evangel, and who believe that the great historic doctrines of the church are not subject to displacement by the naturalism or rationalism of an unspiritual age; yet we are profoundly convinced that any attempt to encroach upon men's freedom of thought, or to safeguard truth by legislation, or to build doctrinal walls within which some men would confine other men, is doomed to ignominious failure.

If the kingdom of God cannot be advanced and made secure by the proclamation of an ardent, intelligent, winsome, Christlike evangel, it cannot be advanced in any other way. The highway to the intellect is through the heart. To demonstrate the saving power of love is to convince and convert the mind. Let a new tidal wave of spiritual life sweep over the church and it will soon overflow its boundaries and sweep over the non-Christian world. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

—Western Christian Advocate.

sure that we will. In the meantime there are schools, some of which are included in the New World Movement funds, that are standing by for God's book, for his Son, etc. You can turn your gifts toward them, it will be just and right and in the meantime let us do all we can to bring into line with God's word the teachings in our schools. This is a serious issue. It must be met aright in the spirit of Jesus.

Members of the convention, our tasks are many and great, our times are serious, may we stand and having done all to stand. I am sure that God's word is going to prevail as an inspired word. Jesus is going forth as God's only Son, deity indeed, his atoning blood will be necessary and sufficient. Our regeneration through him and his blood will be that which will allow an entrance into our churches, that he arose from the dead, appeared to his disciples in bodily form, and thereby robs the grave of its terror, by these truths we are going forth conquering and to conquer.

Religious Education

A Rainy Day of Cheer

BY ADAH H. BOYCE

Every one rejoiced at the welcome rain which the thirsting earth was eagerly absorbing, but it seemed an inopportune morning to visit the daily vacation Bible school at Aiken Institute, as this same downpour might keep children in their homes. But not so—nothing dampens the ardor of these little ones who throng into the school. There they were, small ones and tall ones, Greek, Italian, Jew, Armenian and a score of other nationalities. Every child was in his place, every eye fastened on the leaders, as the strains of "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts" called them to attention. They were ready for the period of song and praise.

If one could record the flash of the eye, the glowing smile, and the tense body, expressive of bounding joy and life, an adequate picture could be given. But it just actually be seen to be understood. Here they are grouped, children of various creeds and meager discipline, yet still earning the same hymns of praise, joining in the same psalm of thanksgiving and listening to the wonderful teaching of the gospel of John. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God," the blending voices recited, and the interest deepened as they added the story of Jesus walking on the sea, to their list of miracles. One smiled, watching Tony, the Italian, responsive to the teaching of the new order.

"I can do something for Jesus. Something for him each day." He threw back his head, pouring forth flood of music, and you decide that he will do something for Jesus. In that hour of devotion, of exercise and of song, these children are given everything needed for the development of body and spirit. Good-natured competition is encouraged in the missionary offerings, and as the boys on this morning the triumphant shout early raised the roof. Such a crowd of children could be managed only by the best perfect system, and a firm hand kept them happy and joyous without a thought of their minds of rebellion at regulations. Indeed, so tactfully are rules and regulations imposed that they are not aware of them. Even the most ardent kept in the line as they marched out in order for the hour of industrial work.

Here the genius of the place is manifested in a marked degree. It is no small task for two men to attend 150 boys in their manual work, but each boy knows his place and is so absorbed in his task that there is no time for quarreling. The boy or more girls dressing dolls were shining shoes or caps or jackets so eagerly that their hands were all a-tremble. Other groups were making blouses, dresses or aprons, and Mary, fourteen years old, held up the finished gingham dress, smiling with justifiable pride. Little heads bent over the sewing, the girl instructors passed from child to child, giving directions in the work, all with such a happy spirit, that gloom was banished though the clouds hung low without.

Who can measure the good done, the value of the lessons taught, the right habits inculcated, the impressions lodged in the hearts of these children from this congested section of Chicago? From the vacation school they pass into the Sunday school, they enter the Tuesday or Friday evening classes, they carry the message to the parents in the home, and the gospel spreads. Is there need of more knowledge of God and his love? Walk up and down the streets, go into some of the places called homes, look into the longing eyes of the mothers and answer the question. Then go back to your own church and sound forth the call for funds, for volunteers, and for prayer.

International Sunday School Lesson for August 13

ESTHER SAVES HER PEOPLE

Lesson: The Book of Esther. Golden Text: Psalm 34:17.

Setting

The temple of Zerubbabel was completed in 515 B.C. during the reign of Darius, king of Persia. Xerxes, son of Darius, ascended the throne thirty years later and ruled for two decades over the provinces from India to Ethiopia. His invasion of Greece has fixed his name in history. He is probably the King Ahasuerus of the book of Esther. The book takes its name from the principal character and no clue to the writer is given. It is a historical book and patriotism is more in evidence than religion. The scene is laid in Shushan, one of the capitals of Persia.

Lesson

The book of Esther is a drama fascinatingly told. The five leading characters are Ahasuerus, king; Vashti, deposed queen; Mordecai, statesman; Esther, a beautiful orphan Jewess from one of the provinces; and Haman, political trickster. Vashti is deposed because she refused to appear at a drunken feast at the command of the king, and Ahasuerus seeks a new queen. Esther finds favor in his sight. Mordecai, Esther's cousin, informs Esther of a plot against the king which she communicates to Ahasuerus. Haman is made chief of the princes and because Mordecai refuses to bow down to him, Haman induces the king to sign a decree ordering the killing of all Jews in the realm. Upon learning of this decree, Mordecai finds means of communicating with Esther and asks her to intercede for the Jews. Her reply is a reminder of the law that whoever enters the king's court unsummoned is put to death unless the king extends his royal scepter. Moreover she is not in the king's favor as it is thirty days since she has been summoned into his presence. Mordecai's reply was that, though she might fear the result of going into the king's presence unsummoned, yet if she did not go it meant certain death to herself and to all of her father's house, and "who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this," he concludes. Esther bids Mordecai gather all the Jews for a three-day fast. She and her maidens will likewise fast, then she will go to the king. "If I perish, I perish," she says. But the king is pleased with her and promises to grant her wish even to half of his kingdom. Haman is forced to do honor to Mordecai and when Esther reveals to the king Haman's plot, the trickster is hanged on the gallows he has had prepared for Mordecai. The Jews are authorized to resist the enemy when the order for their execution is put into effect. In this they come out victorious, killing 75,000 of the enemy.

Leading Thoughts

1. The man who forgets self when great personal tasks are to be done is the man who lives. 2. "Who knoweth but thou art come to the kingdom for some such time as this?" 3. The world everywhere needs Esthers who will take up their mission with the sacrificial, "If I perish, I perish."

Vacation Activities

By EDITH L. PLACE

The vacation school of First Church, Cambridge, Ohio, opened Monday morning, June 26, with an attendance of fifty-one. At the close of the first week on Friday we had an enrolment of 100, forty boys and sixty girls. I am superintending the school and have eight volunteer helpers. Several of our intermediates are proving efficient helpers. The children in the kindergarten are enjoying the regular kindergarten work as we have no such work in connection with the public school.

The boys have made kites and are now busy with wood work. The girls are sewing, doing raffia work and making baskets. We have a picnic each Friday for some department.

We have also conducted a week-day school of religious education during the past year, the children being sent to us from the public schools for an hour a week. We had 115 children who did fine work, and we expect to continue the same plan this next school year. We are glad to be among the first in the state and even the country to see the value of this work.

In Spite of the Excitable Ink-Bottle

(A story to read to the children, young or grown-up!)

"AS a matter of fact," sighed Grandfather Chang, "as I recall, it must have been a very ordinary ink-bottle, but you must remember that this White Stranger was the only foreigner any of us had ever seen, and we were all desperately afraid he had come to bewitch us, so I had reasons of my own for saying positively that the black water inside that ink-bottle was enchanted by the most mysterious kind of magic."

"Tell us all about it once more," begged a chorus of little Changs, "and do begin right at the very beginning, Venerable One."

Grandfather Chang stroked his chin and smiled. "I've told it so often to you," he said, "surely I can skip over the first weeks after the White Stranger came to town, for I know you remember how mothers hid their babies for fear he would bewitch them and how big red placards had been put up in the streets warning people against all foreigners, because they had magic power to make themselves invisible and slip in and out of closed doors, poisoning rice in rice bowls, stupefying little children, and taking out their nice black eyes to stew up into medicine."

Every one giggled. It did seem so perfectly absurd that anyone could ever have thought such ridiculous things about missionaries, especially now when everybody knew how they spent every minute of every day being helpful and loving and kind. But, of course, it all happened way back in the long ago days when Grandfather Chang was only a small boy.

"Well," he continued, "then came the small-pox epidemic and a plague when every single member of my family died but stupid me, and because I was so lame nobody wanted me around. One day the White Stranger saw a neighbor cruelly kicking me outside his gate, so he crossed the street, picked me out of the mud and carried me to his own house. I could see that from that time on I was expected to belong to him, and it was a horrible thought. I expected any minute to be stupified and cooked up into soup or medicine. Every time he came near me I used to tremble. Yet he was very gentle; only, you see, he could not talk Chinese, so I never knew what he was trying to say to me. Hour after hour he would tag me around that little house and get me to say Chinese words to him. For instance, he would point at a chair, and I would say the word for chair in Chinese. Then he would point at his table, at his bed, at his books, at his food, at his clothes. It was very slow work, for everything that I said he would write down on paper."

"That's where the excitable ink-bottle comes in, isn't it?" the little Changs asked eagerly.

Grandfather Chang nodded his head. "Exactly, for as soon as he learned a new word he would dip his pen into that bottle and write, write, write. But I couldn't read a single word of it, of course, so I stupidly believed the neighbor who told me that the white man was daily stealing away my brains and spreading them out on paper to dry. Then he would chew them up, and all my brains would then fly up into his own head! I didn't like it, at all. So one day when he was away I limped into the room, and stuck the pen in the ink-bottle and began scratching every one of the words he had stolen from my brain—zig-zag, criss-cross, roly-poly, oh, what markings and scratchings I made! Then I put the pen down and hobbled away to gather firewood for the evening meal, satisfied that I had spoiled every plan he had. And I shall never forget, my dears, that that was the very evening he finished making my crutches. He had whittled every inch of them himself from pieces of wood, until they were just the right length to tuck comfortably under my arms. All for me, his clumsy lame little servant boy! Well, he showed me how to use them so that I could save my sore foot, and then—then he simply rushed indoors to his desk, for it seems I had said the Chinese word for 'crutches,' and he wanted to write it down at once. Way out in the courtyard I could hear his startled groans on finding his precious sheets of paper utterly spoiled. Dear! Dear! I was in a panic, I thought he would surely come out and flog me within an inch of my life."

Grandfather Chang stopped and shook his head sadly. The little Changs nestled closer around his knees. "Go on, tell us what he really did do."

Wiping a tear from his eyes, he said: "Well, he walked out in the courtyard with the papers in his hands. 'Boy,' he groaned in a smothered sort of voice, 'how could you? how could you?' It was just as if a big pebble had stuck itself in my throat. Then to save my face I made up my outrageous lie. 'Oh, foreigner!' I stammered, 'it was the ink-bottle that did it! Yes, heavenly stranger, there I stood in the doorway and saw that enchanted pen dip itself into the bewitched ink-bottle, and dance up and down on your papers, scratching and scratching. I wanted to hobble in and stop it, but I was afraid of evil spirits.'"

The little Changs shook their cunning heads. "Oh, grandfather," they wagged at him solemnly.

"Yes, wasn't it absurd? But you will remember that I was chattering so fast in Chinese that he could hardly keep up with me, and only understood a few words here and there, like evil spirits, enchanted, bewitched—words he knew only too well. "Ah!" he sighed sadly, "a very excitable ink-bottle, isn't it?" And he looked me through and through."

The little Changs shivered sympathetically. "I suppose you felt dreadfully?" they asked.

"Yes, but I dared not confess, for fear he would flog me. So every day when he went out I crept in and made that ink-bottle do something, so that by his return he might find it standing up-side down on its cork, or rolled over on its side, or under the table, or possibly with big blots all around it, and always, always, every single word was scratched out, although he never left important papers around any more. You see, I thought I had to prove that the ink-bottle was excitably bewitched."

Grandfather Chang reached for a small tattered book, burned at the edges. It was a little gospel by Mark. "But, my dears, in spite of the excitable ink-bottle, he painstakingly covered new pages with Chinese words, and after a long time he learned to talk as well as we did. And he worked late at night, oh, very, very late, translating a certain book of his into Chinese—this very gospel of Mark. He would read me the stories of Jesus one by one as he translated them; then he sent the translation away somewhere to be printed, and months later a man came into town trundling a wheel-barrow full of books—gospels of Mark in the Chinese language, my dears, the very words of which I had taught him!"

"You must have been proud to know how you had helped," cried his adoring grandchildren.

"Well," he sighed, "I hardly felt I had done anything but hinder him as much as I could! Yet he never reminded me about that ridiculous ink-bottle; he taught me to read the Book, and he would say every evening: 'Some day you will teach this story of Jesus to our neighbors, boy.' 'Oh, no,' I would shudder. But there came a day when fierce, cruel men called Boxers stormed into town determined to stamp out Christianity, to destroy every Bible, and kill every foreigner. They came to our house, my dears, and led my beloved master away. As you well know I never saw him again, for he was one of the many missionaries throughout China who were killed by Boxers, killed for being too friendly to the poor Chinese who had already begun to give up idols and follow the new Jesus doctrine."

The little Changs stroked his hands lovingly. "We remember how you cried and cried, poor lonely boy; now tell us what you did with that Bible!"

Grandfather Chang stared off into space as if he saw that terrified boy of long, long ago. "When they rushed into our house I happened to be baking bread, so I snatched my precious little Book from the table and poked it right into the middle of the batch of dough and baked it in there! Then I hid all day, and at night-fall I took the bread and hobbled far out into the hills above the town, where I hid for weeks and weeks among the rocks and bushes. I ate a little of the bread every day,—berries, too,—and I read the stories of Jesus over and over, remembering the White Man. Then one day I began praying that God would let me grow into a strong man to trundle a wheelbarrow full of Bibles all over China."

"And you did! You did!" cried the grandchildren, while the oldest boy said proudly: "And, my, didn't you have dangers and adventures and loneliness? Twenty whole years of dangers! You know I think you ought to call this story 'The Perils of a Bible Wheelbarrow.'"

"Oh, no!" laughed a little granddaughter, "I've a much nicer name for it than that inside my head. I always name it 'Fed on a Baked Bible!'"

The third grandchild said gently: "But the wheelbarrow and the baking could never have happened if it had not been that grandfather's missionary did things in spite of the excitable ink-bottle!"

"That's so!" they all agreed.

The Truth About Miss Muffet and The Spider

(BY MISS MUFFET HERSELF)

YES, it is perfectly true that I sat on a tuffet to eat my curds and whey. It is also true that a spider sat down beside me and maybe I did seem frightened away, although as a matter of fact I did exactly what he told me to do, for the minute he sat down he sighed:

"Dear me, Miss Muffet, I'm clean tucked out. Been trying a new stitch in cobwebs, run over and see how you like the new pattern. Very intricate."

So over I ran to examine the stitch.

"It's a perfect beauty," I said, "if you sold it in the stores it would bring a fortune."

"Stores? Sell? What are you talking about? All I ever consent to do in a store is inferior decorating in the corners, etc. And nowhere am I less appreciated. I have seen my loveliest laciest webs swept down in ten seconds—and it took me hours of difficult ballooning to make them."

"Ballooning? Are you an aviator, sir?" I said.

"Aviator? Why, of course, I'm the original aviator! I don't want to seem to boast but all the things that men are trying to learn about flying in the air in balloons and parachutes I knew centuries ago. Of course the birds may go farther and swifter, but that's because they have a speed mania. Personally I think it is more refined to decorate the corner where you are."

"Would you mind telling me how you do it, sir?"

"I tell you what," said the spider, "we will do a little stunt, you and I. Run indoors, my dear, and fill your curds-and-whey bowl with water."

So I did. And that is when the Mother Goose poet saw me, of course, and clapped me into a verse. But I think it would have been a more interesting poem if he had watched a little longer and reported the next event. For I brought out my dish full of water, and as he directed I put a block of wood in the center of the water and put him on board this floating island.

He scurried around in every direction crying: "Water, water everywhere! How shall I get to land?"

"Are you scared?" I said, "for I will lift you over, sir."

"Tut! Tut! that was just playing to the gallery, my dear. I shall now proceed to make a fairy bridge. Kindly watch me! See, I rear up on my hind legs and begin spinning a thread. This thread is a lovely liquid substance with which the Lord God has equipped all of us spiders. We spit it out of us, and as we spin it it becomes a delicate bit of gossamer. Ah me, I made it a bit heavy that time, it sinks in the water; but I will try again. Ah, light as air, isn't it? A bit of thistledown, isn't it? This isn't conceit, Miss Muffet, it's gratitude to the Creator for giving me this wonderful equipment. Ah watch! watch! do you see that zephyr float my tiny thread across the water? When it is strong enough I will skip across my suspension bridge. No Robinson-Crusoe-on-a-desert-island about me! I have my bridge inside me, ready to weave! See, I am now on shore again."

"I think that is very wonderful," I cried. "What else can you do? That wasn't ballooning, was it?"

"Of course not, my dear. This is ballooning." And he ran up the side of a high fence. He wove a long strand of gossamer, he shaped it into a cradle with his hind feet, and spun long threads to buoy it up. Then in he got and waited for a gust of wind to come along and launch his little airship. Off he sailed! And landing in an apple-tree spun a lace doily on top of an apple blossom. It was a lovely sight.

"I am also a cannibal," he said shrewdly, as he snapped at an unfortunate fly and gobbled it up.

"Cruel!" I cried.

"Not a bit of it. Lamb chops were once nice frisky little animals gamboling in the meadows, but you sent the butcher out to get your dinner for you. Pork was once grunting in the pig-pen contentedly, steaks were once mooing gently among the buttercups, chickens were once clucking in the barnyard. Every time you eat an egg you eat a baby chicken! You are really more of a cannibal than I am."

I sat very quiet and looked at him in a friendly way. "The thing I like best about you is when you decorate the fields and fences in the early morning, and the dewdrops catch in the gossamer webs so that it looks like fairyland."

"Those gossamer webs are bridges, my dear Miss Muffet; we spiders spin them on our way to get our breakfast. It's all very practical, really," he sighed.

Topic for August 13

PRIDE AND HUMILITY
James 4:6-10

"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall exalt you."

Pride, two definitions: 1. "Undue sense of one's own superiority; inordinate self-esteem; arrogance or superciliousness." 2. "A proper sense of personal dignity and worth; honorable self-respect."

Humility: "The quality of being humble. Deference; courtesy, kindness."

It will be noted from the above definitions that it is possible for one person to have both qualities, at the same time. One could very easily name a few of his acquaintances who do not have both, in the proper sense.

In this epistle, James is dealing with the subject of pure religion as over against a lifeless faith. "Faith apart from works is dead." One of the problems of the ordinary Christian is that of his tongue. James says, "The tongue is a fire." He urges that it be bridled and that the individual be guided by the wisdom that is from above.

There is a sort of pride that often gives religious workers a sort of "swell-head," and the tongue is the member by which this fact is usually made known to other folks. Nothing is quite so disgusting as this sense of superiority. It is the "holier-than-thou" method, usually based on ignorance and a lack of real understanding as to the meaning and value of the Christian religion. James says: "God resisteth the proud." This vain-glorying process often gets its devotees into serious trouble; it bores into the very heart life of the churches; it breaks up church choirs; it greatly hinders the cause of Christ.

On the other hand, every Christian should have a sense of his own worth. If the great heavenly Father thought enough to make such wonderful provision for him, then man should properly evaluate himself in relation to God. Every Christian should be honorable; he should maintain the very highest standards of self-respect. This can be done without getting over into the realm of "doublemindedness." Control must be vested in God, and not in the wavering, whining sentiments, so often mistaken for piety.

A proper sense of personal worth will bring humility. The greatest scientists have been most humble men. In their search for truth, they have realized their own limitations and with true humility they have labored in search of that something which will throw more light on the vexing problems of religion and human existence. Religionists have not always been sympathetic with them in their discoveries. It was the church that put Galileo to death. It was the church that persecuted, harassed and excommunicated Martin Luther. It was the church that brought about the burning of John Huss.

What a privilege to live in a "land of the free and the home of the brave"—a land where the conscience is still free; a land where we may seek after God and "find him, without ecclesiastical authority or assistance from the state. Young people of our day, with true humility, should move out into that richness of thought and experience which is the privilege of all who come to know the Master of men.

Convention Impressions

B. Y. P. U. Convention has been most inspirational and will spur me on to greater things for our Master.—John Dohm.

Our Own Folks

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

The Detroit Baptist Association will meet with the Warren Avenue Church, Oct. 5-6. The afternoon and evening of Oct. 6 will be given over to the women's union. This is a change from May.

On September 24, Rev. Joseph Taylor, of West China, is to preach at the First Baptist Church. Dr. Taylor is to remain over Monday when the fall evangelistic conference for the entire metropolitan area will be held. Mrs. W. T. Elmore, of Lincoln, Neb., will also speak. Evangelism is ever kept to the forefront in Detroit Baptist churches. Last year the spirit of evangelism ran high and the ingathering, reports were most gratifying. Anxious prayer is made for even greater results this year.

Sunday, July 2, the First Church at Redford invited its friends to witness the laying of the corner-stone of its commodious new house of worship. Pastor H. H. Davis presided and Rev. H. C. Gleiss, superintendent of the Detroit Union, spoke on "Christ the Corner-Stone"; Albert H. Finn, on "The Temple of God," and President Power of the Detroit Union, on "The Significance of the Day." Mr. Power, assisted by the trustees of the church, laid the stone. A box of remembrance was deposited within the stone. Redford is a rapidly growing suburb within the metropolitan area of Detroit. It is hoped to dedicate before snow flies.

Rev. D. L. Schultz, of Philadelphia, has been loaned to the Detroit Council of Churches by the Home Mission Society for a summer campaign in out-of-doors evangelism and is already energetically at work. Detroit is witnessing the most aggressive work among industrial workers especially that has ever been inaugurated here in a united Protestant effort.

The daily vacation Bible schools are now in session. Under the general direction of the Detroit Council of Churches, these schools are maintained by the various communions, and again the Baptists have twenty-eight more than all others combined. Rev. Ben T. Leonard, the new director of religious education for the Detroit Union, and his wife are thoroughly engrossed in their great task. Vigorous plans are being outlined that will mean much for more than eighty-five Bible schools in the Detroit Union area.

Dr. and Mrs. Phelps have been conducting a series of special meetings at Wayne, one of the older churches of the state and now in the metropolitan area, and a suburban village and church that has large promise for the future. The church is united and ambitious for better and larger service. Sunday, July 2, eight believers were baptized. Mrs. Phelps has been called as pastor and has accepted.

Thursday, June 27, was Baptist Day with the churches. Their Sunday schools gather at Bob-lo Island about twenty miles down the Detroit River at the head of Lake Erie. This is one of the most charming playgrounds in America. Great modern passenger steamers transport the thousands who go there, and at the island there are pavilions, ball grounds, bathing beaches and abundant shade. There is ample room for each delegation to flock by itself and yet be near enough to each other to make it an ideal fraternal gathering. It has come to be a yearly institution. This year probably saw the largest attendance on record, nearly 3,500 being present.

June 23, at the Woodward Avenue Church occurred the Sunday-school rally of the Detroit Bible schools, primarily to report upon the results of Children's Day giving and to look into the future. Dr. Gleiss and Rev. Ben T. Leonard were the principal speakers, with Rev. A. V. Allen in the chair. This year the Polish Christian Center was put forward as a special object for which to work and about $1,200 was contributed by the various schools. President Powers of the Detroit Union told of what the Baptist schools of Pittsburgh had done. A reception to President Powers and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard followed the more formal program.

We welcome to our corps of efficient pastors, Rev. J. C. Hill, the new under-shepherd of the Ferndale Church, located in the heart of that rapidly growing village to the north of Detroit; also Emanuel Jacobson, the new minister of Wyandotte Church. These young men are gifted members of the last senior class of Rochester Theological Seminary. Their fields are full of promise.

The First Roumanian Church, under the leadership of Rev. V. Vigy, is coming back to full vigor since the large exodus to the homeland following the war. Their house of worship on Hastings Street at Frederick has been thoroughly overhauled and redecorated. This is the home of the Roumanian band that won such plaudits at the Cincinnati B. Y. P. U. Convention. The Second Roumanian Church on Dequindre Street near Davison, under the inspiring leadership of Rev. C. R. Izrisan, has felt growing pains for some time and now an additional lot has been purchased, looking to enlargement. The present church building has been redecorated.

On June 6, at Calvary Church (Negro) was held the annual meeting of the Advisory Council for Negro Churches of the Detroit Union. The afternoon session was given up to annual reports, election of officers and a general survey of the engaging field. The industrial depression of the past two years has been rather disastrous to the Negro brethren but they are emerging with bright faces and a stronger faith. A Negro Christian Center has been established and twelve of the thirty-nine Negro Baptist churches have been aided in securing houses of worship. Calvary Church is one that is splendidly housed, having purchased through the Detroit Union the commodious brick structure formerly occupied by the Clinton Avenue Church now merged into the new Jefferson Avenue Church. In the evening Rev. D. C. Austin, of Pittsburgh, gave one of his stimulating addresses following Rev. R. L. Bradby and Dr. Gleiss in their surveys of the great field and opportunity that Detroit affords in constructive evangelism and education among the rapidly growing Negro population of this great industrial city. It has been a great year notwithstanding the depression and 1922-23 will see large advance.

The Maine Convention

The Baptists of Maine met at Saco June 27, the women holding their meeting on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Arthur DeWitt Paul, of Saco, president, led in the Continuation Campaign with great satisfaction, the state leading all New England except Connecticut.

President J. H. Trites convened the minister's association, the leading feature being an address by Dr. Frank M. Goodchild of New York, who also spoke twice later and received the thanks and appreciation of the convention. In the evening occurred the banquet of the young people, with brief addresses followed by the public service of the society. The addresses, by Rev. J. Harrison Thompson and Dr. Goodchild, were greatly enjoyed.

On Wednesday morning an address was given by Pres. J. B. Ranger in which he took advanced ground for a united Protestantism in order to meet the needs and the dangers of the world. The report of the executive secretary, Dr. Irving B. Mower, recorded a year of enlarged work and success. Missionary operations have been more widespread and fruitful through the labors of Pastor-evangelists Benj. Beatty, Perley E. Miller, S. A. Evans and J. P. Roberts. Over 1200 members have been added to the churches by baptism during the year. The report of Treasurer George M. Graffam showed an increase in permanent funds and a small deficit in current expenses.

The report of the board of promotion by State Director E. C. Wittemore, stated that 330 churches have contributed missionary funds during the year and the sixty-seven churches that have not contributed total only 747 members. Over 96 per cent of the Baptists in the state are in churches contributing to the New World Movement. The benevolences of the churches show a gain of 400 per cent in six years, the total this year for budget objects being $152,389.94. Considerable sums have been given also for outside objects. The report carried recommendations for the vigorous prosecution of the New World Movement and was unanimously adopted, and the proposals of the General Board of Promotion concerning the work of the year were unanimously accepted by the board. Dr. Hamlen, who recently resigned as superintendent of evangelism, gave his report showing more work than usual in that line, with encouraging results. The sermon by Rev. J. S. Pendleton, of Bangor, had a clear note of faith, loyalty and courage in the proclamation of the essential gospel of Christ.

Wednesday evening was laymen's night, with Harry S. Brown, state chairman, presiding. A forcible address from the business man's standpoint was given by Mr. E. M. Hamlin of Milo, the new president of the convention, and another address by Secy. P. H. J. Lerrigo of the foreign society. Harry S. Brown, of Waterville, is chairman of a strong committee that will fully organize the layman's movement in the fall. The stewardship campaign is well under way.

Thursday was the field day of the board of education. The report of Secretary E. C. Whittemore showed that a larger number of students than usual are preparing for the ministry or missionary service. Over 1000 young people are studying in the two colleges, Colby and Bates, and nearly as many more in the six preparatory schools, Hebron, Coburn, Ricker, Maine Central, Higgins and Parsonsfield. Mr. Purinton at Bates, Mr. Newman at Colby and Mr. Clark at University of Maine serve as college pastors. Principal Hunt, the new head of Hebron Academy, received a cordial welcome. He spoke of the new plans to make Hebron an institution for boys only. President Gray of Bates discussed the movement to secure $1,000,000 for this growing institution. Prin. D. T. Harthorn and Dr. Whittemore represented Colby.

The report on religious education by Director Alexander Henderson included a successful work in teacher's institutes, summer schools, and the school of methods. There is a remarkable increase in Sunday-school attendance and in quality of work done. Rev. H. E. Tralle, of Philadelphia, gave an interesting address.

The report of the committee on resolutions gave clear and ringing support to many of the great causes that are seeking the good of the world. Some spicy moments occurred when some of the brethren sought to discipline one of the denominational papers for printing matter which did not meet their approval. After considerable discussion, a resolution was adopted stating that the convention desires to go on record as being tired of the controversy, and urgently requesting that it be discontinued in the denominational papers.

E. M. Hamlin was elected president of the convention, Dr. A. B. Lorimer first vice-president and Harry S. Brown second vice-president. On a single ballot, Dr. Irving B. Mower, long the wise and efficient secretary, was reelected, as were also Treasurer Graffam, Director of Religious Education Henderson, and Director of Promotion Whittemore. In the evening an address of comprehensiveness and power on the educational situation in China was given by Dr. Frank W. Padel-ford.

The spirit of the convention was one of harmony and of loyal desire to go forward in the great work of the denomination. There was no note of discouragement. The great convention pledged itself anew to increased effort in every department; evangelism, education, missions and social service. Stewardship of life, time and money, in new devotion to Christ are in the program to which the state will heartily address itself.

Summer Gathering New York City Metropolitan Area

By GRACE DALAND

Old Oak farm in the rare days of June will not soon be forgotten by those privileged to attend the first Baptist young people's summer gathering for the young people of the southern New York Baptist association, June 24-27. Pictures and impressions made upon the soul of each of the forty-six representatives from the twelve churches sending delegates will abide to bless the individual and the church.

Mrs. Hugh Winton of Port Richmond Church, Staten Island, was the gracious hostess. Each afternoon at four o'clock Mrs. Winton served tea in the lounging room and an attractive program by the young people themselves made this an hour of great delight. At five o'clock Rev. Robert A. Ashworth talked helpfully with the delegates on "Christian Truths." The hilltop services at sunset were tender and helpful to all. This was followed each night by a stereopticon lecture in the chapel given by Mr. H. S. Myers.

After the flag-raising on the hill in the early morning, lively setting-up exercises and a race down the hill brought all to the dining-hall with keen appetites to do justice to the bountiful breakfast served by Old Oak farm's gentle little mother, Mrs. Albert Cunningham.

At nine o'clock each morning the young people gathered in the chapel for a devotional service led by Rev. Stanley B. Hazzard. The program of the morning included the following periods: "Young People and their Bible," Rev. Albert C. Thomas; "Young People and their Devotional Life," Rev. Stanley B. Hazzard; "Young People and their Church," Miss Grace Daland. Each morning an address was given by a representative of our denominational societies. These speakers were Mrs. Katherine Westfall, Rev. P. H. T. Lerrigo, Rev. Charles A. Brooks, Rev. Charles H. Sears.

The afternoons were spent in recreation, croquet tournaments, baseball, hikes, treasure hunts, coon hunts, and so on under the leadership of Mr. E. P. Beal.

The conference hymn "Take my life and let it be consecrated, Lord to Thee" and the motto "Better Baptist young people for better Baptist churches" together with the impressions of the conference will, it is believed, mean valuable returns to the churches represented, in the enriched lives of their young people.

University of Redlands

By HERBERT E. WISE

THE thirteenth anniversary exercises of the University of Redlands were characterized by a high degree of enthusiasm and optimism. The class of '22 was not only the largest yet graduated, but evinced unusual excellence in scholarship, forensics, dramatics and athletics. The source of highest satisfaction, however, lies in the fact that a goodly number will pursue further study in preparation for the Christian ministry, several look forward to missionary service while others will enter the teaching profession. The "Redlands spirit" was manifest throughout.

Prizes were awarded for public speaking to Douglas G. McPhee and James W. Brougher, Jr. To Miss Florence Pollard went the newly created faculty prize for the student having made the highest grade during the sophomore year.

Mention must be made of the concert of fine arts, the class-day exercises, the splendid rendition of the "Mikado" on Zanja Fiesta night, showing superior training at the hands of Prof. Chas. H. and Mrs. Marsh, and the farewell reception given by President and Mrs. Duke at Knoll Hall.

Dr. Herbert B. Smith of the Immanuel Presbyterian church of Los Angeles, delivered the anniversary sermon. His message was from the familiar words "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do." Dr. Samuel J. Skevington, author of the "Distinctive Principle of the Baptists," whose daughter Florence was of the graduating class, gave the evening address before the college Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., based on the words to Gideon, "The Lord is with thee" and "Go, in this thy strength."

Introducing Dr. E. A. Hanley of Berkeley, the speaker of commencement day, President V. L. Duke referred to him as preacher, educator, orator and statesman. The address on the "Christian Scholar and the Sacred Scriptures" fully justified the characterization.

President Duke announced the prospective appointment of three additional members to the teaching staff, for the departments of English Bible, Romance languages, and English, respectively. To these will be added a dean of women.

The passing of Prof. George Robertson, of the department of biology and zoology, who for the past twelve years was correspondent of the Standard and Baptist, has removed from the teaching force a rare and beautiful life. It was in fitting recognition of his worth that Prof. Chas. H. Marsh of the College of Fine Arts, composed music to the words of Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" which was feelingly rendered during the exercises.

At the university luncheon which followed the awarding of diplomas and prizes, Dr. O. P. Gifford was guest of honor. Probably to him more than to any other visitor our students have listened during their college course. He is always greeted with increasing admiration and affection. Following addresses from Douglas McPhee of the graduating class, and from Dr. Harley McNair of St. John's college, Shanghai, China, who entered as freshman at the opening of the university, Dr. Gifford spoke with his usual beauty and power on "the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ."

Miss Grace Colburn

At the last meeting of the New England District of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, it was voted to request that the following memorial of Miss Grace Colburn be printed in THE BAPTIST.

"For many years Miss Grace Talbot Colburn was an active and valued member of the New England District Board of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and to it she gave her love, her thought, her untiring service. Although called later to become a member of the national board and chairman of its finance committee, she never lost her interest in the affairs of the district but in her position as candidate secretary kept closely and constantly in touch with it. She was always a welcome visitor at the meetings of the district board where her words of advice and her sound judgment were often sought. In her going the New England district has met with a great loss.

Miss Colburn was a woman of rare character, fine mental ability, unusual executive capacity, and sincere spiritual devotion. Ever "loyal to the royal" in herself, she followed after and attained high ideals; always faithful to whatever task she undertook, she achieved results. Her life was an expression of the prayer-hymn:

"Oh, grant us freedom, Lord, within thy law
To toil or worship, live or die for Thee,
In Thy name building that which shall endure
Beyond the little while we have to live."

Commencement at Bethel Institute

By E. A. FINSTROM

The baccalaureate services were held June 4 in the First Swedish Baptist Church, Minneapolis. President G. Arvid Hagstrom delivered the sermon.

On the afternoon of June 9 the Bethel Seminary Alumni Association held its annual meeting in the chapel of Bethel Seminary. The business of greatest importance was the election of officers and the laying of plans for the work of the coming year. The association provides one scholarship annually for students in Bethel Seminary and endeavors to secure funds for the purchase of new books for the library.

The commencement exercises of the seminary were held on the evening of June 9 in the First Swedish Baptist Church, St. Paul. Brief addresses on timely themes were delivered by Rev. J. A. Swanson, Rev. E. T. Carlson, Rev. W. G. Holmberg, Dr. Frank Peterson, Dr. C. G. Lagergren, and Dr. G. Arvid Hagstrom. Special mention was made of the fact that Dean C. G. Lagergren was soon to retire as dean of the seminary after thirty-three years of active service. Dean Lagergren will not wholly sever his connection with the school, however, but will remain as professor emeritus. Nine students were awarded diplomas, five receiving the degree Th. B. and four Th. G. The past year has been one of the most successful in the history of the school, twenty-eight students having been enrolled in the seminary and twenty-three in the preparatory department.

On the evening of June 12 a large group of Bethel Academy alumni and their friends met for their annual banquet at the Commodore Hotel. The principal speaker was Rev. A. J. Dalby of Parker's Prairie, Minn. The speaker chose for his subject the "Boiling Cauldron of Macbeth in 1922" and made a fearless analysis of present day conditions, and after a vivid portrayal of the underlying causes, he made a powerful presentation of what has been proved to be the only adequate remedy for the needs of this world. The remedy is the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Bethel Academy Alumni Association is at present working to secure funds to equip the athletic field on the campus of the school.

The commencement exercises for the senior class of Bethel Academy were held June 13 in the auditorium of Bethel Academy. Rev. J. G. Oster, Kansas City, Mo., delivered the commencement address. His message was characterized by spiritual vision, prophetic insight, and unconquerable optimism as regards the work of the kingdom of God here on earth.

Diplomas were given to thirty students in academic department, twenty-one in the commercial department, and one in music department. Seven of the graduates from the academic department expect to enter the seminary next autumn and there prepare for definite religious service.

call of this church he has again become its leader. With his family he moved onto the field May 1. During the next six weeks twelve were added to the membership of the church, five by letter and seven by baptism. In addition to this, on Children's Day, Mr. Collett conducted a consecration service, when 17 children were consecrated to the care and service of the church. There seems to be a spiritual awakening throughout the various departments of the church.

FOR OVER TWO YEARS the Baptist church building at Indian Falls has been unoccupied, except for birds. But some weeks ago, at the request of Dr. Arthur Creasy of Batavia, Mr. David W. Smith opened and cleaned it. Since then there has been preaching of the gospel with its softening beneficent influence. The young people form about 75 per cent of the attendance at the evening service, the best attended service. In numbers there has been an increase of over 466 per cent. Dr. Creasy specializes with the young.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. P. F. DAVIS has begun his work as pastor of the Newtown Square Church. He is a graduate of Crozer and has been pastor at Blacksburg, Va., for the past six years. The work in the new field is opening with good prospects. The people are responding to the leadership of Mr. Davis and are doing big things. A parsonage is under completion and work will soon be begun on a new house of worship.

CONNECTICUT

REV. WILLIAM T. THAYER, director of religious education for Connecticut, is having considerable work at summer assemblies. As dean of the Connecticut summer school, he was at the Connecticut Ladies' College, New London, June 23-July 1; he was instructor at the Baptist summer assembly, Western Pennsylvania, July 10-17; he will be supervisor at the New England school of methods, Ocean Park, Maine, August 23-Sept. 2.

AT A SPECIAL MEETING of the board of trustees of the state convention the following action was taken: Resolved, that we, the board of trustees of the Connecticut Baptist Convention, go on record in expressing: 1. Its unabated confidence in the personnel and program of the General Board of Promotion. 2. Our entire confidence in our state officers and the state board of promotion. 3. Our judgment that the churches of the convention will best serve the cause of Christ by the heartiest cooperation in the aims and program of our New World Movement.

THE COMMITTEE ON EVANGELISM, Dr. James McGee, chairman, and Rev. E. E. Gates, secretary, met in Calvary Church, New Haven, June 28, when the following resolutions were adopted: 1. That it is the sense of the state evangelistic committee that the local church should give serious attention to the matter of evangelism during the ensuing year. 2. That the local church should be urged to work out a program of evangelism adapted to its own possibilities and needs. 3. That the local church should be organized in all of its departments in the interests of a continuous program of personal evangelism. 4. That the state evangelistic committee express itself as ready to cooperate as fully as possible with the local church in the promotion of any special evangelistic effort. 5. That the local church be urged to make the largest possible use

MASSACHUSETTS

DURING THE PAST YEAR AND A HALF Park Memorial Church of Springfield, George Pitt Beers, pastor, has had a splendid growth. The membership has grown from 400 to 600 and the school has increased from 30 to 35 per cent. A parish house has been built at a cost of about $75,000, which provides department and class rooms for most of the school, with gymnasium, dining-hall and social assembly room. The church is now engaged in enlargement and improvement of the auditorium. The present seating capacity is less than 350 but the alterations will about double it. An entire new heating plant with electric fan ventilating system and an entire new indirect lighting system will be installed and the building will be entirely refinished inside and out. The alterations are expected to be complete by Oct. 1, and the property will then be worth from $150,000 to $175,000. The financial income for current expenses has been about doubled in the last year and a half and the church's apportionment for the New World Movement is paid to date.

REV. DR. S. W. CUMMINGS, nearly two years pastor at the Ruggles Street Church, Boston, has resigned to accept a call to a professorship in the Redlands University, Cal. This is a distinct loss to the ministry in Boston, after a successful pastorate all too short. By his beautiful sincerity, and his brotherly spirit, Dr. Cummings won all hearts. He will be greatly missed. Possibly he was classed a conservative by some, but by all he was esteemed a brother beloved. Redlands is enriched.

VACATION SCHOOLS ARE FLOURISHING all around the city and suburbs. The attendance ranges from 150 to fifty and the enthusiasm, especially in the tenement house district, is compensating to the workers.

THEY ARE INSTALLING a new great organ in Tremont Temple. The old organ was the gift of Deacon J. W. Converse when after the fire during the last pastorate of Dr. Geo. C. Lorimer, the Temple was rebuilt. It cost $10,000. The new one will cost upwards of $50,000.

DR. F. B. GREUL had a pleasant experience while supplying the First Church, Providence, R. I., during July. He baptized six candidates who dated their conversion back to the time he was supplying the church a year ago. One of them was a Roman Catholic.

DR. C. H. WATSON has appointments as summer supply preacher at First Church, Lynn; First Church, Medford, Leominster, Westboro and Weston. He seeks no preaching but preaching seeks him.

NEW YORK

EMMANUEL CHURCH, BATAVIA, is indeed glad to have Rev. Charles P. Collett back as pastor. His previous pastorate of seven years was a fruitful one for the church, and during that time he made a host of friends throughout Batavia, who now rejoice in his return. A few months ago he returned from the mission fields of India, and at the urgent and unanimous of the denominational agencies within the state for the promotion of evangelism. 6. That wherever possible teams of lay-workers be organized in the local church for special evangelistic services wherever opportunity affords.

Mississippi Valley

MICHIGAN

ON JULY 16, THE FIRST CHURCH of Alma accepted the resignation of the pastor, Rev. E. E. Shouffer, to take effect Sept. 1. The resignation had been pending for nearly two months. This church was the first in the state to go over the top in the New World Movement Campaign. During the present pastorate the resident membership has been increased 20 per cent by baptisms; the amount paid for missions has been more than three times that of any previous period of the church's history; the Bible school has been reorganized with department superintendents and graded under the standard of efficiency. For two years the pastor has conducted a week day Bible class with high-school credit for high-school students. Through the able leadership of Mr. Shouffer every department of the church is in a flourishing condition. Mr. Shouffer has not yet accepted another pastorate.

ILLINOIS

REV. ALLEN N. NETTLEMAN, pastor of First Church, Aurora, has now been on the field for a year. It has been a year of emphasis on religious education and young people's work. The church recently suffered heavy losses in the passing on of Mrs. S. V. Hunt, who was active in many departments of the work, and at the time of her death, was vice-president of the Women's Missionary Society of the association; and in the going of Mrs. N. E. Higgins, for several decades head of the Women's Society of the church. Both of these women were of rare culture and consecration.

Frances Shimer School

Forty-four diplomas were given out, including sixteen in the junior college. Two forceful addresses were given by Drs. Baker and T. G. Soares of the University of Chicago. A large number of visitors from many states were present. Ground was broken for the new college residence hall, while the closing exercises were taking place. It will cost, furnished, near $70,000 and will house forty-one teachers and pupils on the two upper floors with space, when needed, for fifteen more on the fourth floor. The faculty is increased for September, in view of the expectation of a larger attendance, especially in the junior college. The money to pay for the building is in hand, more than half of it from the education society.

INDIANA

REV. ROY CAMPBELL, recently of Michigan, and a graduate of Moody Institute, was ordained July 13 at the Oakdale Baptist Church of Peru. The four-hour examination was very satisfactory. Dr. Columbus Hall acted as leader of the examination; Dr. O. P. Duncan, as moderator and Mr. B. T. Purviance as clerk.

OHIO

REV. CHARLES WALSH of New Lexington, has received a unanimous call to First Church, Sidney. He begins his work there August 6. New Lexington has just completed a comfortable and convenient parsonage, and has a united consecrated people now needing a pastor.

SUMMER SUPPLIES for Memorial Church, Columbus during the vacation of the pastor, G. R. Robbins will be: July 30, Dr. L. S. Colborn, Cincinnati; August 6, Dr. T. F. Chambers, Granville; August 13, Dr. C. C. Winter, Cazenovia, N. Y.; August 20 and 27, Dr. Arthur Cowley, Rochester, N. Y.

NEBRASKA

REV. H. F. GILBERT, formerly a missionary in the Congo, has accepted the pastorate of the First Church of Norfolk. He took up the work on July 1 and on July 9 twelve persons presented themselves as candidates for membership.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Swedish Baptist Conference

The South Dakota Swedish Conference met with the church at Strandburg, June 22-25. Rev. B. L. Carlton of Big Springs presided. The entertaining church provided a 100 per cent hospitality—no room for improvement. All the churches in the conference excepting one were represented. Thirty-two delegates were in attendance and a large number of visitors. The reports showed a good year's work and much hope for the future. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Anton A. Anderson, Sioux Falls. Addresses, sermons, and Bible studies were given by Rev. B. L. Carlton, Rev. Anton A. Anderson; Rev. E. Hamlin, Alcester; Rev. P. Turnvall, Ramsey; Rev. Alex. Rexion, Lake Norden; Rev. Robert Larson, Dalesburg; Rev. A. M. Dahlberg, Strandburg; Mrs. Mingus, state convention; Mr. A. P. Johnson, Alcester; Mr. Peter Norberg, Sioux Falls; Dr. S. P. Shaw, state convention; Rev. Alex. Olson, Strandburg; Rev. N. P. Wik, Norbeck; Rev. Fred Anderson, Marvin; Prof. Kreuger, Sioux Falls College. The officers for the meeting were: Rev. B. L. Carlton, moderator; Rev. Anton A. Anderson, vice-moderator; Rev. A. Rexion, secretary; Rev. A. Olson, vice-secretary. The terms of Trustees Hamlin, Johnson and Edlund, expired. To take their places were elected Rev. Hamlin, Mr. A. P. Johnson, and Rev. Olson. Rev. Anton Anderson was chosen to fill the vacancy left by Rev. Widen. The conference adopted resolutions to the state convention, the Swedish Baptist General Conference, the board, and the Strandburg church. These resolutions expressed great satisfaction with the work of the first three organizations and a deep sense of gratitude and appreciation to the entertaining church. The next meeting of the conference will be with the the Swedish church in Sioux Falls.

MISSOURI

REV. D. J. EVANS, pastor of First Church, Kansas City, with his wife and son, is spending his vacation in the extreme northern part of Michigan. Dr. J. P. 273 to an average attendance of 392. Two efficient B. Y. P. U.'s have been organized and function splendidly. The church raised over $30,000 for the six months just past. It subscribed over $100,000 on the H. M. D. Fund and is up in its payments. The head usher keeps an attendance record for every Sunday in the year. The average for fifty-two Sundays in 1920 was: Morning, 452; evening, 221. for 1921: morning, 495; evening, 290. Seattle hopes to entertain the Northern Baptist Convention in 1925.

REV. LOUIS J. SAWYER, has resigned at Yakima. During the seven years of Mr. Sawyer's pastorate, there have been many additions to the membership, the Bible school has the largest attendance in its history, a $12,000 mortgage on its splendid stone edifice has been lifted, and its beneficence contributions have increased fourfold. It is with deep regret that the Yakima church loses Mr. Sawyer, who returns after repeated solicitations to his former pastorate at Hamilton Square Church, San Francisco, which he held for thirteen years before coming to Yakima. The Yakima church has secured no successor to Mr. Sawyer, who leaves Sept. 1, but it is hoped that a man with a vision will appear who can see the Baptist possibilities in this fruitful and fast-growing Yakima Valley.

Obituary

ALVENA M. MAURHAN BAILEY

Alvena M. Maurhan was born at Edgerton, Ohio, April 13, 1872, and died at Spokane, Wash., July 4, 1922 aged 50 years, 2 months, 21 days.

As a girl she was ambitious to pursue a career as a physician and she therefore attended Michigan University where she was graduated in medicine and surgery in 1893.

Two years previous to her graduation she was converted under the preaching of Rev. Eugene Haines, pastor at Parma, Mich. She practiced medicine for two years after her graduation and on October 24, 1895, was married to Rev. Alfred H. Bailey at Parma. She immediately gave up her chosen work as a practicing physician and merged her life and energy into the Christian work of her husband.

They removed to California in 1906 where they lived for ten years, part of the time in pastoral work and partly in general convention service. In 1916 they came to Spokane where Dr. Bailey has since been the efficient Supt. of Missions for the East Washington and North Idaho Baptist Convention.

Since coming to Spokane Mrs. Bailey has served a term as president of the Women's Baptist City Union and at the time of her death she was a member of the Women's Board of the Columbia River District, a member of the Board of the East Washington and North Idaho Baptist Convention and the Secretary-Director of the Woman's Missionary Society of this convention field.

Mrs. Bailey's training and experience made her an ideal pastor's wife and her executive ability made her a valuable counselor. She was a genuine Christian, always optimistic, faithful and loyal to her Master's service. She was not satisfied to be simply a member of an organization or board. She participated in the work and prayed earnestly for its success. Therefore her going will leave a vacancy not easy to fill.

She leaves to mourn her going her mother, Mrs. Caroline Maurhan of Fullerton, Calif., and her husband, Rev. A. H. Bailey, D.D., of Spokane, to both of whom she was deeply devoted.

The funeral services were held in Spokane Thursday, July 6, conducted by Dr. J. E. Smith and assisted by Rev. A. F. Colver and Rev. Charles McHarness. The body was taken to Fullerton, Calif., for burial.

Report of Committee on Instruction on the Teaching in Colgate Seminary

To the Board of the Baptist Education Society of the State of New York: Gentlemen:

Your committee, appointed at the last annual meeting of the board, to visit the seminary has made two visits to Hamilton during the academic year, viz., on November 14 and 15 and on May 24 and 25. This unusual attention was given because the committee has felt deeply the critical spirit that seems to be abroad in the denomination, and has desired, if possible, to render a service that might help to stabilize confidence.

After this investigation your committee desires to express appreciation of the work that is being done at the seminary, and likewise of the spirit that seems to pervade the institution. The student body is somewhat larger than in former years, and seems to manifest an earnestness that is very praiseworthy. The members of the committee were given rooms in Eaton Hall and so had opportunity to come into personal touch with many of the students as well as to visit the classes.

The new B.Th. course seems to find a hearty response. It is gratifying to note, moreover, that men who wish to go on to further training choose this course as the best preparation. About 90 per cent, as a matter of record are thus going on to advanced studies. That the men who are taking the B.Th. course are of high intellectual calibre and possessed of a worthy purpose is evidenced by the fact that many of the men in this course rank among the honor men of the university, and that of the four securing Phi Beta Kappa keys this year one is a B.Th. man.

Our Book Shelf

The Christ We Worship, by John Marvin Dean. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. Paper, 35 cents.

A devotional discussion of the deity of Christ by one of our pastors whose passion for the gospel is well known. It will enrich all who read it with sympathy.

Religious Thoughts in the Greater American Poets, by Elmer James Bailey. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $1.50.

The author is assistant professor of English in the University of Pittsburgh and examining chaplain to the bishop of that city. He defines religion as "adjustment of life to spiritual ideals," and with this in mind examines the poetry of Bryant, Poe, Emerson, Whitman, Longfellow, Holmes, Lowell and Whitman. There is a large class of men in our churches and pulpits to whom a subject like this makes a strong appeal. By all such the book is certainly well worth reading.

Christian Work as a Vocation, by Professors Tweedy, Beach, and McKim. Yale University. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.00.

One of a series of books to aid college young men in practical Christian work. This volume deals with "the ministry, foreign mission field, and the Y. M. C. A." While designed primarily for college men it is a thesaurus of information, instruction and inspiration to all Christian workers, and furnishes a preparation the age demands from those who go forth as leaders and teachers in religious fields. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the merits of such a book.

Sympathy of Jesus

3:15 are his wise words: "And if in anything ye be otherwise minded this also shall God reveal to you." Almost all thoughtful young people have their days of questioning, of investigations, of doubting. If all their questionings are branded as treason to the Christian faith, if they are denounced as infidels, they may be driven into a real infidelity. In the university Shelley was verging toward atheism. Dr. Jowett said to him: "You must find God within twenty-four hours or leave the university." Through un wisdom he became an out-and-out unbeliever in the powers above. Charles Bradlaugh while a Sunday-school scholar was denounced for his inability to see things as the church saw them and was expelled from school. He became the leader of open atheism among English-speaking men. These two young men needed large-mindedness to deal with them, bringing a larger light bearing patiently with them. The true method is that given by Dr. D. W. Faunce's "A Young Man's Difficulties with his Bible." The New Testament presents instances of exclusions from the church for gross immorality and for denial of fundamental beliefs. It presents one fine instance of an eloquent preacher who had some imperfect conceptions of religious truth. Two experienced believers, Priscilla and Aquila, knew how to bear gently with one out of the way through an imperfect conception of the truth. They displaced the smaller belief by a larger and truer belief. Apollos had a correcter creed and a finer ministry because two "good people helped him in a kindly way."

SHOWING APPRECIATION

The bulk of the work in our churches is done gratuitously, much of it under great personal sacrifice by those who do it. Measured by the contribution in money and time and energy which the church receives from its members during the course of a year, it must be greatly loved. While it is very true that there are only too many who have not their full share in it and are little more than drones in the bee-hive, yet it is also true that there is a vast army of those who gladly and consistently give the best they have.

We are just now thinking particularly of the services rendered by the faithful ones in our choirs, and especially by those upon whose shoulders above all others the responsibility for good choir work rested. They have had their greatest reward if their work has been successful and if the choir under their leadership has been able to be of real service to the church. But even a leader who on the whole has been successful has had a hard row to hoe and has had his backaches and his heartaches, and he can be wonderfully helped by some word or act of recognition on the part of those whom it is his endeavor to serve. We are not thinking of elaborate gifts. They often mean so little. But let the choir find some way of showing that it appreciates the efforts of its director, and choir and director both will greatly profit by it.—The Choir-Leader.

SAVANNAH ORGAN IS DEDICATED

The dedicatory recital on the Skinner organ in the First Baptist Church of Savannah, Ga., was played May 4 by A. Leslie Jacobs, organist and director of music of that church. His program was received so cordially that he has had numerous requests to repeat it. The organ was presented to the church by Mrs. Lucy May Camp Armstrong in memory of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. William Nelson Camp. The organ, a three-manual and echo, has forty-one complete registers, seventeen couplers, twenty-one pistons, and other accessories of the modern instrument. The console has fifty stop-knobs, the difference of nine including some borrowed and augmented stops and the tremolos. The steel bars for the harp are situated in the choir division chamber. The set of tubular chimes is in the echo chamber above the gallery. Mr. Jacobs' program included these numbers: Concert Overture in C minor, Hollins; "Eventide," Fairclough; Fantasia and Fugue in G Minor, Bach; Fountain Reverie, Fletcher; "Prelude Elegiaque," Jongen; Scherzo in D minor, Faulkes; "Sunset and Evening Bells," Federlein; Largo from "New World" Symphony, Dvorak; "Song of the Basket-Weaver," Russell; "Variations de Concert," Bonnet.

SOME NOTABLE PROGRAMS

From the College of the City of New York comes a handsome book of bound programs of organ concerts given on the great organ of the college during the past winter by the faculty organist, Samuel A. Baldwin. This was the fifteenth season of such programs, and the present booklet comprises concert-programs numbers 783-

842. These recitals are open to the public, and no admission is charged. The programs are catholic in tone, displaying a wide freedom of taste, giving representation to all schools of writing, old and new. Mr. Baldwin's sole condition seems to be that whatever he plays must be good music—who wrote it, or who else plays it seems to have little effect. The list of American composers represented is a truly imposing one. A series of concerts which includes, besides the great acknowledged masterpieces of organ music, such a quantity of new American works as is listed, certainly is performing a very great service to the cause of our own national music. Just a list of the native composers is worth perusal. We find works by Bartlett, Borowski, Foote, Jepson, Nevin, Rogers, Thayer, Yon, Bellairs, Candlyn, Chaffin, Clokey, Delamarter, Diggle, Diton, Gale, Gillette, Grasse, Hyde, Kinder, Kramer, Lester, Matland, Mauro-Cottone, McCollin, Reiff, Russell, Sage, Seeley, Sheppard, Stebbins, Stoughton, Sykes, Thompson, and Zimmerman. Show this list to the next gentleman who makes the sickly wail that we are not producing any organ music of consequence in this country now!

Bayou Songs Strickland ($1.25 net)

Gradually but steadily the composers of this country are turning their serious attention to the uncounted wealth that lies dormant in the rich store of folk-music, much of it of alien origin, but all now a composite representation of modern America. Burleigh, Dett, Rogers, and others have successfully tilled the soil of the old Negro spirituals; Lorraine Wyman and Loomis have headed the movement to preserve the hill songs of Kentucky and West Virginia; Milligan has recently uncovered treasures of Revolutionary and Colonial songs, and his valiant work for the Stephen Foster songs has been a potent aid to their proper recognition; the Spanish material of California has been recently renovated by Gertrude Ross; Grant-Schaeffer and many others have tilted to French-Canadian genre; Troyer, Lieurance and Cadman have done much for the fostering of interest in the Indian music. The latest example of this sort of nationalistic impressionism is to be found in the set of songs noted above. Miss Strickland has gone to the locale of the Louisiana Creoles for her style and inspiration. To colorful texts by Michael de Longpre she has fashioned four attractive songs, novel in setting, poetic in spirit, and appealing in sentiment. This composer has long known how to write songs. She has the real lyric gift; but this set, in my opinion, overtops anything she has done to date. That they will become exceedingly popular is to assert a bromidism; such combination of melody, individuality, and picturesque setting contain all the elements of universal appeal. And she has been canny enough to keep the grade of difficulty to the point where amateurs as well as professional singers and accompanists will be able to revel in the beauties of the songs without climbing technical difficulties every other measure. They are issued in two keys—high and low voice.

Teaching in Colgate

One excellent result of the new course is the fact that theological students are intermingling freely with the college men and taking part in the various university activities.

Your committee visited classes in the following subjects: Introduction to religion, history of doctrine, Old Testament interpretation, New Testament interpretation, systematic theology, Christian ethics, homiletics, logic, philosophy, history, literature, and vocal expression. The committee is heartily unanimous in expressing its pleasure in witnessing the quality of work done, and reports unqualifiedly that in the Biblical and theological departments the teaching showed utmost loyalty to the Scriptures, and was thoroughly in accord with the historic Baptist principles. After this careful investigation the committee would like to have all our churches reassured as to the utmost loyalty of their century-old institution at Hamilton. To this end the committee requests that wide publicity be given to this report through the columns of the denominational press.

The committee would hereby voice its disapproval of the spirit which would impeach the integrity of teachers in our seminary without acquainting itself with the full facts of the case. True to its tradition of many years, the seminary at Hamilton seems to be unwilling to thrust upon the minds of men any authoritative creeds to which assent is enforced; but, on the other hand, while believing in the historic Baptist principle which gives to every man liberty of conscience, it is trying to lead its students to a reverent study of the Scriptures as the revealed word of God, and to an appreciation of the Christian religion as an inner experience of the soul.

Your committee would respectfully recommend to the board that definite efforts be made to call the attention of Baptist young men who are looking to the ministry as a life work to the advantages offered them at Hamilton, particularly emphasizing the B.Th. course as far preferable to training in institutions of lower rank which offer no degree, and whose course could not prepare a student for advanced work in theological studies.

Respectfully submitted,

W. C. TAYLOR, J. AUSTIN HUNTLEY
A. M. PRENTICE, Committee.

Nebraska's Participating Churches

We believe a considerable amount of the confusion which has arisen relative to the number of churches participating in the New World Movement has been due to the fact that many churches are responding in a large way which have not taken pledges on the five-year basis. This is true of churches in Nebraska where between $20,000 and $30,000 is received from churches which did not take pledges for the five-year period. Among these churches are First Church of Lincoln, which gave this last year $7,882.29, the largest amount of any church in the state; First Church of Omaha, which gave $7,677.69, and Immanuel Church of Omaha, which gave $2,887.57. These churches for various reasons did not feel that it was wise to take pledges for the five-year period but their giving speaks more largely than words of their vital interest in the missionary enterprises and their absolute loyalty to the denomination and its pro-

Some Startling Facts

1. "The Protestant Churches of America stand convicted of the spiritual neglect of the Childhood and Youth of America." (Report of the Committee on Education, of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.)

2. Over 27,000,000 of "nominal Protestants" under 25 years of age not enrolled in any Sunday School or other institution giving regular religious instruction.

3. Two out of every Three young people of our Protestant constituency receive no regular religious instruction.

4. Seven out of every Ten of All young people of our land are untouched by the religious education program of any Church.

A Query:

How long will our democracy survive when SEVEN out of every TEN of its children and youth receive no direct training as to the religious and moral foundations upon which its basic structures are built?

The Call:

The American Baptist Publication Society is the agency of the Northern Baptist Convention for the promotion of religious education. Its resources for leadership in this field are measured by the gifts of the Churches. Its objectives are:

1. To arouse a nation-wide interest in religious education.
2. To give our Churches a vision of the great service that can be rendered through religious education.
3. To develop a trained leadership in the field of religious education.
4. To prepare an adequate body of teaching material in religious education.
5. To secure ample equipment and adequate support for the whole program of religious education in the Church.
6. To place anew the needful emphasis on religious education at home.
7. To link up constructively our plans and program for religious education with the plans of other Christian bodies so that their united strength may be brought to bear upon the great body of neglected boys and girls in our land.

It seeks all of these things in order that our young people may grow up knowing The Master as Saviour and equipped for lives of splendid devotion and effective service.

The Publication Society has need of every dollar in its budget this year to maintain its work on the present inadequate basis. The more adequate grappling with the tremendous problems that face us in the field of religious education must await the granting of an increased budget and the receipt of larger gifts for this work.

gram of advance. Such churches as these cannot by any possibility be said to be failing in their cooperation with the New World Movement.

When we add the large number of churches that are giving on this basis to those which have taken pledges for five years, we find a larger percentage of Nebraska churches giving today than ever before and also a very remarkable increase in the amount of missionary funds received since the beginning of the New World Movement. We believe this is illustrative of the conditions in all our states.—WALTER I. FOWLE, State Secretary.

Poetry

SOMETIMES I tremble like a storm-swept flower,
And seek to hide my tortured soul from thee,
Bowing my head in deep humility
Before the silent thunder of thy power.
Sometimes I flee before thy blazing light,
As from the specter of pursuing death;
Intimidated lest thy mighty breath,
Windways, will sweep me into utter night.
For, oh, I fear they may be swallowed up—
The loves that are to me of vital worth,
My passion and my pleasure in the earth,—
And lost forever in thy magic cup!
I fear, I fear my truly human heart
Will perish on the altar-stone of art!

Pastor J. B. Lawrence of Shawnee, Okla., has been elected president of the new Oklahoma Baptist University to be developed at that place.

Pastor P. C. Larsen of Dell Rapids, S. D., is conducting evangelistic services with the Newell Church, Iowa, July 25 to Aug. 6.

Rev. W. F. Ripley, Colorado's director of promotion, has entered upon his new work as director of religious education for Colorado. He has served long and fruitfully in the state and enjoys the love and confidence of the churches to a peculiar degree.

Mr. Trever Arnett, for twenty-one years auditor of the University of Chicago, has resigned, and Mr. Nathan G. Plimpton succeeds him. Mr. Arnett is a member of the General Education Board of New York and one of its secretaries.

Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, singing evangelists, are assisting Pastor G. Creekmore at Brunswick, Mo., beginning July 27. Mr. Imrie can be addressed at Topeka, Kan.

The "Sunday School Worker,"—which is indispensable but not ubiquitous in our Baptist Sunday Schools—has in the August issue a suggestive discussion of Sunday-school contests, written by Pastor Ambrose Bailey of First Church, Portland, Ore.

First Church, St. Paul, is making an experiment for the summer which may become a permanent arrangement. The Bible school and church service are to be merged in a two-hour service. The slogan is, "The Church at School—The School at Church." Dr. Earl has started a "spiritual clinic" in his week-night prayer meeting.

The Oceanic Steamship Company, operating the steamers "Somoma" and "Ventura" from San Francisco to Sydney, Australia, has demanded from the government in their new contract double the amount hitherto paid for carrying the mails to Australia and the South Seas. Unless they get the $360,000 asked for, the company says it will take its boats off the run.

Director of Religious Education, Albert H. Gage, of the Chicago Baptist executive council, reports seventy-five daily vacation Bible schools in operation in the Chicago Baptist Association this summer. More than 10,000 boys and girls, taught by over seven hundred teachers are receiving daily instruction in the Bible and in Christian living. The common theme is home life. It is the purpose of these schools to help boys and girls live their home life in the Christian way.

James W. Kramer, evangelist has closed a year's campaign. All except two of the meetings were with Baptist churches and were single meetings held in the following churches: College Ave., Fort Worth; Market Street, Zanesville, Ohio; First, Grand Junction, Colo.; First, Enid, Okla., and Calvary, Miami, Okla. At Miami throngs were turned away. Mr. Kramer is now resting in Denver but will begin his fall work in Oklahoma City. He has with him as choir leader Ralph E. Mitchell of Ohio.

Around the Year with "The Baptist"

Every week counts in the campaign of the current year; and every issue of THE BAPTIST counts in feeding the fires and stirring the waters and awakening the sleepers and arousing the sluggards, and aligning the questioners. Every week of delay in getting THE BAPTIST into Baptist homes means one week less of this year in which to enlist their interest and their cooperation for the New World Movement goal for 1922-1923. Every subscriber gets a full year, whenever he subscribes; but the sooner he begins to get THE BAPTIST, the sooner his heart will get on fire for Christ's work. Subscribers during August will go with us all the way around the year of blessing just ahead, including the Washington Convention in June, and the Boston B. Y. P. U. Convention in July.

Send for Extra Copies

Our next number will be of exceptional importance and value. It will be a "New Testament Number," full of meat and sweet to the souls of believers. See that your friends are supplied. We will send any number of extra copies on order, for ten cents each, as far as they last. Send today.

Look Us Over

Have you bought a new book since—well, when did you buy a new book? This issue of THE BAPTIST gives particular attention to books for Christian culture, service, and aspiration. We have tried to help mothers, teachers, and all folks who desire counsel concerning books which will build faith and character. Please take this issue seriously.

In the Family

Of course you can buy your books and Bibles at the department stores, or at other Bible houses: but since you are in a profit-sharing concern of your own, why not do business there? Any book printed anywhere—that's fit to sell—can be secured through our own Publication Society. Get the habit of ordering from one of your own branch houses. The list is given on the Book Review Page.

A Wise Type of Evangelism

Evangelist Harry O. Anderson of Berkeley, Calif., reports a recent revival campaign in Iowa where he made appeals for subscribers to THE BAPTIST. The result: "I enclose check for $20". THE BAPTIST will help new converts to grow in grace, and revived Christians to serve their Lord more diligently and intelligently. Make THE BAPTIST a factor in your evangelism and it in turn will promote your evangelism.

Eager? So Are We

One of our energetic Western state secretaries writes: "I am eager to see THE BAPTIST render increasing service for the denomination, and wish you well in your great responsibilities". Every new subscriber adds to those responsibilities; and yet every new subscriber enables us to render increasing service for the denomination. Let every Baptist do his best to break us down with responsibility and to open for us new doors of opportunity, by sending in a list of new subscribers.

Horace Cole, of Hutchinson, Kan., has been called to the pastorate of Calvary Church, Denver.

The summer attendance at the University of Chicago as far as computed to July 8 was 5,601, larger than for the same date last year.

The First Church, Denver, of which Dr. A. H. C. Morse is pastor, and Mr. Charles R. Brock an honored officer, gave more than one-sixth of the entire contributions from Colorado to the New World Movement last year, their gifts being $18,000.

Kansas Baptists gather for their annual assembly at Ottawa, August 1-10. Frank Herriott of Winfield is Camp Director. There are camps for boys and for girls, and a complete program for workers.

The pastors, their wives, and children are planning for an outing at Keuka College on the shore of Lake Keuka. More than 150 have registered. The limit is 200. The college conducts a summer school until August 12. Then comes the World Wide Guild House Party which closes August 21. The Pastors' Conference begins at night of the same date. Applications for room and board should be made to the president of the college.

Liquor with a prospective selling value of $6,000,000 was afloat off the Jersey coast on fifteen vessels bringing liquid supplies for the celebration of Independence Day, according to the New York Times. The unforeseen alertness of the federal officers interfered with the plans of the bootleggers and caused a heavy shrinkage in the estimated profits. Nevertheless, the $6,000,000 is indicative of the extent of the anarchy which defies law and derides the constitution in order to get drunk on July 4.

A conference of Southern Baptist leaders met with the conservation committee at Nashville, June 28, to consider plans for completing the 75,000,000 campaign. Optimism and practical unanimity marked the occasion. Dr. L. R. Scarborough was again commandeered for the office of general director during the fall months, with headquarters at Nashville. The work of the laymen's missionary movement was approved, and a stewardship campaign for October agreed on. The 1923 convention will be asked to create a large committee to formulate a program for the period following the close of the 75,000,000 campaign December 1, 1924.

The latest figures issued by the Federal Council of the Churches shows that the two leading non-Catholic bodies each outnumber the Roman Catholics in constituency. The figures are: Methodists, 22,171,959; Baptists, 21,938,700; Roman Catholics, 17,885,646. The editor of the Federal Council Year Book, in presenting these figures, comments on the lead of the Methodists over the Baptists as follows: "In any comparison between Methodist and Baptist figures, note should be taken of the fact that the Baptist figures are practically of date of January 1, 1921, while the Methodist figures were gathered at different dates throughout 1921, some of them being as late as January, 1922." We suggest that a uniform method of reporting these statistics would greatly add to the value of them.

The "Florida Witness" has our sympathy in the disaster which befell the printing plant recently. A fire in the building occupied by the Witness resulted in heavy losses largely by water, and forced the immediate removal of the plant to other quarters.

The Northfield Conference, July 31 to Aug. 14, includes as speakers Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, Rev. J. W. G. Ward, Dr. A. T. Clay, Rev. C. A. Abel of New Guinea; and from England Dr. F. C. Spurr, Dr. J. D. Jones, and Dr. J. Stuart Holden. Other conferences follow to Sept. 9.

The Missionary Training School at Chicago will remain in the Vernon Avenue building another year, the Negroes having asked to be relieved for the present of their obligations assumed in taking over the property for a Negro training school. The story in a Chicago daily last week of a proposed merger of Baptists and Methodists in the use of the building as a training school for Negroes is declared by members of the Training School Committee of the Woman's Home Board, to be entirely unauthorized.

A curious consequence of the existing restriction on immigration is that ships bearing emigrants from Europe time their journey to arrive as near as possible to the very beginning of the calendar month, making a grand rush for Ellis Island in order to land their human cargo before the quota for the new month is filled. Sometimes the transportation companies not only have to carry back a part of their load but also pay a fine to the government for each passenger brought in over the quota. Ten ships landed July 1, one of which brought 1,069 Italians. A Greek steamer from Piraeus a few days later brought 1,000 Greeks, of whom a large number were turned back.

The Art of Reviewing Books

BOOK lovers and especially book reviewers will find of interest a four-page symposium in the Christian Register (July 13) in which book publishers answer the two questions: "What is your purpose in sending out books for review?" and "What, in your opinion, constitutes an ideal book review?" One of the most pointed answers is from the Century Company:

"Our idea is that to a people interested in the things of life above the ground, even if ever so slightly above, the publication of a book is a news event—a tremendous news event if the book is tremendous, a paltry news event if the book is paltry. Most publishers believe that all of their books are above the paltry and they hope that some of them are tremendous. They send out review copies to the periodical press in the hope that competent reviewers will discover the real news events among books and tell readers about them, and that as many as possible of those who read the reviews will buy the books, so that worth-while authors may continue writing and their publishers may continue publishing.

"The only book review worth writing or printing is one that is first of all interesting, for if it has little interest it will have almost no readers. There are so many interesting things to read that a dull thing is not in the race at all. If a review is intrinsically interesting, it is the more nearly ideal the more accurately it conveys the content and manner of the book reviewed."

Dr. Dakin Goes to Brooklyn

Dr. E. LeRoy Dakin, pastor of First Church, Charleston, W. Va., has accepted the invitation to become pastor of Brooklyn Temple, in succession to Dr. J. C. Massee, and will assume the office on October 1.

A Nova Scotian by birth, heir of a rich tradition of culture and spiritual life from preacher and teacher ancestors, Mr. Dakin came from Acadia University, after a pastorate of four years in Victoria, B. C., to the University of Chicago for six years of research, taking his Doctor's degree in the field of religious education.

Since his graduation, during pastorates at Logansport, Ind., and Charleston, W. Va., he has been prominent in international Sunday-school work, and was elected to membership of the new executive committee of the Sunday School Council at Kansas City.

As a leader in work among young people Dr. Dakin has also proved his efficiency, as president of the Indiana Summer Assembly and as chairman of the Young People's Commission of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The church at Charleston has received 1,270 members during his pastorate of four years, of whom more than 900 came for baptism.

Dr. Dakin enters the larger field of ministry in the New York area at 43, in the prime of his powers and capable of contributing largely to the spiritual forces in that great city seeking to redeem and serve and comfort a restless people in a restless age.

Canadian to Moody Church

Moody Church, Chicago (founded by D. L. Moody in 1859) is to have a new pastor, Rev. P. W. Philpott, who succeeds Paul Rader, beginning September 1. Mr. Philpott is a Canadian, and has been for twenty-seven years pastor of the Gospel Tabernacle at Hamilton, Ont.

Mr. Philpott preached one Sunday evening recently to an audience of 4,000 people at Moody Church, following his acceptance of its call. His theme was "Prevailing Prayer," from the story of Jacob at Peniel. The new pastor has a splendid voice and knows how to control it; he has a keen mind and knows how to use it; he has a sympathetic nature and knows how to reveal it; he has a positive gospel and knows how to tell it. Chicago will have a real accession to its evangelical ministry in this earnest and forceful preacher of the grace of God in Christ.

A Great Negro Poet

Claude McKay, the author of the exquisite poem entitled "Poetry," which we print on the cover page, was born in the British West Indies but came to this country at an early age. A reviewer in the Bookman (to whose columns we are indebted for the verse) says of him, that he is "without doubt the most talented and versatile of the new school of imaginative emotional Negro poets. . . . Mr. McKay is not a great Negro poet—he is a great poet!"

In his "Poetry" he expresses the conflict so often felt, the danger so often faced, between the claims of art and the claims of heart: between the desire to achieve skill in artifice and the passion to attain power in helpful ministry. The verse is from "Harlem Shadows" (Harcourt, Brace and Company).

The Baptist

"The Bridge"

AMERICA lost a gifted and promising author in the death last April of Miss Marjorie L. C. Pickthall, born in London, but an early immigrant to Canada and educated in Toronto schools. During her girlhood days she spent some time on an island in Lake Ontario, and years later she drew upon those scenes and experiences for the material setting of her greatest story.

Miss Pickthall was in England throughout the war, and worked at farm and garden work in Wiltshire. In 1916 she wrote her first book, "Little Hearts", and in the years 1918-1920 she completed the beautiful and powerful story, "The Bridge." This, her last work, was published by the Century Company last winter. Its exquisite portrayal of the mighty and mysterious forces of nature, Sand and Mist and Snow, is the more remarkable in that the book was written so far from and so long after her personal contact with Toronto Island, chief scene of the story. The moral purity and spiritual passion of the book are not the least of its high qualities.

The story is that of a self-sufficient business man who built a bridge, and in order to increase his profits a few thousands, scamped the foundations. The bridge fell, and among the four men killed was his own brother. He concealed all evidences of his responsibility for the disaster, refused to admit, either to himself or to his brother's widow, any blame, and in his effort to forget the whole thing he fled away to a lonely island in the lake. Through the quiet of summer, through the driving sands and blinding fogs and pitiless snows that followed he fought his fight against conscience and love and God—to come at last through bitter agony and pain and spiritual travail, to the place of penitence and sorrowful contrition. In that hour, when he faced his sin and assumed responsibility for his guilt, the peace and healing that he had not known became his.

"I measured and cheated and calculated. And four lives paid for what I did. And one of those men I killed—by one dishonesty common as the dirt it is, and surely as if I'd blown his brains out with a gun—was Gordon, my brother." . . . "Maclear waited. But while he waited, a peace like that of the snow, a surrender like that of the earth under the fulfilling frost, possessed him. At the moment when he had bound himself to his own sin, he knew freedom. At the moment when he accepted his own responsibility he knew release."

In that line is the supreme lesson of the book, and its powerful message to the human soul: "At the moment when he had bound himself to his own sin, he knew freedom." When he makes his great disclosure, his great confession, Sombra, his wife, asks, "And that poor lady that day on the beach,—she knew?" "She knew. She came to forgive me. . . . I didn't want forgiveness then. Some day, perhaps, I'll dare to ask for it again,—on my knees."

If one can but open his soul to the deep and passionate appeal of this book, it will press upon him the truth that guilt cannot be dealt with by evasion or elusion, by ignoring or denying the fact of it: but only by humble confession of it and penitential prayer for forgiveness. The only possible alternative of that course is the permanent incorporation into the moral life of the poison and disease which guilt involves, hurting the soul with an awful hurt and stripping it of all hope of true peace with God.

There is a significance not always recognized, in the words of Jesus recorded by Luke: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." For repentance is not merely a desirable exercise of the soul, designed to exhilarate the moral nature and to take off the chill of estrangement from God. Repentance is the inescapable condition and prerequisite of spiritual self-respect and of conscious enjoyment of the favor of him with whom we have to do. "Forgiven men may dwell with God", wrote Alexander Maclaren, "and they who do are blest". But forgiveness is bestowed, not on fugitives or Pharisees, but on penitents sobbing, "Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord."

In the personal experience of the soul the lesson of "The Bridge" is of prime importance. To belittle our sin, to forget our sin, to juggle with hair-splitting questions as to divided responsibility for our sin: all these processes do but serve to hurt our own souls and to delay, if they do not completely forbid, our possession of that inner peace without which life is intolerable. "Repentance is a great art, and to be practiced daily", says Jeremy Taylor. The moral reactions of unconfessed sin work terrific havoc on the soul and may ultimately wreck it beyond remedy.

A community may evade its responsibility and protest its innocence in the face of obvious facts, and take up into its corporate life a record of guilt unconfessed and unrepented of. Such a process invites moral deterioration and even disaster for that community. The moral reaction upon its self-respect, its reverence for law, its free communion with the moral order of the world, is fraught with loss and permanent hurt. Herrin, indifferent to the horror and crime of massacre, and resolved to protect the murderers, is committing a further sin, a sin against the community, a sin against the souls of the people, when that guilt is evaded, denied, for which there should be bitter penitence and restitution.

Disastrous also in its far-reaching consequences is the effect upon a nation when it faces its sin with a cry of innocence; when it evades, eludes, ignores, denies, its guilt, and refuses itself the stern but wholesome discipline of confession and penitential acceptance of moral responsibility.

There is no power of throne or parliament or mandate which can set aside the inexorable law of God, that "except ye repent, ye shall perish." Nations which commit crimes against human society and against human liberty, take up into their national life and spirit a virus of guilt which must ultimately destroy them and bring them under the judgment of a righteous God. Guilt evaded or denied is a guilt that dooms.

"The Bridge" is a commentary, possessing deep insight, into those lines of the Penitential Psalm which it is good for every Christian to know and daily to pray:

"I acknowledge my transgression. . . blot out all mine iniquities. . . restore unto me the joy of thy salvation. . . and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness. . ."

"The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit:
A broken and a contrite heart, O God,
Thou wilt not despise."

Respectable Citizens

THE Telegram Codzienny (New York Polish Journal) says of prohibition, "Now our most respectable citizens hide in corners to defy the constitution." Why does the editor of the Telegram Codzienny call these citizens "respectable"? Does the editor himself respect citizens who "defy the constitution"? Such citizens are not respectable, but disreputable. The constitution is the foundation of American citizenship. "Respectable citizens"; "defy the constitution": these are mutually exclusive terms.

Doubtful Dichotomy

THE Canadian Baptist (July 13) in quoting from two Baptist papers their comments on the Indianapolis Convention, says: "The Northern Baptist Convention has two denominational papers, both edited with ability." We hasten to say that we cannot be blamed for the obvious and embarrassing ignorance of our Canadian neighbor as to the existence of still other Baptist papers in our territory. The reference to our editorial ability we cannot of course dispute! However, we are concerned to find ourselves paralleled side by side with the other paper referred to, under the following headings: "Watchman-Examiner (Fundamentalist)" and "THE BAPTIST (Liberal)."

Since Dr. Laws avows himself a primeval fundamentalist and coiner of the title, we cannot question that classification, but when did we ever boast of a desire to be called "liberal"? As the official organ of all the Baptists of the Northern Baptist Convention, we see neither the necessity nor the propriety of our wearing the label of any particular group. We belong to all the Baptists. We are free in Christ to seek and declare and follow his truth as he reveals it to us, but we disclaim the party label "Liberal" as a process of division inadequate and misleading.

Will American Women Forget?

THE ineradicable antagonism of the liquor traffic to the welfare of womanhood is strikingly revealed in a social survey of the city of Columbus, Ohio, reported by R. D. McKenzie in the American Journal of Sociology for May. He made a comparative study by precincts of the votes cast on three issues in the year 1917: Prohibition, woman suffrage, and the non-employment of females in places where liquor was sold. The percentage of votes cast for each proposal was denoted by shaded maps. "The similarity of shading of the various sections of the city in all three of these maps is significant. The local areas that supported prohibition invariably supported woman suffrage to approximately the same degree. The areas surrounding the central business section of the city stand out conspicuously as opposed to both prohibition and woman suffrage and in favor of the employment of women in liquor shops; while the eastern, western, and northern extremities of the city—the three leading residential areas—are strong supporters of the first two issues and opposers of the third issue. Not only did the Columbus vote on prohibition for consecutive years show almost precisely the same results, as far as local segregation of opinion is concerned, but the votes on the other subjects, more or less kindred, show almost identical distribution of supporters and opposers."

It is of course conceded that many supporters of prohibition were conscientiously opposed to woman suffrage, so that not every anti-woman-suffragist is to be counted an anti-prohibitionist; but on the other hand it is beyond dispute that the nineteenth amendment was carried against the practically solid opposition of the liquor forces. The foes of prohibition were the foes of woman suffrage and the foes also of all measures seeking to exclude women from the liquor trade.

Every woman who appreciates her newly-acquired prerogatives of citizenship should register and use her vote and her influence this year in the primaries and in the November elections against her ancient and sleepless enemy, the traffic in drink.

Interrupting the New Testament

THE "Word and Way," from whose columns we quoted at length in a recent issue in the review, "As Others See Us," has this startling paragraph:

"If our Fundamentalist brethren of the Northern Baptist Convention had offered as their resolution the adoption of the New Testament as a rule of faith and practice among Baptists and the New Hampshire Confession of faith as the Baptist interruption of the same, perhaps they would have forestalled any opposition to their move."

We have heard many and various comments on the historic New Hampshire Confession; but we have never heard the like of this! Since the "Word and Way" has been asking us some pertinent questions, we return the courtesy by rising to inquire if the fundamentalists consider it scriptural to "interrupt the New Testament," even with the New Hampshire Confession?

New Thought and New Opportunities in China

An interview with John R. Mott

Reported by HOWARD B. GROSE, Editor of Missions

DR. JOHN R. MOTT, who recently returned from his fifth journey to the Far East—not counting the one which during the war took him twice across Siberia—regards this last mission as probably the most timely and fruitful in results of all. One needs to reinterpret America to every nation, he says, for no country that he visited understands us. And we need to reinterpret the Far East to other nations. The changes that have taken place there even in the last two or three years are stupendous not only economically but socially and politically as well.

A Welter of Conflicting Ideas and Ideals

Intellectually it is certainly a new world. This takes on a very large content to those who have formerly been thrown much with the youth. The new thought movement is surging in the brains of the professors and students of China. There is a welter of conflicting ideas and ideals occupying their minds and hearts, a spirit of inquiry the like of which Dr. Mott has never found in any one country. Along with it is the purpose to revalue everything—a purpose stimulating and hopeful but with its alarming aspects. There is no tradition or social sanction or practice past or present which is too sacred or binding for them to question and discard if they cannot prove its personal and social efficiency. There has been nothing like it intensively or extensively since the Renaissance in Europe; and this transcends that in the number of people involved and in the greater variety of mental interests touched and exhibited. He says it is the most interesting, quickening and inspiring spectacle he has ever witnessed in the way of mental awakening, hunger, courage and seriousness. It makes possible almost anything from the point of view of a propaganda which knows where it wants to go and is sure of its message. It presents a colossal problem to the missionaries and to the Chinese church, but also presents the greatest opportunity we are likely to have in our day.

On Dr. Mott's visit in 1896, the so-called scholars of China were like a stone wall. In no place could we find a rift. We could give out pamphlets to the students as they streamed along the streets from their examinations, but to get inside the schools to present the claims of Jesus Christ was impossible. Now there is an openness, an active spirit of inquiry, and a determination to use any method to get at reality. Would that the missionary forces far and near might recognize this opportunity. It is passing. It sweeps on like a river. These conditions will not continue for many years.

Christ Will Satisfy

This gives the missionary movement a chance to present a new apologetic. It is the chance of our lives to satisfy this intellectual hunger and thirst, to have thousands of forums and study centers all over China. It is a way to Christ, because these people are after reality and they are not going to find it in new thought. If we can introduce Christ to them on that path he will have the chance to satisfy them. There is a social passion and concern characterizing this movement which gives Christianity a marvelous opportunity, because it is the only religion which furnishes a social as well as a religious dynamic.

In the late eighties the missionaries and the home churches had a great chance in Japan, though not as great as the new thought movement today in China. Then we missed our opportunity in Japan. It is here now in China. The government gave us great halls, and sometimes special pavilions were erected. Dr. Mott had hitherto known nothing like the present opportunities to meet the people collectively and individually. The president sent for him not to pay a compliment but to ask questions. Within three minutes they were in the heart of the gospel. The ex-president was equally responsive on the religious question. He had opportunities also to meet the military governors and members of their cabinets, and every time he turned the conversation to Jesus Christ and was never repulsed.

Student Federation Conference

Referring to the World's Christian Student Federation Conference at Peking, Dr. Mott says that in his judgment no gathering held anywhere in the world has done more to knit together the leaders of tomorrow in the East and West than this. The 550 delegates came from all parts of the world, representing thirty-two countries, but it was pre-eminently an Asiatic gathering. The Indian delegation of eleven was most in evidence, but it was an interesting fact that a Negro, who came from our theological school in Atlanta, was more in demand for addresses than any other man. Unity was the great note of the conference, and nothing less than the Spirit of God could have brought the different peoples together in such understanding, agreement and fellowship—British and Indians, Americans and Filipinos, Chinese and Japanese, Japanese and Koreans. In Christ all found a wondrous oneness. As for the anti-Christian movement, concerning which exaggerated reports were spread abroad, Dr. Mott believes it only accentuated the timeliness of the world union of Christian students coming to China to proclaim the message of Christ and the implication of his message in national as well as individual life.

The Shanghai Christian Conference

Speaking of the Shanghai Christian Conference, which had about 1200 delegates, nearly half of them Chinese, he said the impressive thing was the character of the Chinese leadership in the discussions and the conduct of the conference. It was plain that the Chinese have come into their own in the churches and in the organized religious life. Men with such ideals and ability can be trusted with the responsibilities of the work, and he came away highly reassured.

The Japanese Christian Conference had much shorter time for presentation, and the delegates were limited to 220, three-fifths of whom were Japanese and two-fifths missionaries. The main question was how to convert the Federation of Missions and the Federation of Churches, both of many years standing, into an organization that could speak with united voice. A Council of One Hundred was decided upon, and a committee on organization appointed to formulate a plan and submit it to the missions and churches during the coming year. The outcome will show whether the desired reorganization is practical.

Some New Books for the Church Library

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

ONE of the outstanding features of the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis was the interest manifested in the missionary reading contest. The two national women's societies presented five travelling libraries to the district making the best showing, and this proved to be the South Pacific District.

A group of books has recently come to the editorial table which it will pay any church to add to its missionary library. Every one of them will count on the supplementary list of books given in addition to the required list. Every one of them is a good appetizer to get folks started on the rewarding path of missionary reading.

A Contest

How is your missionary library kept up to date? What system do you follow in the purchase of new books?

For the best answer received in reply to these two questions I will send one of the books noticed as a prize. Send the letter to Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, 144 Dartmouth St., Rochester, N. Y.

"The Bells of the Blue Pagoda"—Cochran (Westminster Press), a fascinating story of Chinese life, has plenty of local color, is charmingly written, tells a gripping story, clearly reveals the power of the ministry of the medical missionary.

"The Wonders of Missions"—Mason (G. H. Doran): History has found a new appeal to the masses in the retelling of history by H. G. Wells and Hendrik Van Loon. Mrs. Mason succeeds in making her corner of history glow with the same pigments that mark these larger canvasses. With rare skill the writer of "The Lily of France" has chosen her material, sketched in her background and marshalled her personages so that the picture of the expansion of Christianity through the centuries stands lucid and splendid before us. The very titles of the chapters paint a picture: The Vanguard, Along Livingstone's Trail, The Southern Cross, The Splendid Adventurous Thirties, High Lights Down the Decades. Here are the stories of Carey and Judson and Morrison; of Goodell and Hamlin; of Moffat and Livingstone and the Collards and Mary Slessor; here the adventures of John Scudder and Peter Parker and of Clara Swain; here are told the old, old stories of the Island World; of John Williams, and George Gordon, of John G. Paton and James Chalmers and Titus Coan. One lays the book down with a fresh realization of the never-ending roll call of faith. One gets continual re-enforcement of faith and hope and love in the reading of these stories and perceives again the motion of an Almighty Arm outstretched for our redemption.

"Jungle Tales"—Musser (Geo. H. Doran). Here are red-blooded stories of missionary adventure, stories of tiger and leopard hunts, of rescued slaves, of fords through rivers alive with crocodiles, and running all through the moving narrative is a passion for Christ and for souls, and a belief in the gospel as the power to regenerate both individuals and society.

"The Book of Missionary Heroes"—Basil Mathews (Geo. H. Doran). A famous war correspondent has lent his pen to the telling, con amore, these stories of missionary heroism. Mrs. Mason's book, already referred to, is primarily the story of expanding Christianity. Mr. Mathews' book is primarily the story of certain great biographies that illustrate missionary heroism. One book supplements the other. These brief biographical sketches are instinct with life; they are the stuff out of which inspiration is made. We have here St. Paul, Raymond Hull, St. Francis of Assisi, Papeiha, Kapiolani, Elikana, Bishop Patterson, a South Sea Samaritan (Ruatoa), Khama, Mackay and many another name of famous or obscure bearers of the Torch of Life. One cannot commend too highly this book.

"Old Trails and New Borders"—Steiner (Revell). Here is a book on the immigrant, that will make you think. Professor Steiner himself, once an immigrant, took a remarkable tour to the lands that the immigrants come from, and he tells us what he saw. One cannot but be a Beware! Poison!

MRS. GENE STRATTON PORTER, whose "Limerlost" books have revealed a new world of life and beauty and wonder to the young people who have been wise enough to read them, has devoted her pen to the indictment of coarseness and villenness in current popular literature—if such it can be called. We earnestly ask fathers and mothers and teachers who read these words, to make a survey of the magazines and books which come into the home or the class room, and to put a ban upon all that carry uncleanness and lawlessness into the hearts of our boys and girls. Mrs. Porter writes:

"Personally it is difficult for me to understand why indecencies that would not be permitted in life, and characters that would not be admitted into a home or a family circle in person on any consideration, should be allowed to come there between the covers of a book. Why should men and women be allowed to scatter broadcast on the pages of a book such matter as the federal authorities would not allow for a minute on the pages of a letter? . . . No statistics are available to prove how many girls and boys have formed wrong conceptions of life and the real purposes of living through having had books filled with prurient descriptions and suggestive and intimate descriptions of men and women living illegally and immorally.

"If I do not want my daughter to carry a flask, smoke cigarettes, appear in public half-clothed, and carry on illicit love affairs, then I should not put into her hands books, magazines or newspapers filled with descriptions of people who live such lives. There is a certain amount of authority that goes with matter which someone has thought enough of to set it in type and bind between the covers of a book. Printed matter has its influence even in magazine and newspaper form, and while the world has been going mad with unbridled sensualism, immodest dress, and risqué dances in some quarters, it has gone equally far in others by putting these things into print. I could name half a dozen publications that shock my old-fashioned soul almost to paralysis."

better Christian and a more intelligent American for reading this book.

"The Cross and the Reconstruction of the World"—Saunders (Revell). This is a book for the pastor or the thoughtful layman. Mr. Saunders, for twenty years a Southern Baptist missionary in Canton, has thought deeply over world problems. He sees them all in the light of the cross. The lesson enforced in these spirited chapters is that only so far as our endeavors find their inspiration in the cross are they of permanent value in meeting the needs of the non-Christian world.

"In the Shadow of the Wall"—Gunn (The Christopher Publishing House, Boston). This is a book written by one of our devoted Baptist women whose high privilege it was to labor for twenty years within the shadow of prison walls, as the wife of Chaplain Gunn of Iowa. There are many wonderful stories of penitence and renewal, many of answered prayer. The book cannot but increase one's belief in the power of the gospel to save and renew.

"History of the Japanese People"—Brinkley (Doran). An authoritative brief history of the Japanese people, by an American who became a professor in the Imperial University in 1867, and later became foreign adviser to the Japanese government. He married a Japanese wife, and identified his life with that of the Japanese. The book is the life work of this man, splendidly equipped by length of service and intimate contact, to write the story of the Japanese people. Captain Brinkley was assisted in the preparation of the book by Baron Kikuchi, former president of the Imperial University at Kyoto. The book is generously illustrated by 150 wood engravings by Japanese artists, and with numerous half tones and maps. It is an invaluable reference book.

By a Chinese Patriot

"China Awakened"—Tyan (MacMillan). Dr. Tyan, a Chinese publicist of distinction, assisted China in the presentation of its case before the Washington Conference. Most of our books about China have been written by foreigners. This is written by a Chinese patriot. Dr. Tyan asks the question, "Is the Chinese republic worth helping?" And answers it by setting forth a multitude of significant facts. The reading of this interesting and informing book cannot fail to create a body of American opinion which will help us to deal justly with China.

"Lives of Great Missionaries, for Young People"—Serrell (Revell). Still another volume of missionary biography, this time designed especially for use among young people. These brief sketches cover some of the same ground covered by Mrs. Mason and Mr. Mathews, but there is additional material that will prove helpful. The sketch of Hudson Taylor is especially rich in facts illustrating the power of prayer.

"Kanamori's Life Story" (Sunday School Times.)

This moving narrative tells the tale of how a great Christian had his faith wrecked by destructive criticism, how after years of darkness he recovered it again, and how God made him a great power for Christ. Every one ought to read this story.

The Situation in Cuba

By CHARLES S. DETWEILER

IT is scarcely two years ago that Cuba was rated in per capita wealth the richest country on earth. Then it was said that the island was likely to sink in the sea under the weight of gold accruing from its abundant cane fields. Suddenly, and yet not unexpectedly for sober-minded people, the crash came, when the bottom dropped out of the sugar-market. The richest Spaniard on the island committed suicide. Three banks, having branches all over Cuba, failed; and the government as well as the sugar industry was caught by the slump and seriously embarrassed for lack of funds. Then came a general election, and a new president for Cuba. General Crowder, first sent down from Washington to see that proper election laws should be passed and enforced, and then retained as the personal representative of our president, has been acting as mentor to President Zayas. No one seems to question his personal fitness nor the value of the advice he has given, but the press of Cuba is uneasy over his long retention in Havana. It savors too much of American control of Cuban affairs.
